G. O. P. Leaders Meet in Capital For Party Rally

Committeemen to Meet Tomorrow to Call Convention.

Members Cautious On Nominee Choice

Confidence Is Expressed Any Republican Can Beat Roosevelt.

Expressing enthusiasm over their prospects for success in electing a President next year, members of the Republican National Committee yesterday began to assemble in Washington for a meeting tomorrow to issue a call for the party's national convention.

Although most of the committeemen were cautious in expressing preferences for the Republican Presidential nomination, they professed no mental reservations to the contention that "any Republican" can defeat President Roosevelt next year.

The committee's meeting promises to be rather dull, unless a controversy starts over apportionment of delegates to the next convention. Leaders were making efforts yesterday to reconcile committeemen whose States went Democratic in 1932 to the loss of their usual "bonus" delegates, as would happen if the convention rules were followed and as Chairman Henry P. Fletcher has proposed.

Contest for Convention

There is a contest over selection of a convention city, but this has not aroused any feeling. Chicago, Cleveland and Kansas City are the chief contenders. Friends of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, favor Kansas City, while some of those favorably inclined to Col. Frank Knox, Chicago, publisher, favor that city.

Cleveland's advocates are basing their case on the plea that the Republicans should meet in "neutral territory" and there was some reason to believe last night that this view was being taken by some of the leaders. The matter was still in doubt, however, with Cleveland and Chicago in the lead. Each of the contending cities offered $150,000, approximately the expenses of the convention.

Representatives of Atlantic City and Pittsburgh are expected to lay offers before the national committee tomorrow.

The committee, in addition to selecting the convention city, will fix the date for the meeting and will prescribe the apportionment of delegates. Under the party rules as adopted by past conventions, each State is entitled to twice the number of representatives it has in House and Senate, plus a "bonus" if it gave a majority to the Republican Presidential candidate in the previous election.

The bonus consists of three additional delegates at large to each State carried by the Republican Presidential candidate in the previous election, plus an extra delegate from each Congressional district that in such election cast at least 10,000 Republican votes. This system was devised some years ago to diminish the influence of the almost wholly Democratic Southern States in Republican conventions.

In the 1928 election, 40 States went Republican, so that many enjoyed the "bonus," resulting in a convention of 1,145 delegates. But in 1932 only six States went Republican—Connecticut, Delaware, Maine, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania and Vermont. Thus, 34 States enjoying the bonus in 1932 would, under the rule, lose it next year.

Advice of Counsel.

On the advice of the party's general counsel, John Hamilton, Chairman Fletcher has taken the stand that the national committeeman has no authority to change the basis of apportionment prescribed by the party's convention and he has accordingly drafted the call for a convention. But some of the States losing delegates believe that the apportionment for the 1932 convention should be used again. Unless settled over the week-end, this may lead to a fight within the committee tomorrow.

Charles D. Hilles, New York committeeman, was one favoring the use of the 1932 basis. He contends that the last election was "not a fair test" and should be "charged off as a loss due to the depression."

The Republican committeemen appeared disturbed over two aspects of the coming campaign. One was what they should do about a farm relief plank and the other was the effect on the outcome of the Townsend old-age pension drive. The Townsend forces, as a third party, is was generally believed, would do more harm to the Democrats than to the Republicans. But it was clear that some of the Republican leaders are uneasy over this issue.

Although several groups of Republicans are at work on tentative farm planks, it was asserted that nothing definitely can be decided until the Supreme Court acts on the processing taxes. Likewise, it was indicated that the Republicans want

Business Gains All Along Line, U. S. Data Show

Sales of Department Stores Here Are 7.4 Per Cent Above Last Year.

Steady gains by all lines of business from Christmas shopping to heavy industry, spread evenly throughout the Nation, is the picture painted by the Commerce Department's weekly Business Survey, released yesterday for the seven-day period ended December 11.

In Washington, department store sales leaped ahead for a gain of 34.4 per cent over last week and of 7.4 per cent over the corresponding week of last year. Clothing, toilet articles and household furniture and furnishings accounted for most of the increase. Building permits for the week jumped 126.3 per cent over last week and 42.8 per cent over the 1934 week, while registers at the Smithsonian Institution clocked a thousand more visitors than last year.

In heavy industry over the Nation, automobile and steel production scored the widest advances, although machinery sales improved. Steel consumption hovered around previous high records and rayon shipments are 26 per cent ahead of last year's totals for the first 11 months.

Electric power output spurted forward to a new high record, all geographic areas showing gains over last year and the national gain amounting to a 13 per cent increase over 1934. Wholesale commodities were steady, with only minor fluctuations in the most sensitive lines, affording a stable foundation for the business advance.

The adjusted index for department store sales over the Nation jumped three points in November to 80 per cent of the 1923-35 average, a gain over 1934 of 10 per cent, and for the first 11 months in both years, of 5 per cent.

A representative group of railroads reported their car loadings had advanced sharply for the week ended December 7 over the holiday slump of the previous week, while the Federal Reserve Board's adjusted index showed that the expected seasonal decline from October to November was less than usual—the adjusted index advancing two points to 66 per cent of the 1923-25 average.

Favorable reports from 30 out of 33 cities, more than made up for the three sour spots, New York, Houston and Dallas. Boston reported

Townsendites Bolt Pleases Both Parties

Democrats, Republicans View Separation as Dooming Plan.

Leaders Feared Spread of Pension Bloc in Own Ranks.

By Robert C. Albright.

Cheered by the "third party" announcement of Dr. Francis W. Townsend, Democratic and Republican leaders at the Capitol yesterday welcomed the development as the first definite break in the gloom that has pervaded both old line headquarters since the vision of $200-a-month pensions was held out as a potent lure to the voters.

Not concealing their concern at the spread of Townsend sentiment, major party regulars nevertheless took the view that a third party movement can be much more effectively combated than an infiltration of Townsendites into their ranks. These leaders believe the Townsend announcement will tend to consolidate old line strength, and free regular candidates from the threat of a Townsend commitment.

Among the strong party regulars taking this stand was Representative James P. Buchanan, of Texas, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, who yesterday raised an emphatic voice in denunciation of the "dream" with which he said the California doctor is misleading his followers.

First to Take Stand.

The outspoken Appropriations Committee chairman was the first leader of his party to state definitely he will vote "No" in the poll of congressional sentiment being conducted by the Townsendites preliminary to injecting their old-age pension program as an issue in the coming session.

It was learned, however, that Representative Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio, chairman of the Republican congressional campaign committee, has written Old Age Revolving Pensions, Ltd., that he must vote "no" if the new Townsend bill contains the tax proposed in the McGroarty measure put forward last session.

In the face of these statements, Dr. Townsend still insisted he has yet to receive any "unfavorable" responses to his congressional poll. He said between "35 and 40" House members already have voted "yes," adding that he soon will broaden the poll to include the 96 members of the Senate.

Bill May Be Revised.

Townsend disclosed his new bill may be "substantially revised" at a conference he will call shortly before Congress convenes, but declined to say in what particulars. At this conference, he said, it will be determined what member of the House will introduce the new bill.

Dr. Townsend scorned old line party aid, insisting his group is now in a position to "dictate."

"If they won't desert their own parties, we don't want them," he said. "We are through with the two regular parties, unless they show a sudden and immediate change of heart."

Making clear that he is speaking only for himself, Representative Buchanan discounted the prospects of Townsendites making any material headway in legislation this session, and took the view they have damaged their chances at the polls next election by organizing along third party lines. Should the plan by some quirk be enacted, he said, it would "bankrupt the Nation."

Buchanan, like every other member of the House, has been deluged with letters from Townsend clubs and sympathizers in his own district.

Plans Unworkable.

"In each case, I am replying that the doctor's plan is entirely unworkable, and has no chance of approval by Congress," he said.

"I am pointing out that it would place an unbearable burden on business and industry, insufferably injure the consumer, and in the end, 'kill the goose that lays the golden egg'."

Buchanan said the prices of commodities would soar beyond reach of the ordinary salaried man, if an effort were made to carry out the

Man Arrested on 13th Hangs Self in Cell 13

Friday the thirteenth was so unlucky for Davis B. Baldwin, 34, of Marshallville, Ga., that he killed himself.

Baldwin was arrested Friday by Private L. McKinney, of the First Precinct, for being drunk in Union Station.

McKinney took him to the precinct station and put him in cell No. 13.

Several hours later, Baldwin's despondency became so intolerable that he made a noose of his shirt and hanged himself from the cell bars. Private B. G. Lewis found Baldwin while he was making a routine inspection of prisoners.

Baldwin's cellmate slept during the self-execution.

Entire County Brought to Halt By Meningitis

30,000 Residents Under Quarantine Orders in Oklahoma.

By the United Press.

Hobart, Okla., Dec. 14.—Virtually every activity of the 30,000 residents of Kiowa County was governed by a doctor's prescription tonight as a mass quarantine was imposed by State authorities in an effort to halt an epidemic of spinal meningitis.

Two additional cases of the disease, which brings sudden death, were found today, one at Cold Springs and one at Snyder. This brought to nine the number of known cases.

Physicians have diagnosed positively one of the ten fatal cases in the county during the last three weeks as spinal meningitis. They attribute the nine other deaths to this malady.

To halt the epidemic, Dr. C. M. Pearce, State health officer, ordered the mass quarantine, medical science's most drastic weapon.

As a result of the stringent rules, Hobart and other Kiowa County towns resembled deserted villages. No more than three persons could congregate at one place within the county. Only drug and grocery stores and establishments rendering essential services were open. These were manned by skeleton staffs and their activities restricted in such manner as to prevent assembly of more than three persons.

One had to have a doctor's prescription to buy a gallon of gasoline. The ban on gasoline was designed to cut down traffic. Through transit was not hindered and buses and trains operated on regular schedules.

Worshippers will have to be content Sunday in hearing sermons over the radio. All churches have been closed. The town's only daily newspaper, The Democrat-Chief, suspended publication for duration of the quarantine.

Merchants gave health authorities full co-operation. The quarantine stalemated a thriving Christmas buying rush.

Dr. Pearce conferred with Dr. J. L. Adams, Kiowa County health officer, and other authorities this afternoon. They discussed whether the north end of the county, in-

Drive Started For Congress Action in Fire

District Heads Support Roosevelt Plan for Unified Control.

Would Give City Rule of All U. S. Buildings; Bills Planned.

Congressional action to require inspection of Federal buildings by the fire department seemed likely yesterday as the District Commissioners approved the new precautions.

Anxious to prevent another fire comparable to Friday's disastrous blaze in the new Post Office Department Building, the Commissioners informally indorsed suggestions of President Roosevelt for inspection of Government structures by the local fire department rather than by Federal authorities.

In addition, the Commissioners indicated they would like to be given jurisdiction over safety inspection of elevators in Federal buildings.

Hazen Urges Action.

Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, who has immediate supervision over the fire department, emphasized he believed the first move for the transfer of jurisdiction should be made by Federal officials.

Both Hazen and Commissioner George E. Allen, while eager to hasten expert and adequate inspection, were known to feel the salaries of additional personnel should be paid by Uncle Sam through an increase in the District appropriation.

Calvin G. Lauber, fire marshal, pointed out 50 additional inspectors would be needed. The Commissioners, it was made plain, would oppose transfer to the District rolls of any Federal employes now charged with such inspections because they want only well-trained men.

Indications were Hazen would inquire of the White House about the issue within a few days if necessary.

Jenckes Plans Bill.

Representative Virginia Jenckes (Democrat), Indiana, announced she would introduce a bill to give the fire department broad authority over Federal property unless the measure should originate from another source.

Corrective legislation was regarded as certain by Chairman John J. O'Connor, House Rules Committee.

O'Connor voiced astonishment that governmental files, which figured in Friday's fire, were "apparently so carelessly handled."

Vernon West, assistant corporation counsel, said special legislation would be unnecessary should a Cabinet officer or other departmental official ask District authorities to inspect Federal buildings.

A law would be required, however, he explained, to permit prosecution in case nothing should be done to improve conditions where necessary after inspection.

It became increasingly apparent that Congress would be asked to provide funds for the purchase of additional gas masks for Washington firemen.

There was such a shortage of masks at the Post Office Department fire that 40 men were over-

Pressing of Peace Bid On Selassie Heightens British Public Revolt

Feeling Rises at News of Hoare Step to Have Plan Accepted.

Briton and Hitler Discuss Arms Pact

Ending of War Before Talk of Terms Held Geneva's Aim.

The Situation Abroad.

British indignation over concessions made to Italy in peace proposal was intensified by disclosure of pressure put upon Emperor Haile Selassie for acceptance.

Italy indicated the proposal was not likely to be accepted outright, but more as a bargaining point for future discussion.

Premier Laval of France declared he intended to continue seeking peace in Africa and might press for a modified settlement plan.

At Geneva it was indicated that complete cessation of hostilities must precede action upon any Italo-Ethiopian peace proposal.

By the United Press.

London, Dec. 14.—British indignation over concessions made to Italy in the Franco-British peace proposals was heightened today by the issuance of an official "white paper" revealing that Sir Samuel Hoare, foreign secretary, put special pressure on Emperor Haile Selassie to induce him to consider the plan.

The situation has caused a storm which is likely to break in Parliament Thursday, when Sir Samuel will attempt to defend the proposals he drafted with Premier Pierre Laval of France. Already there has been talk in political circles of demanding Sir Samuel's resignation.

The Ethiopian peace plan shared interest today with the revelation that Britain has made a tentative approach to Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler for negotiation of the Franco-British proposals of last February for a general agreement to promote peace by closer European co-operation.

Visits Hitler.

Sir Eric Phipps, British ambassador, visited Hitler yesterday. They were understood to have discussed possible pacts of aerial nonaggression and a general agreement on reduction of land armaments.

The white paper made public today revealed that Hoare telegraphed Tuesday to Sir Eric Drummond, British ambassador at Rome, and Sir Sidney Barton, minister at Addis Ababa, asking them to urge Premier Benito Mussolini and Emperor Haile Selassie to accept the peace plan.

Hoare sent virtually identical telegrams to the two diplomats, detailing the peace plan and expressing strong hope the two rulers would accept it. The telegram to Barton, however, contained an added paragraph hinting at stronger pressure on Haile Selassie than on Mussolini. It said:

"You should use your utmost influence to induce the emperor to give careful and favorable consideration to these proposals and on no account to reject them lightly. On the contrary, I feel sure he will give further proof of his statesmanship by realizing the advantage of the opportunity of negotiation they

'Guest' Crashes Gridiron Club To Serve Subpenas to Doherty

14 Legal Papers Handed Utilities Magnate at Festival Board.

A process server, resplendent in a full dress suit and white tie, "crashed" the midwinter banquet of the exclusive Gridiron Club in the Willard Hotel last night, and presented a distinguished guest with 14 subpenas.

The guest was Henry L. Doherty, scrappy head of the $1,000,000,000 Cities Service utility empire.

The process server was Gerald W. Sickler, erstwhile amateur actor at George Washington University. He was given the assignment to serve Doherty three weeks ago by Justice Jennings Bailey, of the District Supreme Court, after deputy marshals had failed in their efforts to reach the utilities magnate.

Men have been known to offer large sums of money to win an invitation to a Gridiron Club banquet, but Sickler got into last night's party with the greatest of ease.

Reaching the tenth floor of the Willard, he was given a program.

Maxwell's Son Launches Move To Dig Up Body

Hopes to Prove Father Died of Apoplexy, Not From Sister's Blows.

By Virginia Lee Warren.
A Staff Correspondent.

Wise, Va., Dec. 14.—The groundwork is being laid for exhumation of the body of Trigg Maxwell, in the hope of uncovering evidence to show that he died from apoplexy and not from the wounds inflicted by a slipper wielded by his daughter, Edith.

As part of his fight to vindicate his sister, Earl Maxwell has made the first moves toward obtaining the disinterment from the small cemetery in Pound, Va., in the Blue Ridge Mountains.

The girl is facing a 25-year term in State's prison because she allegedly fatally wounded her father, who, in a drunken fury, attacked her with a butcher knife, because she stayed out to midnight.

Earl will leave tomorrow for Richmond, accompanied by his uncle, W. W. G. Dotson. There they will place copies of the autopsy report before pathologists. Their hope is that they will find that Trigg Maxwell died from apoplexy.

Should any evidence be disclosed in the autopsy report to indicate that death might have resulted from apoplexy, a petition will be filed for exhumation of the body.

Dotson served three terms as a member of Congress from this district and is one of the three attorneys who defended the 21-year-old school teacher before a circuit court jury, which found her guilty of first-degree murder.

A belief that his father might have died as a result of natural causes resulting from the excitement of the family quarrel is entertained by Earl because of the circumstances of the death of his father's brother, Fred Maxwell.

The latter died two years ago as a result of a fall in his home, while he was intoxicated. He had manifested symptoms of apoplexy, according to relatives.

The belief that Trigg Maxwell died from natural causes also is shared by Attorney Dotson.

"For months before his death, Trigg was complaining to me about

Slaying Suspect Escapes; Locks Six in Jail Cells

Keys Seized at Gun Point; Jersey Trooper's Death Charged to Culprit.

By the Associated Press.

New Brunswick, N. J., Dec. 14.—Edward Metelski, 26-year-old former convict awaiting trial on a charge of murder in the slaying of a New Jersey State trooper, escaped from the Middlesex County Jail today, after locking six men, including the assistant warden, in cells.

Brandishing a .38-caliber revolver, which apparently had been smuggled into his jail cell, Metelski first intimidated a trusty, who brought him his meal. Officials said he also forced Paul Semenkewicz, 22, of Arbor, accused of participating in a holdup in Union County, to accompany him.

State police and county authorities immediately began the search for the prisoners. Sheriff F. Herdman Harding ordered his men to shoot Metelski on sight.

Metelski was under indictment for murder in the killing of Trooper Warren G. Yenser on the Brunswick pike, near Avenel, November 9. He was arrested in Elizabeth a few hours after the slaying and was to have gone on trial next week. He has steadfastly denied any connection with the crime.

The jailbreak occurred half an hour after Metelski was visited by his mother, father and wife. Assistant Warden George Anderson said the visit was in the witness room, but asserted the prisoner had been searched before he was returned to his cell.

The break started when George Hill, Negro trusty, took a tray of food into the cell block occupied by Metelski alone. The dishes were too large to go through the bars and Anderson opened Metelski's door with a master lever.

When he set the tray down inside the cell, Hill said, Metelski placed a gun against his side and told him to "Get in here or I'll kill you."

Anderson said he tried to slam shut the doors, but before he could do so, Metelski had the gun against his ribs.

"Don't move or I'll kill you," he said Metelski told him.

Metelski shut both men in a cell

Gridiron Roasts Roosevelt et al; First Lady Fetes Club 'Widows'

500 Hear 'Off-Record' 'Panning' of Nation's Great Figures.

Members of the Gridiron Club, famous newspaper organization, gave their uncensored version of men and issues on the eve of the Presidential campaign at their winter dinner last night at the Willard Hotel.

President Roosevelt headed a company of 500 guests, including leaders in the political and economic life of the Nation, who sat beneath a huge glowing gridiron, while a program of satirical skits and songs and pungent raillery was interspersed with the courses of the dinner.

The only speaker was President Roosevelt. The club had invited Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for President in 1932, to be the other speaker, but Thomas, though he had accepted the invitation, failed to appear. Hitherto, it has been a custom of the club in previous years to invite a distinguished member of the opposition party to Mrs. Roosevelt Subjected to Gentle Jibes at Her Own Party.

While President Roosevelt, as honor guest of newspapermen of the Gridiron, was being treated last night to lusty travesties on the New Deal Mrs. Roosevelt was going through the same sort of good-natured lampooning at the White House by wives of gridiron members.

But Mrs. Roosevelt, unlike the President, gave the party which surrounded her and had as its theme the gentle poking of fun at the present Administration and occupants of the Executive Mansion. Hostess as well as ranking guest, she also made a splendid audience, laughing freely at the pungent skits.

In addition to the Gridiron Widows the First Lady had bidden wives of members of the Cabinet, women Government executives and newspaperwomen to the merry, informal affair which began at 9 and ended with supper at midnight.

It was the third party of the group. A year ago Mrs. Roosevelt

Firemen Rushed to 'City Hall' Become Prisoners in Elevator

An alarm of fire at fire alarm headquarters is usually a fire alarm to become alarmed over.

And yesterday, when four fire engines and two trucks screeched to a halt in front of the District Building, alarm spread rapidly—so fast, in fact, that there were soon more spectators than firemen.

The fire, firemen were told, was adjacent to fire alarm headquarters on the fifth floor. Hose was stretched, police were called, axes appeared and firemen dashed into the building.

Inside, there was a concerted rush for the antiquated elevators. Nearly a dozen husky firefighters crowded onto one lift. Slowly the old elevator creaked upward. And then it stopped—between the fourth and fifth floors.

By this time, the fire (if there had been one) probably would have gotten a good start. But there wasn't any fire—not even a good whiff of smoke.

That made it fine, because most of the firemen were stuck between the fourth and fifth floors. Even their axes couldn't have gotten them out.

It seems someone with an odd sense of humor had telephoned fire alarm headquarters, reporting "smoke and flames" from the upper northeast corner of the District Building. Those firemen who reached the top floor couldn't find a thing.

And those who didn't were taken back to the first floor—much faster than they were taken up.

Everyone had a good time—including the phoney alarmster.

Neutrality: Safeguard or Illusion?

Volume V of Ray Stannard Baker's authorized Life of Woodrow Wilson has just been published. It gives the record of America's "losing struggle for neutrality" in 1914-1915. The timeliness of this chapter of history for guiding our neutrality policy today is emphasized by Felix Morley, editor of The Post, in a review on the Book Page, Section III.

Boy Sends Post Toy Fund $1 To Gladden Some Needy Child

Scores of letters reaching headquarters of The Post Toy and Doll Fund yesterday bore witness to what District relief officials have proclaimed would be the lot of thousands of Washington families this Christmas.

Relief allowances have been slashed to a point where many fathers are without funds for the provision of necessities, bread and meat for themselves, milk for their children.

Yet to children, toys may be more important than milk. The city streets wear colored lights. Santa Claus stands on many corners.

Young Frank Harman, 3d, understands this, though for him there is no lack of playthings, or of milk. He sent the toy fund $1, attached to the note he printed:

"I hope some child will enjoy a Christmas present because I have given a dollar to The Washington Post Toy Fund."

Far from intending to imply that the managers of the toy fund might possibly find other uses for his dollar, what Frank meant was that he thought it would be a good idea if other boys and girls sent dollars.

Next Saturday hundreds of children will assemble at Loew's Fox Theater at 8:30 a. m. to see Wallace Beery and Jackie Cooper in "Treasure Island" as the guests of the Fox management. The only admission is a new toy or article of clothing for some child. Adults either accompanying children or desiring to assist by their attendance

Secret Parleys Peril London Naval Sessions

Uncertainty Inspired by Japanese Complicates Conference.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 14.—The shadow of secret diplomatic maneuvers fell tonight across the week-old naval conference, struggling to extricate itself from the complications of Japanese parity demands.

Uncertainty hinged on two developments, both originating with the Japanese.

Some observers expressed the fear that the conference might be turned into a "super-secret" session, coupled with the launching of separate talks. They said this might steer the conference on the rocks of bilateral conversations, which wrecked preliminary negotiations last year.

Americans Uneasy.

The Americans were uneasy at this trend from the open round table discussions, which they feel are vital to avoid the playing off of one nation against the other.

Great Britain's delegation hastened to clear up the status of its private talk last night with the Japanese and said it was purely supplementary to the conference itself. Such talks among the various delegations are continuing from time to time.

Nevertheless, the feeling remained among observers that the Japanese are trying to drive a wedge between the Americans and the British in their opposition to Tokyo's equality proposal.

This seemed to be borne out by Tokyo dispatches hinting that equality in Japan's demands means equality with the United States.

Secret Session Monday.

No formal session of the conference was held today. Instead of a general session Monday, a secret meeting will be held attended only by delegates.

This development was as the result of Japanese requests on the grounds that general sessions are cumbersome and unsatisfactory. The American delegation is spending the week-end in the country.

Japan opened the conference by firmly demanding the scrapping of the 5-5-3 ratio in favor of equality with America and Britain. The conference is seeking to agree on a treaty to replace the Washington and London pacts, which end next year.

Masaryk Retires With High Honors

Made President-Liberator by Grateful Czechs.

By the United Press.

Praha, Czechoslovakia, Dec. 14. President Thomas G. Masaryk, national hero and head of the Czechoslovakian Republic since it was founded after the war, resigned today because of his advanced age and poor health.

Masaryk is 85. The country decided to pay him high honors, giving him the permanent title of "president-liberator," a substantial pension and the use of Lana Castle, his official residence, for the remainder of his life.

The president's last act was to issue a decree of amnesty for all political offenders, except those against the safety of the state.

He recommended in his written resignation that Edouard Benes, Czechoslovakia's perpetual foreign minister and one of the outstanding statesmen in middle Europe, be elected his successor. The election for a new president will be held Wednesday.

gains of 20 to 25 per cent in dollar volume of retail trade, with a 10 per cent gain in bank clearings.

Cold weather boosted Philadelphia department store sales 49.5 per cent over last week and 9 per cent over last year. Pennsylvania Railroad placed orders with its own shops for 6,000 new freight cars, and allotted 4,000 others to other firms, all to cost $25,000,000.

Cleveland Prosperity.

The Christmas rush in Cleveland added 12,000 to sales forces of stores and about $800,000 to pay rolls. Industrial pay rolls are now $9,000,000 more per month than last year, as 10,000 additional men are employed. WPA projects have absorbed 40,000 from direct relief at a combined monthly outlay of $2,600,000.

Richmond reported fair gains in retail trade for the Fifth Reserve District, with department store sales up 11 per cent over 1934. Atlanta retail sales gained 25 per cent over the previous week and 8 per cent over last year.

Chicago estimates its retail advance as ranging from 11 to 20 per cent, with a few lines reporting 25 per cent gains, and the suburban shopping tend also upward. Mail order sales soared.

Los Angeles could claim a new high for its southern California business index, which stands this week at 83.82, compared with 1934's 65.87.

Detroit reported gains for retail trade over last year, with heavy wholesale and fill-in orders, indicating early depletion of retail stocks.

The Department of Agriculture yesterday reported that farmers received $5,000,000,000 from the sale of their principal crops during the first ten months of 1935, as against only $4,500,000,000 for same period in 1934. Largest gains were reported from Western States and the Dakotas, whose income increased 30 per cent. The gain in West North Central States was 28 per cent, for the North Atlantic States, 12 per cent, and for the South Central States, 13 per cent. South Atlantic State' farm income decreased 2 per cent.

a plank which will please the farmers as much as the AAA has, even though it is in substance the same scheme under a different name.

This feeling was particularly noticeable in the remarks made at a small informal press conference by Harrison E. Spangler, Iowa committeeman and manager of the party's Western headquarters. Spangler spoke of the necessity of retiring marginal land from production, presumably through Government subsidies, although he said he had not worked the plan out. His attitude was regarded by several farm State correspondents present as a more liberal one than he has presented in the past.

Spangler assailed the New Deal in general, said he believed the Republican Party always has been "liberal in the true sense of the word" and that the "present Administration is perhaps the most reactionary the country has ever had." He defined liberalism as a belief "in the liberal institutions and foundations of this country."

The Iowan regarded the Democrats as particularly vulnerable on the spending and economy issue and thought that in some localities the reciprocal trade agreements, especially with Canada, would make votes for the Republicans. He said he was convinced that the farmers of the country favored tariff protection and that they would return to the Republican Party as conditions approached normal.

Ralph E. Williams, vice chairman of the committee and committeeman from Oregon, said he believed the Republicans should adopt this year the identical platform adopted by the Democrats in 1932.

"It was a good platform," he said. "President Roosevelt has made no use of it and I do not think it should be wasted."

Contracts Lag On Non-Federal Work Projects

Entire Housing Program 'Clear,' but Other Jobs Are Not Ready.

By the Associated Press.

With virtually the entire PWA housing program safely past today's deadline for starting construction, indications appeared yesterday that less than half of the non-Federal projects would be under contract within President Roosevelt's original schedule.

A. R. Clas, PWA housing director, reported to Secretary Ickes that contracts had been awarded or work actually started on all 47 of the "active" projects in the present $130,000,000 slum clearance program.

Other PWA officials, however, said they would not know for a week the status of non-Federal projects. These involve a total of $737,819,472—including PWA donations of $324,000,000.

Clas reported three PWA housing developments had been placed on the "inactive" list. One, he said, was the $1,618,000 project in Louisville, which occasioned the decision in Federal District Court there that the Government had no authority to condemn land for slum clearance sites.

Decision Awaited.

This, he added, was "suspended pending decision of the United States Supreme Court on the right of the Federal Government to condemn this area." The other two projects were the $4,500,000 Parkside development in Detroit, where the city council, in opposing the project, has refused to close streets within the area, and the $60,000 Anacostia Terrace in Washington, on which an additional allotment is necessary.

Clas simultaneously praised the Hillside PWA limited-dividend project in New York as offering 4,000 persons "freedom from the drab limitations of crowded tenement life and opportunities for an amended order of living."

He gave this breakdown of his division's activities: seven of the limited-dividend projects, constructed by private concerns with PWA loans, are occupied and providing accommodations for 11,000 persons.

Of the 47 active Federal projects, which will accommodate 25,000 families, nine are under construction; construction contracts for three others have been awarded; foundations are being laid for 23; demolition of exising buildings is being carried out on the site of 12 others.

50,000 to Get Work.

Clas estimated that 50,000 men would receive a year's employment at slum clearance construction sites, besides those employed in furnishing materials and equipment.

"The orders for material for this construction," Clas said in predicting that the present housing program would be completed by 1937, "represent one of the largest demands for building supplies for a single program on record.

"In hours of labor the program means the creation of somewhere around 38,000,000 man-hours of direct labor and around 75,000,000 man-hours of indirect labor in production and fabrication of raw materials, transporation and handling."

New Member Completes U. S. Tariff Board

Commission Fully Staffed for First Time in More Than Year.

By the Associated Press.

The Tariff Commission, collector of voluminous data by which the President and Congress measure the effects of trade policies, now has a full membership for the first time in more than a year.

President Roosevelt last week appointed Edward Dana Durand, of Minnesota, to fill the vacancy existing since June 16, 1934, when the term of John Lee Coulter, of North Dakota, expired. The appointment gave the commission three Republican and three Democratic members.

Durand has been chief economist of the commission since 1930 and was active in gathering information on which the reciprocal tariff program was worked out.

Trade Agreements.

The commission's duties consist largely of working out data for trade agreements. The agency is designated as a source of information and advice for the President in negotiating such agreements.

The technical staff of the commission has the task of preparing special studies for the State Department and the various interdepartmental committees working on reciprocal trade negotiations.

In earlier years the commission acted largely in an advisory capacity to Congress in regard to tariff revisions. Now it must examine carefully such things as the probable international effects of tariff changes, the value of proffered concessions and the American interest benefited or injured by a proposed change in duty.

Likely to Benefit.

It also must determine the country which—because of its geographic or economic position—is likely to benefit most from a change in tariff.

Other duties of the commission, including investigation of applications for revision of duties, are still carried on, but they have dwindled in importance compared with the new work on the trade agreements program.

One new duty assigned the commission by the New Deal was eliminated when the Supreme Court invalidated that agency.

Under the reciprocity act, it was charged with investigating cases in which foreign competition made ineffective the NRA codes for domestic producers.

'Black Blizzard' Sweeps Southwestern Plains

Guymon, Okla., Dec. 14. (AP)—A dust storm reminiscent of the black blizzards of last spring swept the high Southwestern plains today, borne on a cold north wind. Clouds of silt, scooped up from barren fields, reduced visibility here to a quarter-mile. The storm was not as severe as those of last April and May.

At Liberal, in Southwestern Kansas, motorists were forced to use their headlights in midday. The storm subsided tonight. Only .83 inch of moisture has fallen here in the last two months and the year's rainfall has amounted to only 11.05 inches.

Fingerprints, Teeth Identify 397 Dead

By the Associated Press.

By fingerprints and teeth, experts of the Justice Department's division of identification in the last seven months have figured out names to attach to 397 bodies that had been tagged as "unknown."

Out of the 5,400,000 fingerprints records on file, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the "G-men" and fingerprint authority, said his men identified 397 of the 1,520 prints of dead men's fingers sent to them by police and coroners.

John Hamilton, last of the Dillinger gang, was marked in his shallow grave in an Illinois gravel pit a year after his death by the character of his teeth, Hoover related.

Many other important criminal corpses have been identified in similar manner.

Doherty Gets 14 Subpenas At Grid Party

"How are you?" returned Mr. Doherty.

"I have something for you," said Sickler.

Whereupon he handed Doherty the 14 subpenas.

These required Doherty to answer within 20 days the 14 suits that have been filed against him in the District Supreme Court.

The complainants, who are represented by Attorneys Alvin L. Newmyer and David G. Bress, claim they bought approximately $50,000 worth of stock in the Indian Territory Illuminating Oil Co., from agents of Doherty.

These agents, the complainants charge, misrepresented the stock, and they now are suing Doherty to recover their money.

One of the 14 complainants is Mrs. Adelaide Blair, wife of David H. Blair, former Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

Deputy marshals had tried in vain to obtain service on Mr. Doherty. Finally Attorneys Newmyer and Bress decided that an outsider, somebody who looked like anything but an officer, was needed for the job. Bress suggested Sickler and arranged for his appointment as a special process server.

So far as could be learned last night, Sickler is the only man who ever crashed a Gridiron banquet.

Pope Pius to Urge Peace in Europe

By the United Press.

Vatican City, Dec. 14.—Pope Pius will deliver a warm appeal to European statesmen to preserve peace when he holds a secret consistory Monday to elevate a large group of churchmen to the College of Cardinals, it was reported reliably tonight.

The consistory will create 20 new cardinals, the largest number to be elevated at one time since 1816, when Pope Pius VII raised 28 monsignors to the purple. The public consistory will be held Thursday, when the red hats will be conferred formally on the new princes of the church.

Reserve Split Reported Near On Surplus Cut

Open Market Committee to Meet Here Tuesday on Problem.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

A division within the Federal Reserve System over methods of curbing the rapidly-growing excess reserves appeared a possibility last night as the system's Open Market Committee prepared to meet here Tuesday to discuss the situation brought about by the heavy inflow of gold from abroad.

The committee, comprising the governors of the 12 Reserve Banks, will have before it when it meets a suggestion from the Federal Advisory Council—consisting chiefly of private bankers affiliated with the system—that the Reserve Banks should let their Government security portfolios "run off" in order to curb the excess reserves.

Under this proposal the Reserve Banks would not replace their short-term Government securities, now totaling about $2,400,000,000, as they mature. This action would be equivalent to the gradual sale of these Government securities over a period of some months, since the Treasury would be compelled to get the money to refund such securities from private banks and investors. This would decrease the excess reserves in proportion to the depletion of the Reserve Bank accounts.

Other Method Suggested.

Indications have been received here, however, that it is unlikely that the open market committee will recommend such action, although several of its members feel that action should be undertaken now to curb excess reserves. The committee, it is understood, favors the reserve board increasing reserve requirements in order to absorb the excess, now totaling slightly more than $3,300,000,000. Unless checked by restrictive action the excess in January may go above $3,500,000,000.

The member banks of the system, with a few exceptions, however, are not favorably inclined toward an increased in reserve requirements because such action would diminish their credit base. Depletion of the reserve banks' Government portfolios, it is believed, also would have the effect of forcing interest rates upward and this is a result which all the member banks desire.

U. S. Paper Profitable.

The Treasury, however, is expected to favor curbing the excess reserves through increasing reserve reuirements, rather than by sale of Government securities, since the latter might weaken the Government bond market, thus necessitating increased interest rates to finance the deficits of the next year or two.

One reason why the Open Market Committee is cool to the proposal to sell the government holdings of the banks is that these now supply practically the only source of income which the reserve banks have. Member banks, due to the huge amount of excess reserves—another term for idle money—are not discounting with the reserve banks.

Biggest French Plane Completes Brazil Flight

Rio de Janeiro, Dec. 14 (AP).—The Lieutenant de Vaisseau Paris, France's greatest flying boat, landed at Natal today after a flight across the South Atlantic.

The Paris, which was built by the French government for its government subsidized flying company, Air France, tried to make the flight from Dakar yesterday but had to turn back after an hour in the air because of motor trouble.

'Treasure Hunt' Leads To 3 Arrests in Boston

Boston, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Three Boston men were arrested today in an alleged $25,000 lottery promotion scheme.

Tickets seized bore the inspection "grand view treasure hunt, Singac, N. J.," and announced $25,000 in prizes would be distributed. The tickets sold for $1. Police asked New York authorities to question a man named as promoter by the three suspects. No formal charges have been lodged against the trio pending further investigation.

Seven Named In Bond Fraud Suit by Boston

$250,000 in Illegal Profits Charged to E. L. Dolan, Ex-Treasurer, Others.

By the United Press.

Boston, Dec. 14.—The City of Boston today filed suit to recover allegedly illegal profits, said to total $250,000, made by Edmund L. Dolan and six others on bond transactions while Dolan was city treasurer.

Dolan served as city treasurer under Mayor James M. Curley, present Governor of Massachusetts.

A bill in equity filed in State Supreme Court charges that Dolan and the others purchased bonds at one price and sold them to the city at greatly increased prices.

Dolan conceived and concocted the fraudulent and corrupt scheme. In anticipation of the election of Mayor Curley and Dolan's own appointment as city treasurer, according to the suit.

Named with Dolan in the suit were J. Walter Quinn, John F. Dever and Lawrence Costello, all of Boston; Harold B. Simpson and Robert L. Emerson, of Brookline, and Frederick J. Reardon, of Cambridge, all said to be officials or employes of the E. L. Dolan Co., the legal securities corporation of John F. Dever & Co., alleged to have handled the bulk of Boston's bond transactions during Dolan's term as city treasurer.

The suit asks that Dolan be made to report gains and profits received from bond transactions with the city while he was treasurer, that he render an accounting of such gains and profits, and that the court find that Dolan and his alleged associates got the gains illegally and in breach of his official duties to the city and that he and the others be made to pay the money back to the city with interest.

Roosevelt Plan For Fire Law Backed by D.C.

come by smoke and numerous others risked their lives by crawling along the floor with sponges of water in their mouths.

Six of the firemen remained in Emergency Hospital last night. They probably will recover.

Three investigations of the fire remained in progress. They were conducted separately by W. G. Peters, jr., of the National Parks Service building division; B. C. Gardner, National Parks Service personnel chief, and Donald H. MacNeal, division director of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, whose offices were damaged.

Preliminary surveys indicated the fire probably was caused by heat from a powerful light bulb near the files of the General Accounting Office stored in the Post-office Department Building.

All papers salvaged were prepared for transfer to a warehouse at 401 South Capitol street, where they will be inspected by Accounting Office employes.

Banks' Assets Jump a Billion In Four Months

Report as of November 1 Also Shows 63-Million Slump in Loans.

By the Associated Press

A jump of more than $1,000,000,000 in national bank assets during the four months ended November 1 was reported yesterday by J. F. T. O'Connor, Comptroller of the Currency, with a $63,000,000 drop in their loans.

In his report of the figures assembled from his last call for condition statements, O'Connor said the banks' assets aggregated $27,430,730,000 on November 1, an increase of $1,369,665,000 since June 29.

Loans and discounts totaled $7.301,371,000, as compared with $7,365,226,000 on the previous call.

There were 5,409 active banks on November 1, or 22 fewer than in June.

Investments in Government obligations, including Government-guaranteed securities, rose $320,589,000 between the two calls, amounting to $7,493,596,000 November 1.

Balances due from correspondent banks and bankers increased $991,852,000 to a total of $7,402,596,000. This included a reserve of $3,453,672,000 with the various Federal Reserve banks. The cash in bank vaults dropped $1,134,000 to stand at $404,379,000.

Deposits rose $1,514,990,000 to total $24,033,236,000. This was $3,210,000,000 greater than a year ago.

The book value of national bank capital stock was $1,776,591,000. Its par value was $1,782,313,000. The book value, while $32,912,000 down from June 29, was still $4,078,000 above that at the first of the year.

Surplus funds of $865,955,000, undivided profits of $337,452,000, a reserve for contingencies of $147,282,000, and a preferred stock retirement fund of $2,664,000, all represented icnreases in the four months.

Postal savings in national banks dropped 20.23 per cent, or $49,135,000, during the four months.

The percentage of loans and discounts to total deposits reported was 30.38 per cent November 1, as compared with 32.71 on the date of the previous call.

The aggregate deposits November 1, compared amounts due to banks subject to immediate withdrawal and certified and cashiers' checks outstanding of $4,036,962,000, United States Government deposits of $438,768,000, other demand deposits of $12,243,072,000 and time deposits of $7,314,434,000.

Bomb Found in Cargo Sent U. S. From Egypt

Newark, N. J., Dec. 14 (AP).—Police reported today that a bomb was discovered in a shipment of henna leaves received by a Newark firm from Egypt, scene of recent nationalistic outbreaks.

Dr. Reuben W. Warner, city chemist, examined the torpedo-shaped object and found it contained a fulminating cap and three and a half ounces of TNT. There was, however, no means of detonation. Members of the firm in whose shipment the bomb was found said they knew of no enemies abroad.

Reed, Missouri, Plans Bolt Against Roosevelt

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Dec. 14 (AP).—Former Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, long a Democratic Party leader, today asserted that if President Roosevelt is renominated, he "is prepared to vote for the Republican candidate, providing that nominee is pledged to stand by the Constitution."

He refused to say who might be acceptable to him as the Republican candidate. Reed came here in connection with the estate of his brother, the late John A. Reed, utilities operator.

Crippled Killer To Hang; Slew Federal Agent

Kentuckian Is Sentenced Under New U. S. Law; Pleads Self-Defense.

By the Associated Press.

Indianapolis, Dec. 14.—A scene without modern precedent in Federal Court was enacted today as George W. Barrett, greyhaired former Kentucky feudist, was wheeled before the bar of Federal Judge Robert C. Baltzell and sentenced to be hanged before sunrise March 24, 1936.

Barrett was tried under a law enacted last year which provides that cases involving killings of Federal officers be tried in Federal courts. He was convicted last Saturday of the murder of Nelson B. Klein, a Federal agent, at College Corner, Ind., August 16. Heretofore such cases have been tried under State law in State courts.

Barrett, wounded in both legs in the gun battle which resulted in Klein's death, maintained the same stoical demeanor displayed throughout his trial. His inevitable toothpick hardly wavered in his hand as he sat in his wheel chair to hear Judge Baltzell impose sentence.

When the judge asked if he had anything to say, the 50-year-old Kentuckian replied in a clear, even voice:

"I only want to say that I killed Nelson Klein in defense of my own life."

The case was the second of its kind since congress passed the law making it a federal offense to kill a government officer. John Paul Chase, survivor of the "Battle of Barrington" near Chicago, is serving a life sentence at Alcatraz.

Bay State Hunt Aims to Check Wave of Crime

Boston Holdup Is, Fourth in 3 Days in Eastern Massachusetts.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Dec. 14.—Four unsolved holdups in three days, which netted gunmen nearly $10,000, stirred eastern Massachusetts into action tonight.

In Boston, where the latest of the four crimes occurred last night, a city-wide search was begun for clews to the five gunmen who seized two strong boxes from a railway express truck. Federal, State and local police joined in the investigation.

James R. Claflin, deputy superintendent of Boston police, set the total loot of the express truck holdup at $450 in cash, $40 in jewelry, and $7,000 in non-negotiable securities. Previous estimates were higher.

State and Boston police cooperated with Rockland authorities in a search for four gunmen who seized a $4,500 pay roll yesterday at the E. J. Givren Shoe Co., Rockland, a few hours before the Boston holdup. Some authorities thought the same gang might have executed both of the carefully planned holdups.

Police reported little progress in the investigation of the hi-jacking of two trucks Wednesday in eastern Massachusetts. Merchandise valued variously from $3,000 to $5,000 was taken.

Two men held for several hours as suspects in last night's downtown Boston holdup were released today when questioning failed to connect them with the crime. A search was under way for the car in which the gunmen made their getaway.

Challenge Sent To Cummings In Liggett Case

State Officials Demand He Order U.S. Probe or Give Basis of Rebuke.

By the Associated Press.

Minneapolis, Dec. 14.—State officials, who refused to take "no" for an answer, today challenged Attorney General Homer S. Cummings either to approve Federal inquiry of the Liggett assassination or disclose the evidence on which he "indicted the reputations" of the Twin Cities.

Their first appeal for Federal handling of the case rejected yesterday by Cummings, Gov. Floyd B. Olson and State's Attorney General H. H. Peterson today renewed their request and expressed conviction a government inquiry "will disclose a violation of Federal law."

Cummings, more than a year ago, branded the Twin Cities "poison spots of crime." The Minnesota officials advised Cummings this "created an obligation upon you to honor our requests for the use of Department of Justice operatives."

"We are sure you will agree that the limitation of the jurisdiction conferred upon the Department of Justice by acts of Congress," the telegram concluded, "does not restrain you from investigating a matter in order to determine whether or not a Federal law has been violated."

Police combed the district in which the militant publisher of the Midwest American, a weekly newspaper, lived, seeking a woman and a man supposed to have witnessed the killing last Monday night in the alley adjacent to Liggett's apartment.

Simultaneously Chief of Police Frank Forestal said he probably would accept the offer of William Schlaeger, chief deputy coroner of Chicago, to compare photographs of the machine-gun bullets which killed Liggett with pictures of bullets fired from similar weapons figuring in crimes there

Isadore (Kid Cann) Blumenfeld, liquor salesman identified according to police by Mrs Liggett as her husband's slayer, retained Thomas McMeekin as his counsel to obtain release from custody. McMeekin was one of defense counsel in the Touhy gang's trial for the Hamm kidnaping.

France Votes Additional $396,000,000 for Arms

Paris, Dec. 14 (AP).—The Chamber of Deputies today adopted a 6,000,000,000-franc budget after the government stressed the danger of "massive German rearmament."

The armaments budget is an addition to the 7,000,000,000-franc ordinary budget.

Woman Found Slain; Believed Wife of Comer

3d Victim Traced to Mad Hitch-Hiker; Two Still Missing.

Edmond, Okla., Dec. 14.—Police believed another puzzle in the tangled skein of Chester Comer's mad career was solved tonight with discovery of the nude, flame-seared body of a young woman identified tentatively as his second wife.

The father of Lucille Stevens Comer was en route here from Maysville, Okla., to view the body—found by a farmer and his son while clearing underbrush from a roadside gully.

When Chester Comer died in an Oklahoma City hospital three weeks ago, muttering "bodies—piles of bodies," authorities believed he took with him the key to the disappearance of five persons.

Since then two of the missing persons have been found.

The bullet-torn, decomposed body of Ray Evans, Shawnee, Okla., attorney, was unearthed by dogs from a shallow grave near Lindsay, Okla., early this week. Evans' disappearance November 19 while on a motor trip to see a client precipitated the search for Comer, a gun-flashing hitch-hiker.

Earlier, the body of a young woman found in Wyandotte County, Kans., more than a year ago had been identified definitely as that of Comer's first bride.

Claud Tyler and Bill Ridge, Oklahoma County evidence men, said the body found near here today has the general description of Comer's second wife.

Townsend Bolt Pleases Chiefs Of Two Parties

program. For example, he estimated roughly that items going into the manufacture of an automobile would be taxed to a point where the cost would be catapulted at least 20 per cent.

"I know this statement may make trouble for me in my own district," Buchanan added, "but I am not afraid of the consequences. A member of Congress should think of other considerations than re-election."

Inflation Feared.

Representative Bolton is said to have told Townsend Clubs in his own State that their objectives of relieving unemployment and alleviating old age distress are praiseworthy, but the tax they propose is impracticable, inflationary in its implications, and he cannot support it. Instead of $200 a month, the aged beneficiaries of the plan would probably end up by receiving about $20, he calculated.

Dr. Townsend's program was offered in the House last session by Representative John S. McGroarty (Democrat), California, as a substitute for the Administration's social security bill. On a division count, it was defeated, 206 to 56.

Its only hope of consideration this session would be via the petition route, and that would require 218 signatures. The only other course would be through a special rule approved by the House Rules Committee, and Representative John J. O'Connor, of New York, chairman of that group, is known to be unalterably opposed to the plan. Last session he called it "playing politics with human misery."

Members Wavering.

Due to phenomenal pressure from "back home," a number of Democratic and Republican members of the House are wavering on the issue. Particularly is this true in the delegation from Michigan, where Townsendites have secured a strong political foothold. One member of this delegation prophesied yesterday that the next election would send 100 "new faces" to the House as a result of the Townsend campaign.

One prominent Republican member of the House from another State has confided to friends that he has no hope of re-election, because he cannot support the Townsend program.

Following is a text of the letter sent to every member of the House by Dr. Townsend's "Old Age Revolving Pensions., Ltd.:

"Dear Congressman:

"In order that we may correctly inform the Townsend Clubs and the Townsend National Legion members, will you please be good enough to give us the following information relative to your stand on the Townsend plan:

"Are you in favor of the Plan?

"Did you vote for H. R. 7154? (The McGroarty Bill.)

"Can we rely upon your help to pass a bill embodying the Townsend plan at the coming session? Yes——. No——. Please check the "Yes" or "No" according to your desire to be quoted.

"In the issue of the National Townsend Weekly of December 30, we will publish either your answer to this questionnaire or that you failed to answer. Please be assured that we desire only to correctly inform our followers of your attitude.

"Very truly yours,
"By R. E. CLEMENTS,
"Co-Founder and National Secretary."

Col. House's Kin Kills Himself With 4 Bullets

Wilson Adviser's Nephew Left Notes for Family; Once Lived Here.

By the Associated Press.

Waco, Tex., Dec. 14.—Joe Trippett, assistant district attorney, announced tonight that self-inflicted bullet wounds caused the death today of Thomas William House, jr., 31, nephew of Col. E. M. House.

Trippett said House left notes addressed to his wife and children saying, "I couldn't make the grade."

House, vice president of the Texas Long Distance Telephone Co., was found fatally wounded in the basement of his home. He had been shot four times in the chest, one bullet making a flesh wound and the other three going through the body. He was dead upon reaching a hospital.

House had been here about eight months. Previously he had been stationed in Cincinnati, New Orleans and Washington.

Besides his widow, survivors include a daughter, Bess Ashly, 3, and another daughter, Bina Louise, born three weeks ago.

House was the son-in-law of former Gov. Charles S. Deneen of Illinois.

Relatives remained silent but from visitors who would not be quoted it was learned that House went to the basement, where the water heater is located, soon after turning on the water in the bathroom.

Shots were heard soon afterward. Members of the family found House lying in the basement wounded. A pistol was nearby.

Thomas William House, sr., his father, arrived here by airplane, but like other members of the family, declined comment. The physician summoned by the family limited himself to the statement that the bullet wounds caused death.

Hoffman Attacks New Deal Policies

Imperil U. S. Institutions, Governor Declares.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14.—Gov. Harold G. Hoffman of New Jersey charged today that the New Deal Administration had created "an economy of scarcity," and asserted that "dangerous implications" of the present national policy stand as a threat to American institutions.

"The Federal policies now pursued have created an economy of scarcity and have increased rather than decreased the number of our unemployed," he told the National Republican Club at a luncheon meeting.

He asserted also that the Administration "has openly and persistently attacked business, which is the life blood of the Nation, as though it were a public enemy."

Yule Visit Reveals 2 Starved to Death

Mother, 83, and Son, 58, Found Dead on Floor.

By the United Press.

Providence, R. I., Dec. 14.—The visit of a friend who called to deliver Christmas gifts today led to the discovery of Mrs. Amanda De Groat, 83, and her 58-year-old son, dead of starvation and exposure in their home.

The body of Mrs. De Groat was wrapped in a quilt on the bedroom floor, and that of her son, William, likewise wrapped in a quilt, was on the kitchen floor.

When she failed to rouse the occupants, Mrs. Myrtle Franklin, of New Bedford, a family friend, summoned police to the house.

Medical Examiner William A. Magill said the couple had been dead three or four days.

Million Armed In Reich Soon, Expert Asserts

Hitler's Army Will Outnumber France's 5 to 3, Frenchman Says.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 14.—Germany's new army strength will outweigh France's forces 5 to 3 in 1936 by the estimate of Leon Archimbaud, military expert of the Chamber of Deputies' finance committee.

Hitler will have between 900,000 and 1,000,000 men under arms on the continent within several months, Archimbaud told his fellow deputies on the committee, while France will have only 654,000 at home and in the colonies.

His figures were in defense of France's war department budget of 6,952,000,000 francs, including 1,924,000,000 francs for new armaments.

Archimbaud, who claims credit for first revealing Germany's secret rearming to the French people, also is celebrated for having declared a year ago the Soviet Russian army would aid France in case of war, the announcement coming before the Franco-Russian mutual assistance pact was negotiated.

"The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, conscious of the German danger," he repeated recently, "is about to make its army the second European army (in importance), which it offers, moreover, to France in case of conflict."

To increase the fighting power of its armed forces, the special arms budget—to be covered by loans—will be spent on:

More light and heavy tanks.
More "high-powered" guns.
Motorization of new divisions.
More trench mortars.
More antiaircraft guns.
Increased protection against gas.
The 125-mile chain of new frontier fortifications.

afford and will avail himself of them."

The remainder of the text, which went to both parties, but which was all that was sent to Sir Eric, said Hoare and Laval were "anxious to take into account Italian aspirations in so far as these can be made compatible with the principles of the covenant of the League of Nations and the respct for Ethiopian sovereignty."

"We are convinced," the telegram continued, "that arrangements which may be come to should be drawn up under the direction of the League's Committee of Five."

The White Paper asserted the peace plan actually was regarded as "suggestion of the Committee of Five." It also was disclosed that the telegram offered, in the event that cession of the port of Assab to Ethiopia proved unacceptable to either party, "the governments of the United Kingdom and France are prepared to facilitate Ethiopia's access to the sea in a manner to be stated by the Committee of Five."

The latter is a special League committee established to further any peace efforts. The reference was assumed to be to the earlier suggestion that Britain would grant Ethiopia a seaport by a corridor through British Somaliland.

Publication of the plan and the White Paper strengthened the feeling in political circles here that the proposal would never go through. Some quarters, however, said Britain is determined on a peaceful solution and, if this effect fails, will try new negotiations.

Press Attacks Plan.

Several newspapers were deunciatory of the plan. The Laborite Daily Herald called it "repulsive hypocrisy." The Daily Mail urged Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin to call a secret session of the House of Commons and reveal the full facts of the situation, showing that in the last few months the nations have been oscillating on the brink of war.

The Daily Telegraph also urged Baldwin to speak out. It was believed he might call a cabinet meeting on Monday to prepare his "Defense."

Sir Samuel Hoare will arrive Monday and probably will see the premier and other cabinet members before Thursday. An injury to his nose received while he was engaged in winter sports in Switzerland was described as "painful and worrying" and he probably will be more or less in secusion.

Capt. Anthony Eden, the British League negotiator, arrived from Geneva this afternoon, but refused to comment on developments.

Armament Discussed.

Berlin, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—It was disclosed officially today that Sir Eric Phipps, British Ambassador, visited Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler yesterday and for an hour held a "frank and confidential discussion." Joachim von Ribbentrop, Hitler's ambassador at large, was present.

U. S. Doctor, Air Raid Veteran, Killed by 'Dud' Bomb in Africa

Hobby, Digging Up 'Dead' Missiles, Fatal to Red Cross Worker.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Addis Ababa, Dec. 14.—Dr. Robert W. Hockman, who stood by his American Red Cross post during all the recent heavy Italian bombings, fell a victim yesterday at Daggah Bur to his only recreation and hobby—digging up "dud" bombs, it was announced today. A dud exploded, killing him.

The courage of the 29-year-old Wheaton (Ill.) surgeon had been an inspiration to Ethiopia warriors on the southern front. While other physicians and Red Cross workers fled from the terrific bombings at Daggah Bur, he moved closer to the front to treat the wounded.

Ethiopians and Americans had feared for his safety. His only concern after each bombing was to let his wife, sent to the safety of Egypt with their son, who was born in October, be notified that he was all right.

After long hours patching up horribly wounded warriors, Dr. Hockman would photograph bombing planes, collect bomb fragments and did up the "duds"—the shells that hadn't exploded. He dug up and buried a 970-pound shell near Jijiga, farther north.

"It's got my name on it, for after the war," he explained to friends.

Dr. Hockman came to Ethiopia two years ago with the United Presbyterian Mission, which conducts the American hospital here. When war broke out he went with a Red Cross unit to the southern front and insisted on going to the most dangerous posts, as far as military authorities would permit.

He made his headquarters at Daggah Bur. Italian planes patrolled the area constantly and bombings were frequent. Often he was the only white man in the town.

Occasionally Dr. Hockman went to Jijiga, considered the front by war correspondents, but "back to civilization" to him, and to Addis Ababa to ask for more funds.

The courage of the fearless doctor was praised by E. A. Chapman-Andrew, British consul at Harar, and Capt. R. H. R. Taylor, special British military attache, on their return recently to Harar after a visit to Daggah Bur.

DR. HENRY HOCKMAN.

Dr. Hockman was educated at Muskingum College, New Concord, Ohio, and received his medical degree from Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill. He is the son of W. H. Hockman, of Wheaton, former missionary in China.

Dr. Bayen to Take Post.

Death of Dr. Robert W. Hockman, on the southern front in Ethiopia, it is expected, will place the chief burden of administration of medical missionary and Red Cross efforts in the fighting zone upon Dr. Malaku Bayen, nephew of Emperor Haile Selassie, and graduate of the Howard University school of medicine.

Dr. Bayen was associated with Dr. Hockman at Muskingum College, in Ohio, from which both were graduated before undertaking the study of medicine. He was recalled to Ethiopia last September when hostilities seemed inevitable. He was accompanied there by his wife, the former Dorothy Hadley, of Cleveland, whom he met as the secretary to V. D. Johnston, Howard University treasurer.

Police Quell Disorders At Pro-Italian Meeting

New York, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Minor disorders accompanied an Italian-American mass meeting in Madison Square Garden and a simultaneous demonstration by anti-Fascist groups outside tonight.

Six hundred police, sent to the Garden in fear of possible riots, kept order among the 2,000 who milled outside to jeer those going to the meeting. The meeting was called to raise money for the Italian Red Cross. From the demonstrators came shouts of "Down with Mussolini!" They carried banners and threw anti-Fascist literature to those going inside. Several first fights were reported.

Waterways Completion Asked in Resolution

New Orleans, Dec. 14 (AP).—The National Rivers and Harbors Congress tonight unanimously adopted a resolution calling for "prompt appropriation of sufficient funds" for speedy completion of waterways, flood control and water stabilization projects already approved by Army engineers.

The Congress also went on record as recommending the initiation and prompt completion of water stabilization projects in 11 Western States, which include approximately one-third of the country.

Washington, D. C., will be the next meeting place of the congress in April, 1936.

Laval to Make New Attempt To Settle War

Returns to Paris as Attacks by Foes Threaten Overthrow.

By the United Press.

Paris, Dec. 14.—Premier Pierre Laval, faced with almost universal European opposition to his Ethiopian peace plan, including attacks by the left wing opposition at home, returned to Paris from Geneva tonight determined to make still another peace effort, if necessary.

On the way back to Paris, Laval stopped off at Lyons, hoping to see Edouard Herriot, cabinet member without portfolio and leader of the powerful Radical Socialist Party, who has been reported ready to resign and cause the overthrow of the Laval government.

The meeting did not take place, since Herriot had left for Montpelier for an important speech to 1,200 members of the Radical Socialist Party, at a luncheon tomorrow.

Laval continued to Paris and it was believed he would call a cabinet meeting before he returns to Geneva about Tuesday, planning to thresh out party difficulties and restore cabinet harmony.

Laval upon returning to France apparently found the Radical Socialist opposition less serious than it had been advertised, but Herriot seemed to be doging him and he was unable to make contact for a showdown.

Between now and Tuesday night, when he returns to Geneva, Laval will spend the time mending his own fences and trying to crush the open revolt in the French Parliament against his peace formula. It was carefully explained that the formula is merely an elaboration of the plan for an "exchange of territories" formulated by the peace committee of five of the League of Nations.

Both Laval and Sir Samuel Hoare, British foreign secretary who aided him in formulating the plan, insist they merely sought to make precise the territory to be exchanged.

Both declare that they wash their hands of the formula if the League rejects it, and that they have no intention of forcing it on the League, Italy or Ethiopia.

The impression in Paris today was general that the League will not adopt the plan as written unless both Italy and Ethiopia accept it without reservation.

Rome Will Use Peace Proposal For Bargaining

Wants France and Britain to Clarify Points in Their Program.

By the United Press.

Rome, Dec. 14.—Italy indicated officially today that the Anglo-French peace proposals are not likely to be accepted outright, but more as a bargaining point for future discussion.

Italy, it was announced, has asked France and Britain for clarification of certain points of the program. The Italian reply probably will not be given before the Fascist Grand Council meets next Wednesday.

A government spokesman said the proposals are extremely complex and their study would continue for several days.

The Italian reply would be in no way contingent on any League action regarding the proposals. Italy, the spokesman said, would reply to France and Britain, and not to the League.

Although the League has the final say, the latter two powers have been commissioned to make unofficial feelers to prepare the way for League action.

The spokesman did not divulge what points Italy wants clarified, but informed persons believed Italy would ask specifically what is the eastern frontier contemplated for the northern territory of Tigre which would be surrendered to Italy and joined to Eritrea.

Premier Benito Mussolini, it was believed, is still determined to join Tigre territory with a strip of land extending southward to the proposed new Ogaden-Somaliland frontier, thus joining the Italian colonies of Eritrea and Somaliland.

That, however, would destroy the effectiveness of the proposed corridor giving Ethiopia the port of Assab at the lower end of the Red Sea, between southern Eritrea and French Somaliland. Even if Ethiopia were given Assab as a free port, access to it would have to be through Italian territory.

It was noted that the proposals did not specify an exact eastern frontier for the Tigre region, which, to the Italian mind, does not preclude extending it far to the southeast.

Woman Fliers Rap Exclusion At Miami Meet

Their Race Canceled, They Plead for Opportunity to Display Skill.

By the Associated Press.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 14.—Air women today pleaded for an opportunity to display their skill at Miami's aviation show, but the concluding day's demonstrations of speed and daring aloft were for "men only."

Loudly and vainly Miss Annette Gipson, of New York, one of four women entered for a scheduled handicap race for their sex, protested as "shameful" the cancellation of the event.

Joining Miss Gipson were Miss Alberta Barber and Miss Charlotte Frye, both of Atlanta.

"They've advertised and ballyhooed events for women for months," said Miss Gipson, "and now with some flimsy excuse the officials tell us there won't be any races for women.

"All we can do about it, apparently, is squawk. It's not at all fair. We've sat out here for three days expecting to race."

An American altitude record for planes weighing less than 1,235 pounds was claimed by G. M. "Tex" Rankin, Portland, Ore., who believed he bettered 20,000 feet.

The barograph carried in Rankin's low-wing monoplane must be calibrated at Washington before he will know whether he bettered the existing national record of 18,564 feet, established by Willford G. Moore at Kansas City, Mo., in 1929.

With some abatement of the high cross wind that swept the airport Thursday and Friday, pilots brought out their undersized fast planes for three rousing dashes today about the pylons.

Smoke pouring from his power plant, R. A. Kling of Lamont, Ill., nosed out Art Chester, of Glenview, Ill., to win at an average speed of 239.944 miles an hour the Col. H. R. Green trophy event, the day's outstanding race.

2 Accuse Suspect In Mass Murders

Support Woman's Story in Slaying of Six.

By the Associated Press.

Port Orchard, Wash., Dec. 14.—Witnesses with circumstantial testimony pieced together the State's case today at the trial of Leo Hall, alleged sextuple slayer.

They were called to corroborate the story of Peggy Peterson Paulos, co-defendant and accuser of Hall. She testified she and Hall left Seattle to rob the Frank Flieders at Erlands Point March 28, 1934, and that Hall was injured in a fight which brought death to six persons.

A Bremerton Navy Yard worker, C. K. Long, testified he saw cuts and bruises on Hall's face the morning after the slayings. Everett O. Butts, defense attorney, brought from him an admission he had attempted to collect a reward offered in the case.

Katherine McPhee, attendant at a Seattle safe deposit vault, identified a withdrawal slip she said Hall signed the afternoon before the killings occurred. The State contends Hall obtained a revolver and blackjack from the vault and used them at Erlands Point.

Youth Hitch-Hikes To Reform School

Fled Wisconsin Place in 1934; May Be Freed.

By the Associated Press.

Green Bay, Wis., Dec. 14.—Robert Markley, 19, fugitive from Green Bay Reformatory, hitch-hiked more than 300 miles from Illinois to surrender today.

"I'm wanted for escaping," the youth told a guard at the gate.

On July 5, 1934, Markley walked away from the institution farm after serving a few months on a one-to-three-year term for burglary. Homesickness for his parents, wife and baby motivated him, he explained.

But he spent only 10 minutes with them before he started roaming. A week ago he quit a job when he suddenly "decided to get it over with," Markley said. His previous good record and voluntary return, Superintendent Carl Eklund said, would leave him eligible for parole.

Iowan Warns PWA Men Against Strike

Official Declares They Will Not Get Relief.

Des Moines, Ia., Dec. 14—J. C. Pryor, Relief Administrator, warned tonight that "workers who strike will not receive relief aid" as labor leaders prepared for a meeting to consider a possible Statewide WPA walkout.

J. C. Lewis, State Labor Federation head who called the gathering, predicted more than 500 union and other labor group leaders will take part tomorrow. Union labor has demanded the Works Progress Administration pay prevailing wage rates.

Lewis claimed non-union as well as union workers will walk out if the strike is called. L. S. Hill, State WPA Administrator, has insisted Government regulations will not permit payment of the wage rates asked.

While only a small proportion of the 26,000 persons employed on WPA jobs would be directly responsible to union strike orders, lack of skilled labor would result in stopping some of the projects.

Jones Visits Roosevelt; New Bank Post Hinted

By the Associated Press.

A visit of Chairman Jesse H. Jones, of the RFC, to the White House yesterday stirred speculation that he might have decided whether to become president of the Export-Import banks. Jones told newspaper men, however, this was not discussed.

Although the offer was made by the banks' directors more than two weeks ago upon the resignation of George N. Peek, Jones said he had been out of the city much of the time since the offer was advanced, and had not had "time to look into it yet." He indicated he might reach a decision next week.

Jones said his call on the President was merely to discuss "routine general matters."

New Guild Formed To Further Opera

Philadelphians to Start Branches Elsewhere.

By the Associated Press.

Philadelphia, Dec. 14.—An ambitious program to revive the opera in America and make it popular entertainment has been started by the American Opera Guild, a new organization headed by residents of Philadelphia.

The guild said it would form membership units in large Eastern cities, with a view to furthering opera appreciation. Philadelphia will be the production center. Operas will be cast, costumed, and produced here first, then sent intact to other cities having a guild unit.

The personnel will be entirely American, the guild said. It is planning to produce "Faust" as its first opera on February 6.

Leaders in the movement include Dr. Walter Grigaitis, Rollin W. Van Horn, Jan Rudow and Robert Steel.

Brother of Emil Hurja 'Fills In' at the FHA

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Housing administration today said that Arthur Hurja, brother of Emil Hurja, official of the Democratic national committee, is "filling in" as manager of FHA financial relations.

Hurja, an FHA spokesman said, has not been appointed to the office, and is holding it only pending the designation of a successor to Leslie Baker, who resigned recently to take a position in New York.

Clarendon Gets A State Liquor Store Dec. 30

Two Ministers Will Serve as Semi-Official Observers of Results.

ARLINGTON COUNTY
BUREAU OF THE POST.
Tel. Clar. 509. Clarendon, Va.

A State liquor store will open in Clarendon on or about December 30, it was announced last night by the Alcohol Beverage Control Board. Two ministers of the town will be semi-official observers of conditions the store creates.

That was the agreement worked out on Friday when the Rev. Perry L. Mitchell and the Rev. John H. Pearson conferred with the members of the State ABC Board.

In a telegram received yesterday from T. McCall Frazier, chairman of the board, by Mr. Mitchell, he declared published reports he had agreed to the opening of the store, were not authorized.

In a letter to Frazier made public last night by Mr. Mitchell, he said in part:

"We wish you to know that it is our firm conviction that a liquor store should not be established in Clarendon. We believe that if the facts regarding unlawful sale of liquor in Arlington County at the present time, exist to such a degree that you feel the need of a liquor store to remedy these conditions, these facts should be presented to the Grand Jury and an investigation brought about.

"We believe that conditions will be improved by proper enforcement of law and not by establishing a liquor law."

Harry K. Green, commissioner of revenue for Arlington County, announces the appointment of George Damm, of Ashton Heights, as deputy commissioner of revenue. Damm will take up his new duties January 1, filling the vacancy caused by the election of C. B. Laycock as clerk of the court.

Damm has been a resident of Arlington County for ten years. He is a graduate of National University and a member of the District of Columbia bar. He served two years as president of the Ashton Heights Citizens Association and was a delegate to the Arlington County Civic Federation. He also served with the 111th F. A., twenty-ninth Division, in France.

Damm was connected with the engineering staff of the Arlington Memorial Bridge Commission from 1925 until 1933, when the commission's activities were transfered to the National Park Service. For two years he has served as administrative assistant in the branch of engineering of the National Park Service.

Scheduled activities for Arlington County during the coming week are as follows:

Braden Advises Moves to Curb Centralization

Holds Greater Efficiency in Local Government Is Only Remedy.

By the Associated Press.

Alexandria, Va., Dec. 14.—Greater centralization of power in the State government at the expense of the local governments of Virginia is imminent if local administrators do not improve in efficiency, Roy S. Braden, Arlington County manager, said tonight in an address sponsored by the League of Virginia Municipalities.

The tendency toward centralization is growing, he said, and will be very apparent in the coming session of the General Assembly. He pointed out that the Legislature had already transferred highway authority from the counties to the State, and enumerated proposals to shift control of schools, jails and police as well.

"It is easy to see that there is a great danger that local government in Virginia may soon be reduced to only a name and the localities be stripped of practically all their rights and authority in the administration of their own affairs," the Arlington official asserted.

One reason for the trend, he said, was the "fact that the State and the Federal authorities often do administer government more efficiently than has been done by the local administrators."

He reminded that when the State established the office of auditor of public accounts and books of the counties were audited, there was "undeniable evidence" that "the fiscal affairs of the counties had been conducted with almost unbelievable indifference."

Another reason for the weakness of local government, he said, was the failure of localities to pay their officials salaries that will attract the highest class of men to these offices.

Y. M. C. A. Elections Planned Tomorrow

Activities to Be Discussed; Dinner Also Scheduled.

Officers and directors of the Young Men's Christian Association will be elected tomorrow at the organization's annual meeting in the Central Y. M. C. A. Building, Eighteenth and G streets northwest.

A meeting of the board of managers will precede the annual election. A dinner also will be given, with James P. Schick, president, presiding.

A special committee headed by George A. Lewis will present nominations. Plans for growth and expansion of association activities will be discussed.

CCC Camps Reduce Illiteracy Percentage

By the Associated Press.

Howard W. Oxley, director of CCC camp education, reported to Director Robert Fechner yesterday that a survey of the corps undertaken in July showed 7,369 illiterates in camps, of whom 5,406 were now being taught to read and write.

"It was found that 78 per cent of the illiterates were under 25 years of age; 5 per cent between 26 and 35 years of age and 16 per cent were over 35 years of age," he said.

"Of the total number of illiterates, 21 per cent of them had never had any schooling whatsoever before reaching the CCC; 68 per cent of them had had only from one to four years of previous instruction.

Newlyweds Plant Trees.

Berlin, Dec. 14 (AP).—A move to harness Cupid to the applecart of increased fruit production in Germany has been started by the community council of Nieder-Florstadt, in Hessia. An ordinance makes it obligatory for a newly married couple to plant at least one fruit tree in honor of the wedding.

Prince Georges Units Arrange Christmas Aid

Baskets of Food, Toys and Clothing Collected for Relief of Needy.

Comprehensive plans for relief of the needy in Prince Georges County, Md., during the Christmas season are being rounded out by organizations in all sections of the suburban area.

Efforts are being made by service clubs, civic organizations, schools, American Legion posts, as well as the Prince Georges County Welfare Board, to make the holidays as happy as possible for less fortunate persons.

The Kiwanis Club is soliciting funds to furnish 150 Christmas baskets. William Bowie is chairman of the committee in charge, assisted by Arthur C. Keefer, John S. White, Dr. William S. Moore, Harry D. Eisenhauer, J. Walter Richards, J. Robert Sherwood and County Officer Warren E. Peake.

Cash contributions may be sent or left with Bowie at the Prince Georges Bank & Trust Co., Hyattsville, or Sherwood at the same bank in Mount Rainier.

The Arcade Theater at Hyattsville will co-operate with the Kiwanis Club. Its director, Sidney Lust, and manager, David Ginsburg, have announced a matinee to be held December 21, at 10 a. m., the admission to which will be a toy, article of clothing or article of food.

The annual relief drive by students at the University of Maryland, will be climaxed by a Victory dance Wednesday at 8 p. m. Clothes, toys and money have been collected by the students.

Co-operating with the Maryland students are the College Park Relief Board, Mrs. Charles O. Appleman, chairman, and the Associated Charities of Hyattsville and Vicinity, Mrs. Retta Morris, chairman.

Food and toys will be provided to less fortunate persons by the Men's Club of Colmar Manor and Cottage City. Members of the organization are canvassing the section for donations. Henry Caspare, chairman, R. A. Danby, John Secrest and George Randolph comprise the committee in charge.

Every student of the Bladensburg Junior High School will be asked to contribute an article of food for a needy family. Mrs. W. S. Bartoo, welfare chairman, will receive donations. An entertainment will be held Thursday at 8:30 p. m.

State Senator Lansdale G. Sasscer of Prince Georges County, president of the Maryland Senate, and M. Hampton Magruder, collector of internal revenue for the Maryland district, were the principal speakers at the annual banquet of the 19th District Democratic Club of Riverdale last week at College Park.

A Sasscer-for-Governor boom developed when Magruder spoke of the Senator as being well fitted for the post of the State's chief executive. Many of the speakers referred to Sasscer's work in the last session of the Legislature as equipping him for the position.

Improved traffic supervision on the Baltimore boulevard was urged by the newly organized Berwyn District Civic Association at its monthly meeting last week.

Maryland State police officials will be asked to better road conditions on the boulevard, as well as on Central avenue, Berwyn and the Branchville road.

The school committee reported it was co-operating with other organizations and officials of the Suburban Resettlement Administration in efforts to have a high school established in the Berwyn-Branchville area.

Funds were appropriated to begin work on local streets under direction of the town improvements committee. The group will seek betterment of other county roads in the vicinity by the State roads commission.

The Rotary Club of College Park will hold a ladies' night dinner-dance Wednesday night at the Continental Hotel, Washington.

A resolution in opposition to the proposed legalizing of gambling in Prince George's County, Md., has been adopted by the Hyattsville Ministerial Association.

Wanderlust Meeting.

Members of Washington Wanderlust Travel Club will meet at 8 o'clock Tuesday night at 1350 Jefferson street northwest. Miss Helen Devine will speak on "Ireland." Music will be furnished by Miss Barbara Bocorcelski.

Fairfax Welfare Head Strives To Fill Every Empty Stocking

Drive Is on for Toys and Food for Distribution to the Needy.

FAIRFAX BUREAU OF THE POST.
P. O. Box 245. Fairfax, Va.
Phone Alexandria 43-F-31.

The board of public welfare of Fairfax County is endeavoring to see that no persons, especially children, are forgotten this Christmas, Mrs. Pearl M. Edler, county welfare superintendent, announced yesterday.

In the annual appeal of the welfare board for clothing, food and toys to be given the needy at Christmas, Mrs. Edler requests that all organizations and persons who plan to co-operate in the work get in touch with her office at Fairfax as soon as possible.

Already a large number of the churches, home demonstration clubs, school and civic leagues, lodges and private individuals have announced their intention to donate, and this promises to be the best Christmas for the unemployed and needy of the county in a number of years, Mrs. Edler declared.

An effort will be made to prevent duplication of gifts, and the welfare department has asked that all desiring to contribute directly to some family to notify the local office. Likewise any organization or person wanting the names of needy persons may secure them at the welfare office.

Collection Provided.

Contributions or gifts should be sent direct to the county welfare office, but those unable to send gifts may advise the office or any of the following members of the welfare board, who will make arrangements for the collections: Mrs. Russell A. Lynn, of Herndon; Mrs. William J. Cleveland, of Seminary; Mrs. J. Hunter Mack, of McLean; the Rev. Herbert A. Donovan, of Fairfax; J. W. Brookfield, of Springfield; Miss Sarah E. Cox, of Woodlawn, and W. H. Richards, of Clifton.

Mrs. Edler announced that she has four children, a girl, 8, and three boys, 7, 5 and 3 years old, whom she is attempting to place for Christmas or for adoption.

The Right Rev. Henry St. George Tucker, D. D., Bishop of Virginia, will visit Falls Church today and will preach at the 11 o'clock service at the Falls Church. He will confirm a class of six.

Activities scheduled in the various sections of Fairfax County, Va., this week follow:

Nurses' Group Holds Banquet In Alexandria

8th District Unit Observes 35th Year of Journal Publication.

THE WASHINGTON POST BUREAU.
907 Prince St., Alexandria, Va.
Phone Alexandria 523.

A banquet of the Eighth District Nurses Association was held Friday night in the George Mason Hotel, Alexandria, commemorating the thirty-fith anniversary of the publication of the American Journal of Nursing.

Miss Ethel Smith, of Craigsville, Va., inspector of nurse training schools and secretary of the Virginia Nurses Association, spoke on the value of the journal to all nurses.

Mrs. Jessie Whitzell Farris, executive secretary and treasurer of the association, also spoke on the work of nurses in Virginia. She reported there are 1,923 registered nurses on the rolls, and the association gained 200 members in 1935.

The address of welcome was given by Dr. W. Lewis Schafer, city health officer, and Mrs. Mae Cavanaugh Bowman was toastmistress, while Miss Smith was introduced by Mrs. Ayleene Guthrie, president of the Eighth District Nurses Association.

Tribute was paid Miss Fanny Carter, superintendent of the Alexandria hospital.

The program was in charge of Mrs. Marian Howard, Miss Velma Deacon, Mrs. Hazel Allyn, Mrs. John W. Tuloch, Mrs. Mae C. Bowman, Miss Jewell Parkin and Mrs. Sue Brown. Vocal solos were given by Mrs. Evelyn Howard Sheridan, and violin numbers by Miss Grace Powell, both accompanied by Mrs. D. C. Book. A birthday cake was the gift of Miss Clara Louise Talbott, the nurses' registrar.

Mrs. L. W. Van Bibber, chairman for the annual Christmas seal sale, is urging that all who received the seals through the mail respond more promptly. The allocation for Alexandria, to permit establishment of a tuberculosis clinic in the city, is $1,500, and so far sales have amounted to only $719.63.

Members of different organizations are serving as salesmen.

Announcement was made yesterday that the cornerstone of the new hospital at the Masonic Home of Virginia, near Richmond, was the gift of Thomas Chauncey, of Alexandria. The hospital is the gift of Dr. Robert South Barrett, of Alexandria, past master of Alexandria-Washington Lodge of Masons, and Mrs. Barrett, in memory of their youngest son, Robert South Barrett, 3d, who died in infancy.

Plans are being considered by the city council of Alexandria for selecting two physicians to the poor, the custom of many years, although in recent years the city health officer has been required to attend the poor of the city, to the detriment of his regular duties.

A capacity audience attended the "toy matinee" at the Ingomar Theater yesterday, and each patron provided a toy toward the Christmas party in the armory for approximately 600 underprivileged children. This party will be staged on Christmas Eve, under ausipces of Alexandria Lodge, No. 758, B. P. O. Elks.

Chicken-Coop Mission's Founder Is Honored

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., Dec. 14.—A bronze plaque in memory of Henry Weinberg, local business man, will be unveiled tomorrow at Point Salem Gospel Mission, near here, a non-denominational mission which Weinberg made possible. R. Paul Smith, president of the Potomac Edison Co., will make the dedicatory address.

The mission was started in a renovated chicken-coop, and Weinberg later donated land and contributed toward the erection of the new mission, which now has an enrollment of 117.

Montgomery Board Will Hear Plea to Re-Zone School Area

Citizens Protesting Erection of Stores Near Montgomery-Blair High School Ask Property Be Changed to Residential 'A.'

MONTGOMERY COUNTY BUREAU OF THE POST.
1111 Oak Avenue, Silver Spring, Md.
Telephone, Shepherd 2363.

The Montgomery County Commissioners will sit as a board of zoning appeals at 7 p. m. tomorrow in the Silver Spring county building at a public hearing on petitions to rezone property adjacent to the Montgomery Blair High School in Silver Spring.

The petitions for rezoning were filed by the Parent-Teacher Association of the high school and seek to have the property changed to residential "A" in order to prevent erection of stores near the school. The land at present is zoned for commercial use.

Re-zoning of the property to residential was unanimously recommended by the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission following a hearing November 12.

Eugene A. Smith, owner of the property, has secured building permits however, and through counsel has filed mandamus proceedings to compel the park commission to approve plans for the stores so that work can proceed. Approval has been withheld by the park commission pending a decision from the county commissioners, whose ruling is final unless reversed by the circuit court.

Fortified by the recommendations of the park commission and strong backing by the county board of education, the Parent-Teacher Association has enlisted the aid of 11 local civic organizations in its fight to force the re-zoning.

J. Bond Smith, chairman of a special committee of the Parent-Teacher Association, will present resolutions favoring the re-zoning at tomorrow night's meeting that bear the indorsement of virtually all of the local civic organizations.

Owners of the property are defending the present commercial zoning by declaring that only high-type stores will be built. It is further contended that the land was zoned for commercial use several years before the land for the schoolhouse was purchased and that factor should have been considered before the school was built.

Dr. Harry S. Mustard of Baltimore, medical director for the Eastern health district, and lecturer on public health for the Johns Hopkins University school of Hygiene, was guest speaker at the annual dinner meeting of the Montgomery County council on social welfare last night at the Brooke Farm Tea House.

Dr. Mustard said control of tuberculosis was more important than control of typhoid and scarlet fever and attributed the major portion of tuberculosis infection to poor housing conditions.

Dr. V. L. Ellicott, health officer for Montgomery County, led a round table discussion, in which approximately 35 representatives of Montgomery County's social and welfare agencies participated.

Mrs. Joseph R. Bateman has been appointed by Mrs. Mildred Burr, president of the auxiliary to the American Legion Post, No. 28, Takoma Park, Md., to organize a junior auxiliary. The group will consist of girls of grammar and high school age. Any girl whose parents, brothers or sisters are qualified for membership to the American Legion or its auxiliary may join.

A program of Christmas music by the Youth Singers, a group of students from the Takoma-Silver Spring (Md.) Junior High School, featured a meeting this week of its Parent-Teacher Association. The numbers included several Christmas carols sung in Italian and German.

A constitution was presented by a committee headed by Mrs. Ronald McDonald and the name, "The Parent-Teacher Association of the Ta-Koma-Silver Spring Junior High School" was adopted. Announcement was made that the school would present a play "Crazy to Reduce" in the auditorium next Tuesday.

Resolutions approving a 2-cent tax on property in the area served by the Silver Spring Public Library for the support of the library, and urging the immediate construction of a sidewalk on the east side of the 8500 block of Georgia avenue were adopted by the Woodside Park Civic Association at its December meeting.

Committee appointments made at the meeting were as follows: Victor E. Grotlisch, chairman of education, to replace Morrison Clark, resigned; Mrs. Robert Watson, chairman of social service, and C. A. Greenleaf, delegate to the advisory council of the Silver Spring Public Library Association. Sixteen applications for membership were approved.

Irving C. Root, chief engineer of the Maryland National Capital Park and Planning Commission, spoke on plans of the commission for the development of the Montgomery County park system and explained the proposed bill of the commission which would provide a special tax for sections desiring the construction of playgrounds or parks. Root said the bill will be brought before the State Legislature if sufficient sentiment is expressed in its favor. He also talked on the development of Sligo Creek Valley with P. W. A. funds.

"White Gifts for the King," a Christmas pageant, will be presented at the Rockville Baptist Church tonight at 7:45 o'clock. The service will include special Christmas music by both the senior and junior choirs, and the dramatization of the Christmas story Members of the Sunday school and the church will take part in the program. Gifts will be distributed to the needy before Christmas.

J. H. Bilbrey, president of the volunteer fire department of Takoma Park, Md., announced yesterday that a get-together dinner for members of the department and the auxiliary will be held Wednesday at 7 p. m. at the fire hall, Carroll avenue.

The county building at Silver Spring, Md., will be discontinued as an elimination station for issuing permits to automobile owners effective January 1, it was announced yesterday by the Commissioner of Motor Vehicles. Bethesda has been designated as the only suburban examination station in Montgomery County. Examinations will be held there on alternate Thursdays. County Commissioner Coughlan said yesterday he will make every effort to retain Silver Spring as an examination station and has asked Commissioner Rudy to explain his reasons for the change.

Rev. Francis Goodall, director of the Bengales Foreign Missions, will give an illustrated lecture on "Missions of India" at a stag party and social meeting of Forest Glen Council, Knights of Columbus, Tuesday night in Rosensteel Hall, Forest Glen, Md.

The dramatic club of the Woodside Methodist Episcopal Church will present the Christmas drama "Why the Chimes Rang", today at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the church, Woodside, Md. The program is under the direction of Mrs. Walter Crossan.

Mrs. Mowatt Windham was elected vice president of the Laytonsville Parent-Teacher Association at the December meeting. The association voted to contribute $5 to the fund for establishment of a permanent dental clinic in the county schools. Plans were discussed for enlarging the school auditorium stage and to purchase new stage curtains.

Mary Lou Riggs was elected president of the "Go to Church" Club, of Laytonsville M. E. Church, at a meeting held in the home of the Rev. and Mrs. W. A. Ledford. Other officers elected were: Irene Howes, vice president; Hazel Riggs, secretary; Edith Seek, treasurer. A group from the club will sing Christmas carols through the village Christmas Eve as has been their custom for several years.

Takoma Lodge, No. 29, F. A. A. M., and Chillum Castle Lodge, No. 186, F. A. A. M., will attend the annual trestle board service at the Takoma Park Baptist Church Sunday night at 7:45 o'clock. The Rev. William E. La Rue, pastor of the church, will give the sermon. Oliver W. Youngblood is Master of Chillum Castle Lodge and Roland E. Jones is master of Takoma Lodge. The two lodges will meet at the church, Aspen street and Piney Branch road, at 7:30 p. m.

Bullitt Returns From Moscow To Give Report

Ambassador Says He Just Came for Holiday With Daughter.

By the Associated Press.

Ambassador William C. Bullitt came to Washington on holiday from Moscow yesterday, submitting first hand reports of American-Soviet relations, which have cooled considerably in recent months.

What he told his State Department colleagues was not revealed, but the envoy, whose home is in Philadelphia, did take occasion to deny published reports that he might resign his post.

Bullitt last August delivered at the Kremlin Secretary Hull's sharp protest to Moscow that the seventh world congress of the Communist Internationale there involved interference in American internal affairs in "flagrant violation" of the Soviet government's pledge against such activity.

The ambassador also received from the Soviet government its formal reply "rejecting" the American protest and disclaiming responsibility for anything done by the Communist Internationale.

First Visit Since Then.

It is Bullitt's first visit to the United States since that exchange was capped by Secretary Hull's warning that future friendly relations between the two countries depended solely on the Soviet's strict adherence to its pledges.

This was followed by a sharp reduction in the personnel of the American embassy in Moscow.

Alexander Troyanovsky, the Soviet Ambassador to the United States, also is in Russia at this time on holiday.

Although he had luncheon yesterday with Gov. George H. Earle, of Pennsylvania, Bullitt said there was no truth to rumors that he might give up his diplomatic post to become an official in the Keystone State government.

His only purpose in coming home, he said, was to spend Christmas with his small daughter, Anne. He said he would return to Moscow on January 29.

Soviet Suit Up This Week.

Lawyers for the United States will go before the Supreme Court this week to argue in behalf of the Soviet government in a case that has brought from the opposition an attack upon the agreement by which President Roosevelt recognized Russia.

The Federal Government will defend the right of the Soviet to dissolve and confiscate the property of three Russian insurance corporations which operated in New York for many years before the Russian Revolution and the founding of the Soviet Republic in 1917.

Under the agreement in 1933 by which the President granted recognition to the Soviet, this government asserted all assets of these dissolved corporations passed to the United States.

$3,000,000 At Stake.

Nearly $3,000,000 remaining from these Russian corporations is involved in the odd case, which presents numerous technical conflicts of international law, a clash between Federal and State courts, questions of executive power and individual property rights and other fine legal points. The government has lost its claim to these remaining assets in lower Federal courts.

The New York State courts declined to recognize the Soviet dissolution and confiscation as "contrary to the public policy of the State of New York and shocking to its sense of justice."

Solicitor General Reed, however, told the Supreme Court "the public policy of this country is not concerned with the manner in which the Russian government deals with its corporations, their stockholders and foreign creditors.

"U. S. Not Concerned."

"The Soviet government is a duly recognized foreign sovereign and as such its decrees and acts relating to property and the rights over which it has jurisdiction, are given full force and effect by our Government and by our courts.

"We are in no way concerned with the wisdom or justice of that appropriation by the Soviet government: that is purely a matter between the Soviet government and its own nationals."

Louis H. Pink, New York insurance superintendent, and the trust companies which now control the disputed funds, vigorously opposed the Government's claim.

Pink told the high court "the executive cannot confiscate private property" and strongly denied the Government's contention that Russia had "dominion" over the New York Russian companies. This, Pink asserted, was "stretching legal fiction to absurdity."

Mrs. Roosevelt Target of Jibes At Own Party

But It's All in Fun as She Fetes 'Widows' of Gridiron Club.

entertained at the White House with a precedent-breaking masquerade on the night of the gridiron dinner

Last night she stood at the doorway to the East Room as she greeted her guests. She made an attractive picture in the silken, rustling costume of a mid-Victorian grande as she reseived alone the several hundred women, some of whom were in costume which added to the color of the brilliant scene.

Wives of Cabinet members were dressed in mid-Victorian fashion, necessary for the "off-the-record" stunt they presented with Mrs. Roosevelt. Women Government executives were in fanciful dress and Gridiron Widows wore the costumes they needed to portray certain characters in the various skits.

The newspaperwomen had been told costumes for them were optional. That was all the encouragement they needed to appear in conventional evening gowns.

The formal East Room has been transformed for the occasion into an intimate theater with an evergreen-banked stage at one end. Here the First Lady and Cabinet wives presented their act. Here the 50 Gridiron Widows paraded through a series of piquant sketches which satirized everything from press conferences to boondoggling.

"Royal Press Conference."

The "Roosevelt Ray," manipulated by Dr. New Deal, introduced the playful widows to their public. The good doctor was shown administering the life-giving ray to agencies which never before existed. They became so lively they threatened to run away with him. Dr. New Deal promptly locked them up until after election day.

Probably the most amusing skit and certainly the one that seemed to entertain Mrs. Roosevelt most was "A Royal Press Conference." With a foreign court as its setting, it revealed a noble-appearing King in ermine robe and elegant satin breeches replying to routine journalistic questions about grouse shooting, the outlook and the Tories. The King's statements to the press were dictated by his prime minister.

Then came the Queen's chance to take part in the conference. With a flourish she grabbed a microphone and made a radio speech which, in tones and phrases, sounded remarkably like Mrs. Roosevelt's talks on the air.

Another skit, presented with "Hearts and Flowers" sound effects, told the story of "The Wages of Sin" or 'Nellie's Reedsville Project." There was Little Nell carrying the shawl-wrapped project in her arms. There was the dastardly, black-mustachoied villian from Indianapolis who tried to steal the precious bundle. But with the help of Nell's poor old Dad and her yokel boy friend, virture eventually triumphed.

Other satirical sketches included "The March of the New Deal" which portrayed in a galloping pantomime events of the last four years and ended with the Question Mark of 1936; and "Visiting Firemen," the finale.

The romance of the Boondoggler and his Bride from the TVA ended in song with:

"Take us out to the Zoo Park,
Take us out to the Zoo.
Show us the tenants who dwell in a cage
And live in contentment to happy old age.
And no one envies the White House
For there, quite sad to relate,
It's one, two—four years you're out.
And at most it's only eight."

The stars of the "Visiting Firemen" entered in a sightseeing bus and then searched the premises for the lost Constitution as they went "Rubbernecking Through the White House in a Horse and Buggy Way."

Informal Atmosphere.

At the conclusion of the entertainment the one-night actress filed across the stage while the newspaperwomen guests wrote on slips of red, green and blue papers their choices for first, second and third prizes. The colored slips were Mrs. Roosevelt's idea. She thought it would make the vote counting easier for White House attaches. A good many of the guests suggested the same plan be used for national elections.

Those who had planned the Gridiron Widows' skits were Mrs. Ulric Bell, wife of the president of the club; Mrs. Edwin W. Gableman, wife of the vice president; Mrs. J. Harry Cunningham, wife of the secretary; Mrs. J. Frederick Essary, Mrs. Raymond Clapper, Mrs. Byron F. Price, Mrs. William Raymond, Mrs. Lowell Mellett, Mrs. Raymond P. Brandt and Mrs. J. F. M. Bowie.

After prizes were awarded supper was served at small tables in the state dining room, the red parlor and the private dining room.

Mrs. Roosevelt and her daughter, vivacious Mrs. John Boettiger, went from room to room, stopping to chat with acquaintances at table after table. And while the guests lingered in the friendly, informal atmosphere, the President returned from the Gridiron dinner and slipped up the "back way" to his quarters in the White House.

Johnson Calls Landon Best G.O.P. Candidate

Billings, Mont., Dec. 14 (AP).—Gen. Hugh Johnson, former NRA administrator, remarked in an interview here today that Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas, "appears to be the most formidable candidate for the Republican nomination for President."

"However," he added, "no doubt Roosevelt will run again and be elected."

Soviet Crash Kills 4.

Moscow, Dec. 14 (AP).—The pilot and three passengers were found dead today in the wreckage of a Soviet civil airplane which crashed in mountains near the town of Karkaralinsk.

Boston Forbids Broadway Hit On Stage There

'Children's Hour' Banned on Moral Grounds, Says Censor.

By the Associated Press.

Boston, Dec. 14.—A New York dramatic success, "The Children's Hour," was added tonight to the long list of plays banned in Boston as indecent.

Praised by the full roster of New York crtiics, and now in the thirteenth month of its Manhattan run, the three-act tragedy of life in a girls' boarding school, was to have been presented here for a month under auspices of the American Theater Society, an affiliate of the Theater Guild.

Boston's censorship, which has doomed numerous plays and hundreds of books found acceptable elsewhere, was invoked by Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield.

He declared he was "unalterably opposed" to the play's production here after reading it and a report of the city censor, Herbert L. McNary, who saw it in New York.

"The Children's Hour," explained McNary, "has been identified with a theme that would automatically bring it to the attention of the Board of Censors.

"The theme centers about homosexuality and nothing could be done with the play to relieve it of this."

The Mayor "cracked down" on the play despite the offer of the producer, Herman Shumlin, to bring the scenery and entire cast of sixteen here next week at his own expense for a private preview so that the Board of Censors could give first-hand judgement.

The play, written by Lillian Hellman, was to have been opened here January 6, backed by a distinguished subscription list of 5,000 regular patrons of The Theater Guild and Theater Society.

The play's tale is that of two headmistresses of a girl's school about whom students circulate unsavory and false rumors in resentment at discipline. Although the preceptresses are cleared in the last act, one commits suicide.

Dr. Clinchy to Discuss Religion, Birth Control

The Rev Russell J. Clinchy, pastor of Mount Pleasant Congregational Church, will address the birth control luncheon meeting Tuesday noon in the Women's City Club.

Dr. Clinchy, who is director of the Council for Social Action of the Congregational Churches, is the second speaker to appear at the luncheon series, opened last week by Dr. Prentiss, Washington physician. Dr. Clinchy will discuss "Religious Aspects of Birth Control."

Goldfish as Cure for Nerves Advised by Pet Shop Dealer

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, Dec. 14.—The next time you're nervous, keep an eye on your goldfish.

That's the advice of Gates A. Halfin, owner of a pet supply house here.

"Hospitals and doctors buy hundreds of goldfish to keep their patients' minds occupied," said Halfin today. "Shutins forget their troubles watching the fish swim back and forth."

The veteran dealer asserted the Nation's pet business has benefited by the depression. He estimated the sale of canary birds, cats and goldfish had tripled during the last five years.

"People are staying at home more now," he explained, "and they buy pets to keep amused—after they get tired of playing cards and listening to the radio."

The end of the police dog's reign as household favorite was viewed as a good thing by Halfin, who wishes that the flair for monkeys as pets would have an even quicker end.

"Police dogs or monkeys are too dangerous to keep around the home," he observed. "It's all right for a Joe Louis or a Jack Dempsey to have a police dog, but the average man or woman has no business trying to lead so strong a dog about publicly on a leash.

"As for monkeys—why anyone would want an animal like that around is beyond me. They belong in a cage. They never were and never will be pets. They're uncleanly, disease carrying and too mean tempered to trust near children."

Halfin said the "dog of the future" is the Black Cocker Spaniel, a "mild, gentlemanly dog, safe for children." The most stylish dogs, however, he admitted, are still the chic little Scotty, the debutante's delight, and the Zeppelin-shaped daschund.

"Women as a class like cats better than dogs because the dog is too impetuous—he's like a headstrong man. An old maid, in fact, all women, prefer a pet that will wait to be fondled. A dog wants to be petted whenever he takes a whim, but the cat is content to wait until you stroke it."

Cult Carries On Despite Prison Terms for Two

Prosecutor Convinced He Has Broken Up Polygamy Ring in Arizona.

By the Associated Press.

Short Creek, Ariz., Dec. 14.—Sanhedrin cult leaders tonight decided to carry on with their colony here despite a prosecutor's assertion the polygamy conviction of two members would break up the strange order.

"I don't believe the convictions will have any effect—other than to cement the colony more firmly than before," said J. W. Musser, of Salt Lake City. He is treasurer of the common-law trust which operates the colony on a socialistic basis.

"I don't think there are any people here now who are breaking the laws," said John Y. Barlow, the cult's bishop. He added they would continue agricultural development.

Wants Federal Inquiry.

County Prosecutor E. Elmo Bollinger asserted the convictions would "obliterate" the order, but said he could name "more than a dozen men beyond my jurisdiction who have two to five wives each and as many children."

Bollinger suggested a Federal investigation, saying many of the "plural wives" were being supported by Government relief.

The colony leaders left behind them in jail at Kingman, I. C. Spencer and Price Johnson, cultists convicted of "open and notorious cohabitation" with "plural wives."

In bidding good-by to the leaders, Spencer and Johnson urged continuance of the colony program. The convicted men are under sentence to 18 months to two years in prison.

"Proud of Polygamy."

"I have no fear of imprisonment," said Johnson, who seven years ago took a barefoot 15-year-old girl for his "plural wife."

"If I have violated State laws," he added, "I have followed the laws of God. My father went to jail in Utah many years ago on this same charge and I am willing to do so to uphold my religion."

"I am a polygamist, my father was a polygamist, my grandfather was a polygamist and I am proud of it," Spencer said.

The colony leaders said they believed the fight has just started. Not until a ruling of hte highest court has been obtained, Musser said, will the polygamists acknowledge defeat.

Housewife Found Murdered on Beach

Body Wrapped in Fur Coat, Shoes Are Missing.

By the United Press.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Wrapped in a fur coat and fully clad except for her shoeless feet, the body of Mrs. Rama Barreras, attractive 28-year-old blonde, was found today on the shore of Lake Michigan.

She had been shot through the right temple.

Police, mystified by the crime, said the slaying apparently took place after a struggle. The young housewife's clothing was awry and a wound in her left hand indicated she had sought to protect herself from the bullet which pierced her head.

Two PWA workers, John Rossit and James Riley, found the body. She was identified by Mrs. Mabel Holmes, housekeeper at the apartment building in which she lived.

The beach at the section where the body was found lies a few hundred feat east of Lake Shore drive. Witnesses recalled that an automobile had been parked on the beach for a time last night but no one heard a shot or any disturbance.

Cuban Boat Off to Sea On Clew in Kidnaping

Havana, Dec. 14 (AP).—As newspapers here advanced the theory that Nicolas Castano, wealthy Cuban kidnaped last Monday and held for $500,000 ransom, was a captive aboard a yacht at sea, the gunboat Yara was ordered out at Matanzas hurriedly tonight under secret orders.

informed sources said they believed the vessel had been ordered to some north coast point.

Cars of Future To Have Bodies Like a Whale's

Tear-Drop Stream-Lining Theory Is False, Says Stanford Expert.

By the Associated Press.

Palo Alto, Calif., Dec. 14.—"The streamlined automobile of the future will be shaped more like a whale than a tear drop," says Prof. Elliott G. Reid, Stanford University aerodynamics authority.

"No car is likely to be manufactured in the shape of a freely falling drop of liquid," Reid said today, "because such a drop is spherical, not ellipsoidal with a tapering tail as is sometimes pictured."

The aerodynamics engineer, who tests motor cars and airplane models in Stanford's big wind tunnel, said slow motion pictures disclosed the liquid drop remains elongated only at the start of its fall. Once free, it soon becomes globular.

"In the whale-shaped car," Reid said, "passengers will be in the front. The motor will be incased in the 'tail.' The danger of injury in a head-on collision probably will be no greater," the young scientist explained, "because of structural improvements.

"Even the four wheels may be inclosed—the rear two at any rate—and there will be no need for fenders or running boards. A sheet of metal will cover the undergear, cutting wihd resistance there to a minimum.

"Automobiles are aerial submarines operating at the bottom of the deepest of all fluid oceans, the ocean of air surrounding the earth," Reid said, "advocating the whale shape."

"Air resistance (as in water resistance where a whale or a submarine is concerned) is unimportant as a car starts from rest, but it soon becomes a vital factor. Tests made in the Stanford wind tunnel show that to overcome air resistance requires one-fourth of the total engine power by the time the car reaches 20 miles an hour, increases to one-half the total at between 35 and 40 miles per hour, and to fully three-fourths at 70 miles per hour.

High Officials And Diplomats Among Guests

Few Are Spared Sallies; Fete Ends With Roosevelt's 'Off-Record' Talk.

speak preceding the President's address.

Under a long-standing club rule, the President's address was not reported.

Few of the distinguished guests, from President Roosevelt down, escaped the ego-deflating attentions of the newspaper correspondents during the dinner, which lasted from 7 o'clock until midnight. Roosevelt spending, the Supreme Court, the American Liberty League, Herbert Hoover and the Republicans, the White House secretariat, utilities companies, William Randolph Hearst, J. P. Morgan, and a host of other public figures and institutions were targets for the thrusts of the Gridiron Club.

At the annual meeting of the club preceding the dinner officers for the coming year were elected as follows:

President, Edwin W. Gableman, of the Cincinnati Enquirer; vice president, G. Gould Lincoln, of the Washington Star; secretary, J. Harry Cunningham, Washington, D. C.; treasurer, J. Fred Essary, of the Baltimore Sun; historian, Ernest G. Walker, of the Boston Herald.

The following members of the executive committee complete the club cabinet: Walker S. Buel, of the Cleveland Plain Dealer; James L. Wright, of the Buffalo News; Raymond Clapper, of The Washington Post.

Hull Among Guests.

Guests included Secretary of State Hull, Attorney General Cummings, Postmaster General Farley and Secretaries Morgenthau, Ickes, Wallace and Roper. Chief Justice Hughes and Associate Justices Vandevanter, McReynolds, Butler, Stone and Roberts saw nine horse and buggy drivers take possession of a new Grecian temple which looked suspiciously like the new Supreme Court Building, despite the sign on one pillar reading "No Roller Skating Allowed."

The Ambassadors of Italy, France, Brazil and China were present and the Ministers from Greece, Bulgaria, Lithuania, Yugoslavia and Egypt.

Governors present were Floyd Olson, of Minnesota; Harold G. Hoffman, of New Jersey; Eugene Talmadge, of Georgia; Harry W. Nice, of Maryland, and A. B. (Happy) Chandler, of Kentucky. Senators included Arthur H. Vandenberg, of Michigan; Daniel O. Hastings and John G. Townsend, of Delaware; Charles L. McNary and Frederick Steiwer, of Oregon, and Francis T. Maloney, of Connecticut. House members present included Representatives Chester C. Bolton, of Ohio; Sol Bloom and John J. O'Connor, of New York; Edward T. Taylor, of Colorado, and Carl Vinson, of Georgia.

Gamblers Appear.

The diners had scarcely taken their seats when a group of club troupers in gambler costumes, danced in, throwing handfuls of $1,000,000,000 bank notes to the guests. They chanted "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo." The most pointed line in the song was the soloist's speculation as to whether ". . nineteen thirty-six would see

The end of a gorgeous spending spree."

When the last greenback had been tossed away the diners settled back to hear a new Gridiron Quartet, which has taken over the stage. Capt. Taylor Branson led his Marine Band Orchestra into the prelude, only to have that disciplined group break down completely amid discordant tootings. They tried it again with no better result.

Floor managers hustled a redcoated discord-maker to the stage for investigation, only to discover that he was the club's latest recruit, Kirke L. Simpson, of the Associated Press, undergoing initiation.

Attorney General Cummings and Secretary Roper were asked to rise.

Ballad to Johnson.

"We present the Attorney General and the Secretary of Commerce in a ballad entitled 'Gone But Not Forgotten,' and dedicated, in the name of a beautiful friendship, to Gen. Hugh S. Johnson," said the announcer.

Two Gridironers, attired in the fashion of the gay '90s, stepped on to do the singing.

"Mr. Bernard Baruch is at the piano," said the announcer.

The tinkling prelude to that old and popular song narrating the touching story of "Frankie and Johnnie" started the singers:

"Franklin and Johnson were buddies,
Lordy, what a friend was Hugh,
Swore he'd be true to Franklin
As long as the skies were blue—
He was our pal, but he done us wrong."

"Then Friendly Critic."

Narration of a gridiron version of Gen. Johnson's transition to the role of "friendly critic" of the New Deal followed, with this conclusion:

"This story has a moral,
Right here where the story ends:
We know what to do with our enemies,
But save us from our friends—
He was our pal, but he done us
wrong."

Presentation of "two well-known members of the White House secretariat," Messrs. Early and Late, gave the Gridironers a chance to place their former press gallery colleagues, Secretaries Early and McIntyre, on their favorite toasting fork.

Back to Old Greece.

Stage hands rushed a set of ornate columns, resembling those that front the new Supreme Court Building, to the stage.

"Our scene is the Acropolis," said the announcer. "A magnificent temple dedicated to justice and costing 11,000,000 drachmas is about to be dedicated. The year is 57 B. C. Nine of the Delphic oracles are about to take possession.

In came a line of nine Grecian warriors in full armor, the first pair bearing reverently a scrolled golden box.

"These nine oracles are the wisest gentlemen in all the world," observed one Athenian.

"But what is in that box?" asked another.

"The sacred foundation of our being," said another.

"It tells us what to do and when to do it," said a third.

"It must be marvelous," said another. "Could I see it "

"Of course not," was the answer. "When anyone examines it, it changes color like a chameleon."

"How can one tell what it means?"

"Once a week revelation is given when wise persons announce what it means—that week. It occurs each Monday afternoon, when the wise ones hand down their decisions."

Solo Description.

A soloist described the thrill of those sessions:

"Oh, its time to take your places,
You'll hear the verdict soon;
It's better than the races,
On a Monday afternoon.
"You'll hear what folks were thinking,
Back in eighteen hundred ten,
And Latin words a-linking
What happens Now with THEN."

"Fellow Athenians," said another citizen, "let me present these nine famous gentlemen:

The Hon. James M. Beck, bencher of the Middle Temple, London; the Hon. John W. Davis, counsel of J. P. Morgan; the Hon. Robert H. McCarter, Public Service Corporation, New Jersey; the Hon. David A. Reed, naval expert; the Hon. Frank J. Hogan, of counsel for Albert B. Fall; the Hon. Frederic R. Coudert, jr., son of the president of the Metropolitan Opera company; the Hon. George W. Wickersham, chairman of a famous face-saving commission."

"And last, but not least, the former chairman of the Association Opposed to the Eighteenth Amendment, the Hon. Juett Shouse—who has a word to say."

Mr. Shouse said it in song:

"I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls
With Davis and Beck at my side,"

he sang, and so on through the tale of riches, of "a high judicial name" to the climax.

'But I also dreamt which pleased me most,
That the duPonts were still the same."

An attendant stepped forward to the mysterious box.

Exhibits Charter.

"Gentlemen, permit me to exhibit the historical charter on which our freedom rests," he said, displaying the parchment. The contributor's list of the American Liberty League!"

It is your duty to protect this sacred document with your life—and to uphold it with your cash," solemnly intoned John W. Davis from his place among the oracles.

"I notice the Constitution has not been mentioned here," commented a citizen. "Is it not true that the Constitution is what the judges say it is?"

"It's supposed to be, but what those judges say ain't necessarily so," said another, and took up the tale in song set to music from the new Gershwin opera, "Porgy and Bess."

"There's circumlocution
In that Constitution,
But tain't necessarily so.

They say you can't change it
Unless they arrange it;
But 'taint necessarily so.

They say that they're wiser
Than Khalif or Kaiser;
But 'taint necessarily so.

Methus'lah lived nine hundred years;
But who calls it livin'
For people to give in To nine men what's nine hundred years?

I'm preachin' this gospel to show
It ain't nessa, ain't nessa, ain't nessa, ain't nessa—
Ain't necessarily so!"

"The rightful occupants of this building now approach," proclaimed a citizen. "These others are mere imposters."

Nine more characters came on in solemn procession. Each wore a linen duster, a battered silk hat and carried a buggy whip.

"Great heavens," called an Athenian, "there must be some mistake. Here's nothing but a lot of buggy drivers!"

"Nevertheless, our destinies rest in their hands and we may see Franklin D. Roosevelt campaigning with a horse and buggy in 1936."

A pair of flag posts from which floated Germany's swastika marked emblem was explained by the announcer:

"We take you to the Olympic games in Berlin, where four famous Americans are about to do their stuff," he said.

On pranced a quartet, bareshanked except for brilliantly colored running trunks and wearing track jerseys and flat-crowned curly-brimmed hats dear to some users of the sidewalks of New York.

Lift Hen Crate.

"The Schechter brothers," shouted the announcers, and the athletes lined up and lifted into sight a crate of live hens. "Mr. Aaron, Mr. Martin, Mr. Alex and Mr. Joseph Schechter."

"Fellow Nordics," declaimed Aaron, "we have come to Berlin to demonstrate our chickens.

"The most famous chickens in the world," chimed in Martin.

"These chickens get 48 cents an hour for running across State lines," Martin informed the diners.

"They ran from Hoboken to Brooklyn with the Attorney General of the United States in hot pursuit," supplemented Aaron.

"Little Eva is a wonderful boid," said Aaron. "You would never know she had been outside the State. She even fooled the Supreme Court!"

"Heil," shouted the whole team.

A dignified stranger, who approached followed by an attendant bearing a large package draped with an American flag, caught the attenion of the four brothers.

"Messrs. Schechter," he said, "I am Ogden Reid, publisher of the New York Herald Tribune. I would like to inspect your wonderful birds."

The hens were enthusiastically pointed out to him.

"Just as I thought," said Reid. "In recognition of the great public service you have performed for the Republican party, the Herald Tribune presents you with this token."

A sweep of hand removed the flag from the box to expose a big rooster in its cage.

"The Schechter strain must never die!" shouted Reid.

"A Midwinter Night's Dream," attributed to Federal Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins, opened with a strange half horse-half man figure bound "to the boondoggle round-up" on the moon.

The spotlight switched to pick a cot out of the dark, with Hopkins moving restlessly in his sleep upon it and a big moon crescent peering down at him from back stage. The boondoggler's chant brought Hopkins to his feet, in long night shirt, tall peaked night cap flopping as he cavorted with delight over his dream.

"At last, at last," he shouted. "What a dream! First I dreamed in millions; then I got to billions—now I'm dreaming in trillions! Won't the President be proud when I tell him a way to spend trillions!"

Ickes Leans Down.

The moon above glowed into life and a strange figure leaned down to peer at Hopkins.

"Heaven's," said the startled dreamer, "it's Harold Ickes!"

"No, its a closer and older friend even than that, Harry," observed the moon figure, "I am the Man in the Moon."

"Just the man I want to see," Hopkins shot back, skipping again in glee. You give me a wonderful idea. Boondoggling on the moon! I can't wait to tell the President."

Hopkins itemized a few projects like a "lunar resettlement problem," "counting holes in the green cheese."

"That's only the beginning," he added to the moon's expression of dismay. "We'll reverse the ocean tides, we'll——"

"I run the tides," broke in the moon.

"You mean you used to run 'em," chuckled Hopkins. "When we get through with Passamaquoddy the tides will be eating out of our hands."

"I'm through with you," stormed the aroused Man-in-the-Moon. "Go back to sleep, Harry."

"Sweet dreams, and a long, long sleep—for, oh, boy, what a headache when you wake up!"

Hearst on Island.

"A desert island where," the announcer said, "Mr. William Randolph Hearst had landed from California on a, world-wide tour searching for a land where he can live without supporting the government," came next. Mr Hearst entered, followed by Arthur Brisbane, Hearst columnist, both showing weariness and Hearst glaring disgustedly at the scanty showing of palm trees that made up the set."

Brisbane tried consoling the publisher with a few literary quotations.

Hearst—"Cut that out, Arthur. It's bad enough to have to read it in print."

Brisbane—"Don't get excited, Mr. Hearst. The tax rebellion is growing. Here come some recruits. Here, Mr. Hearst are Aimee Semple MacPherson, Charlie Chaplin, William Powell, Jimmy Cagney, and, if I'm not mistaken, Col. Robert McCormick, of the Chicago Tribune."

It developed that the newcomers had "fled the United States" to avoid "the exactions of an extortionate administration."

Mr. Hearst discovered in the group "a low fellow in squalid attire."

"Your name, sir," he demanded.

"The name is Jones, or Smith, or Brown," was the answer. "It doesn't matter. I belong to the tax-exempt class you ladies and gentlemen would like to join. I am on the Federal dole."

To that he added a song:

"Oh, I got plenty on nothin'
An' nothing's plenty for me.
I got no job, got no tax,
I got no misery.
I'se receivin' de dole,
I belong!"

At this point a burly figure in approved English fox-hunting "pink" strolled on stage.

Nation's Great Done to a Turn By Gridironers

President Heads the List of Notables 'Panned' at Yearly Dinner.

"If it isn't Mr. J. P. Morgan," said Brisbane.

"You don't pay taxes in the United States, Mr. Morgan," said Hearst.

"I know," blandly answered Morgan. "But it's such a pleasure to hear about them. Anyhow, I must return to England for the fox-hunting."

He caroled as the chorus gave him a galloping, galloping,. galloping support:

"The public babbles, the newspapers bay,
In search of schemes to make me
pay.
'Ho, there, Morgan,' the huntsman
claks,
'Say, have you paid you're income tax?'
Galloping, galloping, galloping, galloping by."

That was enough for Mr. Hearst.

"Let's return to the boats with a few words from Sister Aimee," he said.

"Have faith, Mr. Hearst, have faith," said Sister Aimee. "Those of us who live in the higher brackets must lead our people to the Promised Land where all securities are tax-exempt."

"There's a land that is fairer than day,
And by faith we shall see it afar,
Where there are no more taxes to pay,
And our bonds are forever at par."

"The G. O. P. Follies" were announced as the lights came on to reveal a battered trouper stirring away at a pot a-swing over an open camp-fire.

"Hello, Jim Watson," called a voice as another shabby looking actor came on stage. "What are you cooking?"

"New Deal slumgullion, George Moses," answered Watson, although it was later defined as "Roosevelt chowder made of an ear of corn you plowed under, a piece of pork you didn't raise, a potato you didn't grow."

"Wouldn't it be great if the old Republican troupe could stage in Washington a new edition of the G. O. P. Follies," wistfully said Moses.

"Brand-new stage setting out in front," added Moses.

"But the same old crowd behind the scenes," chuckled Moses.

That led to an inquiry as to who should play the lead role.

"The old star seems to think he'd like to twinkle again," remarked Moses.

"You don't mean Happy Herbert, of Palo Alto?"

"Sure. He's running around rehearsing the part all the time."

In stalked another trouper, clad in moth-eaten coat with fur collar, battered stovepipe hat and traditional heavy tragedian manner. Hand thrust in coat, he declaimed:

"To run or not to run; that is the question.

"The thought of Borah gives me indigestion."

"Are you going to let someone else have the stellar role, Herbert?" demanded Moses.

"Ah, my fellow Americans," said Hoover, "in all history only three men have played that role perfectly—and the other two were Washington and Lincoln."

Later six potential candidates appeared in response to a summons, but all proved to be wearing indentical Hoover masks,

The club's own news reel proved to be a preview of the Presidential inauguration, January 20, 1937, "History Shivering" at the first midwinter inaugural.

A lot of film, funny business both in titles, spoken words and film technique, like fitting one man's voice to another's speaking visage, carried the story along to the inaugural address of "President Norman Thomas, elected on a Socialist ticket and a platform promising to end Communism in Washington, put Wall Street back in the saddle, two potted chickens in every garage, more abundant holding companies and a more abandoned life."

But "President Thomas," strangely enough, started his inaugural in the accents of President Franklin D. Roosevelt, switched to the tones of Al. Smith, switched again to Herbert Hoover's clearly recognizable voice and wound up as Ed. Wynn, the comedian.

To cap it, Andrew Mellon, former Treasury head, came on the screen to appear to be singing in celebration of the Thomas election, "Happy Days Are Here Again," the Roosevelt '32 battle song.

Hoffman Backs Searching Quiz In Bruno's Case

Governor Says All Doubt of Guilt Must Be Ended Before Execution.

By the Associated Press

New York, Dec. 14.—Gov. Harold Hoffman of New Jersey today declared a "searching inquiry" into the case of Bruno Richard Hauptmann, sentenced to die in the electric chair for the kidnap-murder of the Lindberg baby, "is warranted if only to remove all question of doubt as to his guilt."

Interviewed at the National Republican Club, where he addressed a luncheon meeting, the New Jersey Governor said "in the minds of a great many people there is some doubt whether this case has been completely solved."

"I am not interested in establishing Hauptmann's innocence but in seeing that New Jersey can render justice without any suspicion of error," he said.

The Governor defended his action in opening reconsideration of Hauptmann's case when he visited the convicted Bronx carpenter at the prison at Trenton, N. J. He would not, however, disclose the nature of his conversation with Hauptmann and refused to answer a direct question as to whether he indicated he would grant a reprieve.

Hauptmann is sentenced to die during the week beginning January 13.

The question of clemency, the Governor said, is solely in the hands of the court of pardons, of which he is a member. The Governor, however, has the right to grant a reprieve.

Inasmuch as the final say is in the hands of the court of pardons—except in the event Hauptmann's lawyers gain a new trial with any new evidence, if they have it—the Governor declared, "any criticism of my action is wholly unwarranted.

Bruno Is Told Death Date.

Trenton, N. J., Dec. 14 (AP).—Bruno Richard Hauptmann today learned that the week of January 13 has been set for his death in the electric chair.

With grave politeness he thanked the unnamed prison guard who brought him the news, and reiterated his conviction that "something will happen so I won't go to the chair."

Should all of the eleventh hour efforts of his attorneys fail to save him, Hauptman probably will go to the chair exactly a month from today. Although he may be executed any time during the week designated, the custom at State prison is to have executions on Tuesday nights about 8 o'clock.

Edith Maxwell Facing Long Jail Term Can Still Force a Smile

Arthur Ellis, Post Staff.

No . . . not the latest British screen favorite, but Edith Maxwell, facing 25 years in prison. She hasn't lost hope yet . . . She forces a smile or two on her way to court from the jail.

Edith Maxwell Fight Periled By Fund Lack

Unless a fund adequate to cover the costs of an appeal can be raised, Edith Maxwell will be lodged in the penitentiary for a 25-year term without another chance to try to prove she struck her father in self-defense.

The judge who sentenced her has denied her another hearing. Now her chance for justice lies with the Virginia Supreme Court of Appeals. The young mountain school teacher's attorneys want to carry their case to that court. But the funds of Edith Maxwell's family are exhausted. There is no money to pay the lawyers for continuing with the case.

The Post's defense fund in Edith's behalf continued to grow yesterday. Contributions were:

pains around the heart and head," said Dotson.

In their testimony at the trial, Drs. Glenn T. Foust and T. J. Tudor gave the opinion that death was caused by blows on the head.

There was no fracture of the skull, they said, but they expressed the belief that death was caused by a blood clot formed at the base of the brain.

Only one of the three blows, which Edith admits having struck with the high heeled slipper, lacerated the scalp. The other two caused only superficial bruises.

The blow which tore the scalp struck only the outer part of the skull bone, they said, and this blow caused a break in a large vein which resulted in the blood clot.

Attorney Dotson pointed out that the blood clot also might have been caused by an apoplectic stroke.

Earl realizes that any move to disinter the body of his father is going to be resisted by the father's relatives.

"But I can't let their resentment interfere with the hope of my sister's liberty," he added.

Under the Virginia law, a body may be disinterred only upon petition to the court, signed by the nearest relative, which, in this case, is Mrs. Maxwell.

Feeling between the family of Trigg Maxwell and the Dotsons is bitter. The father's relatives resent the actions of Earl, in the fight he is waging for the vindication of his sister.

This community is still buzzing with gossip about the case, which started last July, when Edith allegedly struck the fatal bolws.

First Illness in 103 Yrs. Too Much for Irishman

Belfast, Northern Ireland, Dec. 14 (AP).—His first illness in his lifetime of 103 years proved fatal to James Walker, of Malinmore, County Donegal.

Whisky and tea, he was fond of saying, kept him free from illness. He died longing for the "good old days."

"Everything was cheaper and better," he declared. "The whisky was better and the tea was better. Even the bread was better. The people have changed, too, and changed for the worse."

British Protest Attack Upon Soldier in Egypt

London, Dec. 14 (AP).—An exchange telegraph report from Cairo said that the attention of Tewfik Nessim Pasha, prime minister, was called by the British residency to the alleged unprovoked attack upon a British soldier in a street tonight.

A party of students, the report added, went to the soldier's rescue, beating off the attackers.

cluding the towns of Hobart, Lone Wolf and Mountain View, would be permitted to resume business and go from under the quarantine Monday. When the quarantine was imposed it was for a period of five days. Dr. Adams said he believed it should be retained for an indefinite period.

Physicians hoped that within five days, the period of incubation of the spinal meningitis germ, those that have been infected could be diagnosed. They planned to use serum which usually cuts the mortality rate from a heavy majority to about 30 per cent.

The outbreak was the most serious in the midwest since the World War, when scores of soldiers died in training camps.

In recent months transient camps in Oklahoma, Texas, Missouri and Nebraska have reported the disease.

Children on Program.

and went to front office where he surprised Edward Roberts, a guard at the front door.

"Don't make a move, Don't holler or I'll fill you full of holes," were Metelski's words, Roberts said.

Metelski also ordered the guard to turn over his keys. Then he forced Roberts and another trusty, Ray Trout, into the cell block with Anderson and Hill.

Officials said Metelski went into the office of Warden Alfred H. Puerschner and picked up all the keys he could find, including one to the jail arsenal.

From there he went to the basement and locked up two more trusties, Clifford Shephard and Ray Lamont, the cook and dishwasher respectively. He ordered Semenkewicz, who was also in the basement, to accompany him.

Oklahoma Will Ballot Tuesday on Relief Fund

Oklahoma City, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Oklahomans will go to the polls next Tuesday to decide at a special election whether they will set aside $2,500,000 to care for one-tenth of the State's population.

This sum is needed to provide sustenance to approximately 268,000 persons designated as unemployable and their dependents. The Federal Government had been carrying this load until December 1 when Federal emergency relief funds were curtailed.

L'Haklas Group to See News Reels of Germany

Pastors to Protest Death in Floggings

Public Indignation Service Planned at Tampa.

By the Associated Press.

Tampa, Fla., Dec. 14.—A public service of penitence and indignation tomorrow afternoon will crystallize Tampa's sentiment against the flogging to death of Joseph Shoemaker for which no one has been arrested.

The Tampa Ministerial Association will conduct the service in advance of a grand jury investigation of the killing which starts Monday. The Rev. Walter Metcalf, president of the association, said:

"The meeting is for the purpose of creating a deep moral tone of indignation and penitence and a consciousness deep in our civic sense of the general condition in Tampa."

He did not reveal the "general condition."

Public officials said they were tracking down clews in the flogging of Shoemaker, E. F. Poulnot and S. D. Rogers.

The men were seized by a band of men outside Tampa police headquarters November 30, as they were released after being questioned about alleged communistic activities.

New Trade Board To Delay Meeting

By the Associated Press

George L. Berry, President Roosevelt's co-ordinator for industrial co-operation, yesterday postponed the first meeting of his new industrial council, scheduled originally to meet "within a few days" after Monday's turbulent labor-industry conference.

The time for the meeting will be set sometime this week, it was said at Berry's office.

In view of the coming holidays, observers believed the council probably would not meet before January. The council is to review suggestions from both labor and industry as to how recovery could be accelerated.

Boy Sends Post Toy Fund Cash To Help Needy

will be admitted upon payment of 25 cents.

Those busy Santa Claus aids, the drivers of the Terminal Taxicab Co., answered many calls on "Decatuer 5130" yesterday to bring toys to The Post Toy Fund headquarters in The Post Building. Because the time until Christmas is now so short it is requested that only new toys or those in good condition, which do not need repairing, be sent to The Post Toy Fund.

Progress in the toy fund drive daily is being aided materially by Gordon Hittenmark, WRC announcer for the National Broadcasting Co., co-operating with The Post and Loew's Theater.

For persons unable to attend the toy fund matinee at the Fox, arrangements have been made for depositing toys later in the day at any of the Loew theaters, the Palace, Columbia or Fox.

The S. O. S. sent out by The Post Toy Fund for dolls and more dolls, brought a ready response. As those making up the pacages declared: "No little girl under ten will have a happy Christmas without a doll. There are many little girls on our lists and more are coming in all the time. So buy or send a doll in good condition that you have on hand to The Post Toy Fund and help us meet this real Christmas need."

Three little girls visited The Post Toy Fund and left their favorite dolls to be given to needy children on Christmas eve. "You see," explained one as she gave a last look at her beloved Betsy, "we expect more dolls for Christmas. We just could not bear to think that any girl in Washington would look for a doll on Christmas morning and not find one."

Good neighbors who do not need Christmas toys for themselves are sending in news of families less fortunate than themselves where children will be without toys for Christmas unless aided by The Post Toy and Doll Fund.

One such letter said:

"Here is the name of a family really in need of toys for their children in order to have a little Christmas. They have four children. The husband only makes $16 a week and it is hard for them to get along. They have two boys, one 10, and the other 7, and two girls, one 4, and the other 3 years old. I am sure they will appreciate anything you can send them, as this is a very poor famil."

The Post To Fund got within sight of $300 last night when the day's contribution brought the total up to $262.71. It is hoped by those in charge that the fund will amount to at least $500 by Chrismas eve when it will close for the year.

Cotton Exports Upsurge Noted; AAA Is Jubilant

Officials Cite 1,134,874-Bale Total in November as Answer to Foes.

By the Associated Press.

Sharply increasing cotton exports yesterday were described by AAA officials as part of their long-sought answer to opposition charges that crop control had ruined the nation's foreign agricultural market.

The Commerce Department yesterday reported that exports in November were 1,134,874 bales, or more than twice the 572,359 bales shipped during the same month last year. Secretary Wallace quickly stepped forward to add that the November exports were greater than the past ten-year average for the month—1,117,000 bales.

"While the exports may not continue up to the ten-year average," Wallace said, "we are very much pleased."

Exports for the four months ending November 30 were 2,574,786 bales, an increase of more than 600,000 over the total of 1,894,142 for the same period in 1934.

The November exports of 1,134,874 bales, increased from 711,664 in October this year.

While the estimate of the 1935 crop on December 1 was 10,734,000 bales, and the ten-year average exports were about 8,000,000 bales, Wallace said that "there is plenty of cotton in this country to take care of exports on the basis of the ten-year average."

He noted that last year the export total was 4,800,000 bales, or a drop of about 38 per cent from the average.

Recalling attacks made by New Deal opponents, particularly Gov. Eugene Talmadge, of Georgia, charging that crop restriction had ruined the export markets, more than one official indicated that the export reports might become Democratic campaign ammunition next summer.

Donations to Chest Still Are Arriving

I. C. C.'s $998 Reduces Deficit to $120,000.

Contributions are still arriving at Community Chest headquarters, Director Herbert L. Willett, jr., announced yesterday. Although the campaign closed officially with the audit of December 7, approximately $2,000 has been received since that time.

One of the largest amounts was $998.90. It came from the Interstate Commerce Commission through the governmental unit.

Willett said yesterday he hoped persons who failed to contribute to the campaign would send gifts now so the Chest can come nearer its minimum goal. Final figures show the shortage is $120,000. Unless the minimum goal is reached all 65 agencies in the Chest will be compelled to curtail their work this coming year, Willett pointed out.

Chance Is Chosen Trade Census Head

Ex-Postmaster Will Direct 1935 Survey Here.

Merritt O. Chance, one-time Washington postmaster, has been chosen District supervisor for the 1935 censuses of business and manufactures, it was announced yesterday.

Chance will begin his new duties January 2. He has been connected with the Census Bureau for some time. During the World War, Chance served as chairman of the District of Columbia draft board.

From 1916 to 1922 he was postmaster of the District and at one time was vice president of the Security Finance Corp. Chance is a member of the Washington Board of Trade, the Kiwanis Club and the Cosmos Club.

Charm of Jail Palls After Lottery Victory

Bilbao, Spain, Dec. 14 (AP).—To Jose Sardina Cabal, vagrant, jail seemed best assurance against cold and hunger during the winter months.

His request to be locked up refused, Jose broke a shop window, was happy when he got a three-month sentence. Then a forgotten lottery ticket brought what to him was a small fortune and he sought his release, offering to pay for the window.

"This is not a hotel," the judge told him. "You will have to wait until spring to enjoy your good fortune."

Prison Aid Suspended On Woman's Charge

Jefferson City, Mo., Dec. 14. (AP)—An unnamed guard at the Missouri pentitentiary was suspended today after Clara Fish, 23, serving a life term for murder, declared he was the father of her unborn baby.

Stephen J. Hunter, director of the penal board, said the woman is to become a mother in about three months. The guard denied the charges, Hunter said, but was suspended pending a hearing later.

Wider Powers For District Heads Asked

Proposed Measure Would Take Budget Control From U. S. Bureau.

Commissioners to Seek Broader Authority in Local Matters.

Transmission of the annual District budget directly to Congress by the Commissioners is proposed in a bill drafted for submission by the city heads to the next session of Congress.

The measure would remove the Federal Bureau of the Budget from any consideration to the annual District estimates except to make a recommendation to Congress as to the amount of the annual Federal appropriation.

Control exercised by the Budget Bureau behind closed doors over the annual District estimates has been the subject of complaint and protests by District officials and residents for a number of years. Sharp criticism of the present arrangement was voiced at the last meeting of the Federation of Citizens Associations.

The Commissioners will urge enactment of the provision on the ground that District appropriations are entirely apart from appropriations for Federal departments and bureaus and that their proposal will not lessen Congressional control over municipal expenditures.

"The change," Commissioner Hazen said, "actually would give Congress a greater degree of control over District appropriations than members now have. The inefficiency of the present law is exemplified by the fact that District appropriations for needed works are restricted during the very years when a District surplus is piling up in the Treasury. The House appropriations sub-committee for the District itself criticized the situation a few years ago."

Other Changes Planned.

The budget change is one of several changes incorporated in what is left of the bill proposed last year to broaden and extend the powers of the District Commissioners.

Authority not only to revoke the operating permits of automobile drivers but also to revoke the registration of an automobile also is provided for in the bill. This is aimed at persons who permit use of their cars in violation of regulations and laws. Under present law, it was pointed out as an example, an employer does not lose the right to operate a truck or other motor vehicle even though employes seriously violate safety regulations. Only the offending employe is penalized. Under the proposed new authority the Commissioners would be authorized to revoke operating and registration licenses under regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioners. Broader powers to impound automobiles also is provided for..

Prompt payment of claims of $100 or less, settled by the Commissioners out of court, would be authorized under another section. The law authorizing the Commissioners to settle claims out of court up to $5,000, when such settlement is deemed advantageous to the District, would be left unchanged.

General health authority of the Commissioners also would be broadened. Present law, for instance, specifies that contagious diseases are within the regulatory powers of the Commissioners.

Controversial Features Out.

Thorough revamping of the District health laws is in prospect. Dr. George C. Ruhland, health officer, has begun a study of the health laws and regulations of the District. This is expected to take about two years to complete. Dr. Ruhland believes a modern system of health laws and regulations can be substituted for the piecemeal system which has grown up during the years.

All so-called controversial features have been stricken from the Commissioners' power bill. Among them were authority to compel independent boards to do or to refrain from doing specific things; power to refuse to revoke licenses of private hospitals, asylums and charity institutions; and broadened police authority, including regulation of sale and possession of firearms, and authority to forbid entrance into the District of any large body of persons who might, in the opinion of the Commissioners, create disorder or other unpleasantness. The last was born of the marches of the bonus seekers on the National Capital.

Howard Players Give 'Saturday's Children'

"Saturday's Children," a comedy in three acts, by Maxwell Anderson, was presented last night in the auditorium of Garnet - Patterson Junior High School by the Howard University players under direction of Sterling A. Brown, with James Thompson and Ada Fisher in the leading roles, as Willie and Florrie Sands.

Others in the cast included Juanita Smackum, Thelma Dale, Leonard S. Hayes and Marion Martin. Musical numbers were furnished by the university symphony orchestra. Scenery and staging was done by classes of the English department.

New Science Marvels In Big Carnegie Show

Charles A. Herndon, left, and Billy Scull will give Carnegiea gigantea a wide berth henceforth. Visitors yesterday at the Carnegie Institution, they discovered that this big cactus has very sharp needles, indeed.

Thoroughbreds' Mystery Speed Vies With Data on Stars and Plants.

A rich treat for the curiosity of men, women and children who wonder how the heavens are fathomed and what the ocean bed is made of, the Carnegie Institution of Washington's annual exhibition opened yesterday for a three-day run.

Manned by experts in their respective fields of science, the various exhibits graphically portrayed recent developments ranging from plant discoveries in the Arizona deserts to a formula for determining the racing capacity of a thoroughbred horse. Public lectures in the auditorium are a part of the exposition.

Perhaps the most complex display in the group of 14 is the one on thoroughbred breeding. Despite an abundance of photographs of famous turf kings and the calm explanation of a patient demonstrator, more brows were furrowed here than anywhere else.

It was considerably easier to understand Carnegiea gigantea, especially if one brushed up against the huge cactus which is included in the desert vegetation exhibit. It is a native of the Sonoran Desert, to which the Carnegie Institution has sent numerous expeditions.

The department of embryology is represented by a depiction of the development of the macaque monkey's egg. This is the first time science has penetrated the mystery of the unattached blastocyst, which is the first stage of mammalian development.

In the astronomical section, crowds inspected the 60-inch glass "eye" which will be used in connection with the new 200-inch telescope to be erected in California, peered through a 4-inch telescope to learn how atmospheric disturbances affect stellar visibility and watched a demonstration of ultra-violet light.

The present show assumes added significance because this year marks the centenary of the birth of Andrew Carnegie, who founded the institution in 1902 with an endowment of $10,000,000. Visitors' hours today and tomorrow are 2 to 5:30 p. m. and 7:30 to 10:30 p. m.

"The extraordinary advances which have been made in science are to a very considerable extent due to its remarkable educational system," said Dr. John C. Merriam, president of the Carnegie Institution, in a formal statement yesterday. "In the broadest sense, education lies in profiting by our own experience and those of others.

"Research is essentially the gaining of knowledge through experience and the correlating of this into generalized form, in which it has wider and more universal value. Without the careful recording of experiences, their correlation, examination in the light of what is already known and sifting of the essential from the irrelevant, knowledge would not grow.

"With this method man has made his greatest progress in the past and promises to continue that progress in the future."

Citizens Oppose Effort to Keep Spur Railroad

Protest to I. C. C. Planned in Chesapeake Beach Line Operation.

Opposition of the District Commissioners, the Federation of Civic Associations and other white and colored civic associations of southeast Washington to continue operation of the Chesapeake Beach Railway line from Seat Pleasant, Md., to the Chesapeake junction in Washington, is expressed in a petition to be filed tomorrow with the Interstate Commerce Commission by Wiliam A. Roberts, people's counsel.

Approval of the commission is being sought by the East Washington Railway Co., recently formed under laws of Maryland to take over the Seat Pleasant station and right of way in the District of the old Chesapeake Beach company.

Only excuse for continued operation of the line, Mr. Roberts said in his brief, is a contract which the line has for switching coal from the Baltimore and Ohio railroad tracks to the tracks of the Capital Transit Co. for delivery to the Potomac Electric Power Co. plant at Benning, D. C., a distance of 1,000 feet. The new company would take over the contract which calls for payment of a fee of 25 cents a ton.

Charles R. Webber, receiver of the old Chesapeake Beach road, is a vice-president of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and is one of those sponsoring the proposal of the new company. J. M. Rector, of Seat Pleasant and Washington, is vice-president of both the defunct Chesapeake company and the new East Washington company.

The 2.014 miles of line and right of way the East Washington company plan to acquire would be paid for with a note for $100,000 secured by a first mortgage and 97 shares of the 100 shares of stock in the new company, payable to William V. Hodges, of Denver, Colo., trustee of the former owners of the Chesapeake Beach Railway.

Continued operation of the line by the new company will constitute a direct burden of interstate commerce and would materially damage the property of residents in the area, Mr. Roberts said in the petition.

The line traverses 25 grade crossing in the District, he pointed out. Of these 15 have roads across the tracks. The other eight have prevented connecting streets on either side of the tracks. The Commissioners are desirous of connecting the streets in accordance with the highway plan and have the authority to compel the company to remove the grade crossings and bear half the expense of such elimination, the petition said.

Coal for the electric company could be switched to the plant over connected Pennsylvania Railroad tracks—a shorter distance—and thereby relieve the Baltimore & Ohio road of the present high switching cost, Mr. Roberts contended.

Hearing on the proposal is to be begun at 10 a. m. tomorrow before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Ballou Backs D.C. Teaching Of Patriotism

Says Constitution Taught From Fourth Grade Through Twelfth.

Attack on Textbooks Is Renewed by Citizens' Group Attorney.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, told the public yesterday of the way District school children are taught about the United States Constitution.

Simultaneously, another attack on school textbooks with allegedly communistic tinges was being filed with the Board of Education by the Federation of Citizens Associations, through George E. Sullivan.

A board committee already is studying four textbooks previously assailed. Sullivan, in a letter to Robert A. Maurer, committee chairman, intimated that three more textbooks, not named, needed scrutiny. He also called for immediate banning from the schools of a magazine, the Scholastic.

Dr. Ballou's report on the Constitution was prepared for the board committee after a committee member, Mrs. Philip Sidney Smith, had said:

"So much has been said on the other side of the question, regarding communism, that I think the public ought to be told about how intensive is the instruction in patriotism from the first 15 minutes of the day on."

Teaching Methods Upheld.

Some course on the Constitution, it was revealed, is given from the fourth grade to the twelfth. The report embodied a defense of the study of other forms of government, when, listing rights guaranteed citizens by the Constitution, the heads of the two divisional history departments, George J. Jones and W. M. Brewer, were quoted as holding:

"This understanding and appreciation of the rights of citizens of the United States developed through a grasp of American history and the Constitution is intensified and revivified by a study of other systems of government wherein these privileges are not enjoyed."

Result, Jones and Brewer continued, is the inspiration in the children of "respect and love for country." They added:

"Respect and love, together with willingness to serve one's country, constitute patriotism. At some future time, with true patriotism in each country rather than arrogant nationalism, such as exists in Europe, man may be ready to progress to a wider patriotism embracing all the world, founded upon respect for all nations and love for all men."

Courses Listed.

Constitution courses, the report showed, include:

Grade 7B, American history from 1700 to 1815, required; Grade 8A, Constitution and American history, 1815 to 1860, required; Grade 8B, history of the United States, 1860 and after, required; Grade 9, community civics, elective; Grade 11, United States and Constitution, required; Grade 12, civics, elective."

The study is carried up to "important Supreme Court decisions since the beginning of the New Deal," where the result of the course, teachers are told, is to be:

"An understanding that we as citizens of this great country should do what we can to steer the Nation on what we consider the right track, but, should she go in a direction contrary to what we think is wise, we must nevertheless stand by her in her hour of need."

Rugg Assailed Again.

Sullivan's letter to Maurer relisted quotations from writings of two previously criticized authors of textbooks, Carl Becker and Harold Rugg, and rapped Rugg also with quotations from the Scholastic, for which he is social studies editor.

"It will be apparent," Sullivan continued, "that we are not dealing in any wise with the private life or personal standing of either Prof. Becker or Prof. Rugg, nor with their legal right, within the guarantees of freedom accorded them in our great republic, to believe and advocate what they are advocating, provided the public school system be not invaded in so doing.

Sullivan called for barring of Becker and Rugg's books and of the Scholastic at once.

He also asked for a complete list of textbooks "which touch upon either the Soviet government or communism," a list of magazines used in the school system, and an opportunity to inspect the official file of any complaints made against the magazines.

"There have recently been called to our special attention," he added, "three further textbooks in use in the public schools, as giving communism an air of respectability or worthwhileness, and as omitting to set forth or reveal the evil and atrocious aims, purposes and effects of communism.

"Authors of two of these books are connected with Columbia University, and an author of the third is an official in the public school system."

High School Conference Holds Public Medicine Plans Faulty

Delegates to the George Washington University High School Conference from schools in the District, Maryland and Virginia yesterday voted disapproval of State medicine, adopting, instead, a suggestion of their own for providing poor families with medical care.

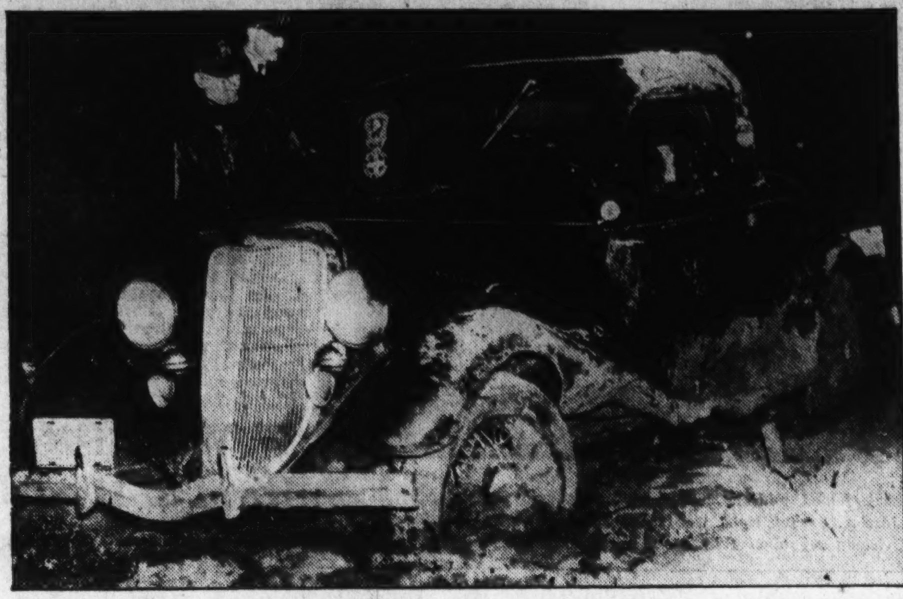
In a resolution they recommended a compulsory course in disease prevention to be made a school curriculum. They held a state medicine as likely to bring worse conditions than those which exist at present and destructive of "essential doctor-patient relationship."

The students also expressed themselves as favoring compulsory semiannual physical examination for all citizens, to be made by the family physician, or, in the case of destitute families, by charitable institutions.

The 200 delegates heard Dr. Owen R. Lovejoy, of the American Youth Commission, express confidence that because of the quality of its youth, the Nation will emerge from its difficulties "stronger, wiser and more considerate of the needs and rights of others."

Wayne Kniffen, of Eastern High School, was chairman of the conference.

Woman, 65, Hurt Fatally by Truck, Making Traffic Toll for Year 113



Post Staff Photo.

The end of a chase with police. Policemen Bricker and C. H. Gould, of the Traffic Bureau, examine Spencer H. Howell's car after it crashed into a clay bank at Western avenue and the District line. Rodey Becke, a passenger, was taken to Emergency Hospital with possible fractured vertebrae and pelvis.

PAUL ACKERMAN, 14, of 1942 Calvert street northwest, who was struck by a taxi and taken to Emergency Hospital with a broken leg.

Death Vehicle Backed Into Its Victim at 13th and Otis Streets.

Washington's 1935 traffic toll soared to 113 late yesterday when Mrs. Alice A. Johnson, 65, of 1012 Spring road northwest, was injured fatally by a heavy truck. She was struck when the truck backed into the intersection of Thirteenth and Otis streets.

Edward A. Brooks, colored driver of the truck, property of Griffith Consumers' Coal Co., told police he intended to turn into the intersection, but drove slightly past it. As he backed his heavy vehicle he did not see the woman, he asserted.

Mrs. Johnson was taken to Emergency Hospital, where she died a few minutes later. Physicians said fractured ribs, a fractured leg, internal injuries and shock caused her death.

Police took Brooks, who lives in the 1300 block Sixth street northwest, into custody, and held him for the action of Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald.

Paul Ackerman, 14, was running to the store for his mother last night when a taxicab hit him in front of his home, 1942 Calvert street northwest, breaking a leg.

Police said the driver of the cab was W. R. Thompson, 22, of 206 Adams street northeast.

Paul, a former Washington Post carrier, was taken to Emergency Hospital.

A chase by police through the Chevy Chase section of Washington yesterday ended when Spencer H. Howell, 20, of 3113 Fourty-fifth street northwest, lost control of his car and ran into a bank on Western avenue near Nevada northwest.

Rodey Becke, 19, of 1512 Wisconsin avenue northwest, a passenger in Howell's car suffered a possible fracture of the vertebrae and possible fracture of the pelvis. She was taken to Emergency Hospital.

According to police, Private A. H. Pruesser, of the Seventh Precinct, riding in a scout car, saw Howell go through a stop sign at Wisconsin avenue and Garfield street northwest. He started the chase and was joined by W. H. Bricker and C. H. Gould, motorcycle policemen. The chase lasted 6 miles before the fleeing car failed to round a curve and plowed into the bank.

Howell was arraigned before Judge Isaac R. Hitt, in Traffic Court, charged with reckless driving. He asked a continuance until December 16.

In another accident, David R. Thomas, 48, of 1422 Shepherd street northwest, received a possible fracture of the skull when knocked down by an automobile driven by Howard A. Keyworth, 45, 1455 Girard street northwest, police said yesterday. The mishap occurred as Thomas attempted to cross the street in the 1300 block of New York avenue northwest.

One Wounded, Second Beaten During Holdup

Furniture Collector Escapes in Attack; Gas Station Attendant Robbed.

One man was shot and another so badly beaten on the head that he required hospital treatment in a series of holdups in Washington last night.

Merrill Gross, 33, of Oxon Hill, Md., a collector for a furniture store in Southwest Washington, was the shooting victim.

A colored man thrust a pistol into his face as he was sitting in his machine in front of 316 E street southwest. Gross, with a day's collections in his pockets, threw the machine into gear and started away as the man fired. The shot pierced his right arm.

David Fidler, 60, of 31 Q street northeast, pleaded that he had no money when a colored man slipped up behind him and pinned both arms to his back as he was walking in an alley in the rear of 1015 Seventh street northwest.

Cries for Help.

The man insisted upon cash and when Fidler cried for help, knocked him to the pavement. In Sibley Hospital attendants said they feared Fidler suffered a skull fracture. He was removed to Gallinger Hospital.

Gross drove his machine to the Fourth Police Precinct on E street between Fourth and Sixth streets southwest. Police took him to Providence Hospital.

A man with a gun stepped into a gas station operated by Thomas E. Salkeld, of 7011 Ninth street northwest, at Sixth street and Maryland avenue southwest and snapped:

"Eddie, this is a hold-up and don't tell me you don't know how to open the safe because I know dam well you do."

Middle Name Edward.

Salkeld, whose middle name is Edward, and whose brother is Watson Salkeld, a Fifth Precinct detective, backed away from the gun and, at the man's direction, entered a back room.

The man with the gun found $140 in bills and change in Salkeld's safe and cash register. These, together with a check for $23.70, endorsed by Salkeld, he pocketed and joined a companion who was waiting in an automobile.

Salkeld told police he had never seen the man with the gun before.

Group Reports By Employers To Be Allowed

Final Draft of Compensation Rules to Be Considered Thursday.

Regulations permitting employers liable under the District compensation act to make lump reports on all "permanent" employes are to be put in final shape for approval by the District Unemployment Compensation Commission at a meeting at 10 a. m. Thursday.

Names of individual employes, together with the hours they worked and wages received, will be required only for temporary and casual employes, under the regulations.

Employers are to be free to class whatever employes they wish as permanent or temporary or casual. Whenever a permanent employe is separated from the pay roll, however, the employer is to be required to give the same information as given for the temporary employe.

The original plan called for a detailed report on each employee and the making of an individual personnel card for each of the 60,000 employes in the files of the Compensation Commission. It is estimated 15,000 employers come within the law. These are to begin payment of 1 per cent of their monthly pay rolls next year. Payment on the January pay rolls will become due February 1.

At present the commission has no funds with which to operate. Until then employers will be required merely to make a general report, transmitting the total of their pay rolls and the 1 per cent levy. Later when funds are available and the commission machinery is functioning, the breakdowns of the reports will be required, John A. Marshall, director of the law, said.

Final draft of the regulations is to be prepared by Marshall and E. Barrett Prettyman, corporation counsel this week.

Auto Club Urges New Playgrounds

Asks 24 Fields to Keep Children Off Streets.

Early completion of 24 new playgrounds in the District of Columbia to reduce traffic hazards was urged in a letter forwarded yesterday to the Director of the Budget by the Keystone Automobile Club.

George E. Keneipp, manager of the club, who signed the plea, said the advisory board of the Keystone Association, after investigating the playground situation, recommended the appropriation of $1,200,000 from funds authorized by the Capper-Crampton act for the work. Playgrounds upon which work has been begun would be completed and new play space areas would be acquired.

"Without adequate playground facilities children will be forced to use the streets as a place to play, thus exposng them to the dangers of traffic," the letter said.

Cheats Death

Well-Digger Falls 50 Feet and Survives.

This would be John Handy's obituary were it not that John, who lives at Fairmont Heights, Md., is a very durable well-digger.

John was working on a well yesterday on the Brooke Lee estate at Wheaton. He was at the top of a drilling tower, 50 feet from the ground. He fell. On the way down he crashed through some planking and the branches of a small tree. He landed in mud.

Witnesses who took Handy to the Montgomery County General Hospital at Sandy Springs expected to be told he was mortally injured. Instead, they learned Handy was suffering several fractured ribs but that his condition was not considered serious.

Citizens Map Case Against Transit Firm

Roberts Aids at Session to Plan Complaints at Hearings.

P. U. C. Proceedings Set Tomorrow; About 190 Will Testify.

People's Counsel William A. Roberts held a town meeting in the District Building last night to figure out how citizens could organize their complaints against Capital Transit Co. service. Transit hearings before the Public Utilities Commission start at 10 a. m. tomorrow. More than 150 witnesses will be called.

"I'm warning you that anything that is not in the record before the commission cannot be the basis for an order changing the service," Roberts told 40 association representatives present.

The citizens' first move tomorrow, the meeting decided, will be a motion by William McK. Clayton, utilities chairman of the Federation of Citizens Associations, to postpone consideration of one-man street car service until a separate hearing.

Roberts said the motion probably would fail. He will be at an Interstate Commerce Commission hearing at 10 a. m. tomorrow, so Clayton will make the motion for the delay.

Tells Defense.

One-man trolley service loomed as the hearing's big issue. Roberts said the company intended to argue it needed the economy if it were to provide better service. Roberts said the company had prepared for one-man extension by providing increased wage differentials for one-man motormen in its latest wage scale.

Union opposition to one-man service extension was pledged by W. W. Keeler, of Machinists' Local No. 174, representing the Central Labor Union. One-man operation was being "imposed" on company workers, Keeler charged. He will be supported by Charles A. Maize. Roberts promised to bring the topic up first, if Clayton's move fails.

Roberts collected names of association spokesmen and promised to arrange hearing hours for them, as he took notes on complaints they will present along nine lines—loading, schedule, operation, cleanliness, personnel, routes, stops and platforms, equipment, one-man cars.

Four groups will combine—Mid-City, Kalorama, Southwest Citizens Associations, and Northwest Business Men's Association—to advocate a diagonal bus line. Its route would start from Ninth street southwest on Water street, thence to Twelfth, to Constitution, to Ninth, to Florida, to Eighteenth, to Calvert, to Connecticut, to Porter, to Reno, to Wisconsin avenue.

A cross-town route from Catholic University in Northeast to past Rock Creek in Northwest also will be proposed.

Other Issues.

Other issues to be brought up will be subway service, by W. E. Hoffheins, of the National Federation of Federal Employes, and provision of Government buses as a potential competition threat, by Edwin C. Reed, of Foxhall Community Citizens' Association.

Late yesterday, Richmond B. Keech, vice chairman of the commission, summarized the commission's purpose in this statement.

"The commission is interested in providing adequate and reasonable service to the public using the mass transportation agencies.

"The commission will devote itself first to the question of specific violations of existing regulations.

"Next it will turn its attention during the hearing to evidence to show whether our existing regulations are adequate or whether new regulations are necessary.

"Then it will seek to determine whether any of the existing regulations relating to service are unenforceable, improper, or are outmoded by reason of changed conditions, and should, therefore, be removed."

He indicated punitive provisions of the public utilities act would be used in the future, if necessary to compel the company to improve its service.

100 Children See Santa Claus Early

Webster Students Give Party for Mission Wards.

Christmas came 10 days ahead of time for 100 boys and girls of the Emergency Home of the Central Union Mission at 624 Indiana avenue northwest, last night.

Not that anyone minded, because there were gifts for everyone, a Christmas tree and everything, just as there would have been on Christmas Day had the boys and girls belonged to more fortunate families.

Students of the Marjorie Webster School on upper Sixteenth street played Santa Claus for them. Each student at the school made a considerable contribution for gifts and preceding and following their distribution there was tumbling, tap-dancing, story-telling and refreshments.

Buses called for the children at the home and took them back again.

Yankee Power Behind Throne Aiding Selassie

Everett Andrew Colson, of Maine, Is King of King's Personal Advisor.

By the Associated Press.

Addis Ababa, Dec. 14.—The man man behind the throne of Ethiopia is an American—Everett Andrew Colson, born some 50 years ago in Warren, Me.

Emperor Haile Selassie knows that his own people are not yet capable of interpreting world politics. To avoid unfortunate complications, he retains this new Englander as adviser and confidante.

Colson was educated in Massachusetts and graduated in law from Georgetown University. In 1904 the United States Government sent him to the Philippines in the Bureau of Civil Service. In 1909 he went to Canton, China, where he served a year in the United States Consulate.

He returned to the Philippines as a member of the Civil Service Commission. In 1918 Colson offered his services to France where he spent a year as assistant auditor for the war department. In 1920 he went to Haiti as assistant financial adviser.

In 1930 he was called to Addis Ababa to serve as financial adviser to the Emperor, but is now in reality the confidential adviser of the government.

In 1915 Colson married Anna Johnston in Ironton, Ohio. Their son Edward is a student in Boston.

Colson is a quiet man, but his vital personality is felt the moment he enters a room. He is one of the most indulgent of men, modest and averse to publicity. Yet he is regarded here as the power behind the Ethiopian throne.

Colson is a hard worker. He denies himself all recreation. He often goes to the palace at 7 a. m., returning to luncheon at 1 p. m. to find the veranda of his home filled with newspaper correspondents.

Calmly Colson states the news from the palace and from the interior.

Again at 5 p. m. the newsmen return and, while waiting for Colson's report, they enjoy Mrs. Colson's hospitality in the form of sandwiches and homemade cake.

The only hobby Mr. Colson permits himself is stamp collecting. He has a notable collection.

8 Nations Give Notice to U. S. Of Debt Default

By the Associated Press.

Eight nations last night had announced formally an intention to default on their semiannual war debt payment to the United States, due today, and three others were expected to follow.

Of the 12 governments whose installments, totaling $965,414,177.64, mature at this time, only Finland has given notice that it will remit. All the rest have been continuously in default since June, 1934.

France, Italy, Poland, Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Hungary yesterday notified Secretary Hull that they were unable to meet their current payments or those already in arrears. Great Britain and Lithuania previously had served similar notice.

This left only Belgium, Estonia and Latvia still to be heard from, but there was no expectation in official quarters that they would pay.

Ambassador Andre de Laboulaye personally delivered the reply of the French government to the American Government's "reminder."

It reiterated, in response to the customary American invitation, an intention to seek "as soon as circumstances permit," a settlement of its debt, but it added that it still found itself "unable to put forward proposals at the present time."

France is second only to Great Britain as the largest European war debtor. Its December 15 installment, plus principal and interest in arrears since December, 1932, amounted to $250,292,292.86.

Poland, which owes $32,535,988.55 this month, made the briefest response thus far, stating in a memorandum not even signed by the charge d'affaires, Wladyslaw Sokolowski, that the Polish government was still not in a position to resume payment of the debt.

Red Sea Rail Link Held British Plan

Jerusalem, Dec. 14. (Jewish Telegraphic Agency)—An unconfirmed report today said the British government had started negotiations with Saudi Arabia for permission to build a railroad linking the Mediterranean seaport of Haifa with El Akaba on the Red Sea.

In informed circles the report was given credence as the result of a British representative's visit to King Ibn Saud of Saudi Arabia. The British agent also is reported to have discussed the possibility of constructing airdromes at various sites along the Persian Gulf.

Both a railroad and airports would have a tremendous strategic value in case of war. The railroad would be of especial benefit to Great Britain, since it would provide a route from the Mediterranean to the Red Sea in the event that the war effected the Suez Canal. The Arab Press reported recently that such a railroad was being built secretly by Britain.

British Battleships Back at Gibraltar

Gibraltar, Dec. 14 (U.P.).—The battle cruisers Hood and Renown and a squadron of destroyers returned today after a short cruise off the Atlantic coast, bringing the British Mediterranean fleet back to the strength which it has maintained since the Italian-Ethiopian crisis reached its height.

Doctor Puts Zipper on Incision To Treat Cancer Victim Daily

Chicagoan Discards Old Method of Reentering Surgical Opening.

By the United Press.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—An amazing experiment in modern surgery involving the use of zipper fastener in treatment of stomach cancer—was revealed today through Dr. Morris Fishbein, editor of the Journal of the American Medical Association.

The zipper is used to open and close a stomach incision, Dr. Fishbein reported, making daily treatment of the malignant growth possible.

Neither the name of the patient nor the surgeon can be revealed because of the revolutionary nature of the experiment and the critical condition of the patient, Dr. Fishbein said.

Facts of the case, however, have been verified, he said.

The practice of reentering an incision for giving internal surgical treatment over a period of time is not new he reported.

Various methods have been utilized for keeping the wound sterile and closed temporarily during the intervals, but none of them has been comparable to the zipper arrangement."

Previously surgical clips, adhesive tape, and gauze, have been used when repeated entrances to the wound were a necessity. In the present case, however, when the surgeon was confronted with the problem of keeping the incision open and sterile he devised the zipper arrangement.

He attached the fastener to a surgical dressing which he fitted over the incision. He can now treat the cancer with much less discomfort and shock to the patient than suffered under other methods, Dr. Fishbein said.

Letter Links Italy To Austrian Move

Il Duce Favors Regency, Article Asserts.

By the Associated Press.

Vienna, Dec. 14.—A news letter of Swiss origin which is widely circulated in Austria said today Premier Mussolini favors creating a regency in Austria so as to give the League of Nations "something else to think about."

The letter was issued by Franz Burri, who is an intimate associate of the former Austrian vice chancellor, Franz Winkler, now in exile at Lucerne, Switzerland.

Attracting much comment, the letter said Italy sponsored a regency for Vice Chancellor Ernst von Starhemberg, who is a prince, and restoration of the monarchy, so Central European political disorder would divert attention from Ethiopia.

(Von Starhemberg indicated this week he would not oppose the crowning of the Archduke Otto if certain conditions were met. Little Entente nations, however, are expected bitterly to oppose any attempt to place a Hapsburg back on the throne.)

McAdoo's Daughter To Marry 3d Time

Mrs. Cowles to Wed Francis Taylor at Havana.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14.—News reached New York social circles today that Mrs. Nona McAdoo de Mohrenschildt Cowles, daughter of Senator Wiliam Gibbs McAdoo of California, left Mexico City last night with Francis Taylor, wealthy New Englander, for Havana, where they will be married.

Leaders in society said the marriage will be the third for Mrs. Cowles, who is a granddaughter of President Wilson. It will be Taylor's second marriage.

Taylor is a great-grandson of Moses Taylor, banker and railroad owner. His father left a fortune on which Rhode Island collected $3,712,000 in inheritance taxes.

The bride-to-be, Senator McAdoo's daughter by his first marriage, recently was divorced from Dr. Edward Spencer Cowles, Park Avenue psychiatrist, to whom she was married in 1927. Previously she was married to Ferdinand de Mohrenschildt, an attache of the Russian Embassy in Washington, who died in 1919.

Edgar M. Bacon, 80, Historian, Expires

Tarrytown, N. Y., Dec. 14 (U.P.).—Edgar Mahew Bacon, 80, author and historian, died today after a long illness.

He was a member of the New York State Historical Society and was considered an authority on the history of Sleepy Hollow and the circumstances of the capture of Major Andre. He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Anna Beard Bacon.

Bullet Kills G.O.P. LeaderinN.Y.Home

Russell G. Dunmore Declared Victim of Accident.

By the Associated Press.

Utica, N. Y., Dec. 14—Russell G Dunmore, former Republican majority leader in the New York State Assembly, was found shot to death in his home late today. He was 51. a bullet had penetrated his head.

A .32 caliber pistol, from which one bullet had been fired, was found on the floor near his body. An associate said a cleaning rag was found near the weapon.

One of Dunmore's law partners, T. Harvey Ferris, said tonight he understood that Gordon A. Holden, coroner, had given an official verdict of accidental death due to discharge of the pistol while Dunmore was cleaning it.

France Plans to Honor All Its Centenarians

Paris, Dec. 14 (AP).—France is making plans to honor all citizens of the republic who have passed their 100th birthday.

The name of every French centenarian, man or woman, is being sought by the National Association for the Help of the Aged, whose work is recognized officially by the government. The centenarians are to receive the homage of the nation at a great celebration, during which the oldest citizen of the republic will be proclaimed "Dean of France."

Wife of Carusi DiesinHospital; Infant Survives

Former Edith Warner Was Secretary to 3 Attorney General's Aids.

Mrs. Ugo Carusi, wife of the executive assistant to Attorney General Cummings, died yesterday at George Washington University Hospital. An infant son survived.

In addition to her husband and son, Mrs. Carusi is survived by her father, John R. Warner; a brother, ohn R., jr., and three sisters, Mrs. Louise Hart and Winifred and Josephine Warner, all of Terre Haute, Ind.

Mrs. Carusi, the former Edith Warner, came to Washington in 1928 and was successively secretary to three of the Attorney General's assistants. She resigned from the Department of Justice in 1933.

The couple were married in 1928 and lived at 4100 Forty-ninth street northwest.

Mr. Carusi has held the same position ever since he became executive assistant to former Attorney General Sargent.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. in the Episcopal Church of the Transfiguration.

W. W. Bolls, 62, Head of Dental Company, Dies

William Willis Bolls, 62, of 2208 Tunlow road northwest, president of the Donaldson Dental Manufacturing Co., died yesterday at Garfield Hospital after a long illness.

Bolls, a native of Vicksburg, Miss., came here at the age of 12 with his mother, Mrs. Lelia Harper Bolls. Mrs. Bolls, artist, had taken him to various cities in the country where she had gone to study painting.

The boy got a job as page on the floor of the House, which he held for four years, going later with the dental company and working his way up until he headed the organization. He was forced to retire four years ago because of ill health. He was a member of Federal Lodge No. 1, F. A. A. M.

Surviving him are his wife, Mrs. Dess B. Bolls, and a daughter, Lelia Willis Bolls. Funeral services will be held at 3 p. m. tomorrow at Hysong's funeral parlors, followed by interment in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

Coast Guard Hunts For Missing Youth

Wealthy Canadian Lost Off Craft on Florida Trip.

By the Associated Press

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., Dec. 14.—Coast Guard patrol boats searched the waters off Hillsboro Light today for the body of Hugh McGuigan, wealthy Blenheim, Ontario, youth, who disappeared yesterday from the auxiliary schooner, Black Robin.

Jack F. Rowland, Toronto, Canada, who was with McGuigan, told customs and Coast Guard officials his companion dropped from sight while on deck alone near the Light 10 miles north of here.

Because he was unable to start the vessel's engine, Rowland said, he could not cruise far in search of McGuigan before darkness. He said he then headed toward port Everglades to report the disappearance.

A Coast Guard boat picked up the schooner at New River, towing it on to Port Everglades.

Rowland, who is the son of John A. Rowland, kings councilor and vice president of the Canadian Permanent Trust Co., of Toronto, said he and McGuigan left Chester, Nova Scotia, October 16 to bring the sail boat to Fort Lauderdale by easy stages.

U. S. Concludes Reciprocal Pact WithTheHague

Continuing the Administration's reciprocal trade treaty program despite many protests aroused by the recently concluded pact with Canada, Secretary of State Hull is expected to sign a new trade agreement with The Netherlands Tuesday or Wednesday.

That signing is expected to be followed a week later by similar action on a treaty with Spain.

Both treaties, it is understood, will contain the most-favored-nation clause, which has been the particular target of George N. Peek, who recently resigned as foreign trade adviser to the President and head of the Export-Import Bank. Each of the agreements is expected also to include several concessions to foreign farm products, such concessions as have been attacked by Peek, heads of the National Grange and others.

Peek, incidentally, has set up headquarters here, since his resignation, to carry on his fight on the President's foreign trade policies. There have been demands, in Congress and out, also for repeal of the law giving the President authority to conclude reciprocal agreements.

State Department officials are said to feel that concessions they have obtained in the two treaties about to be signed will outweigh any concessions made on the part of this country.

J. O. Cheek, 83, CoffeeMagnate, Dies in Florida

Nashville Philanthropist Had Been Critically Ill of Pneumonia.

By the Associated Press.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 14.—Joel Owsley Cheek, 83, who built up a great coffee industry in the United States on the strength of advertising and his belief that "the harder business is to get the easier it is to hold," died today at the home of his son, Leon T. Cheek.

He had been critically ill for four days of pneumonia.

Cheek, whose immense fortune provided liberal contributions to educational, civic and charitable institutions, was a resident of Nashville, Tenn. He was born near Burkesville, Ky.

His first job was as a salesman with a Nashville wholesale grocery house at $50 a month. He later became a partner.

In those days coffee was sold "green" and the roasting was done in home ovens. Cheek started roasting it on a small scale and in 1898 formed a company to exploit his product, which he had named for the Maxwell House in Nashville, noted as a gathering place for Southern political and social leaders.

He was joined in the enterprise by J. W. Neal, a Nashville grocer. Branches were opened at intervals in Houston, Tex., Jacksonville, and Richmond, Va.

In 1928 the Cheek-Neal Coffee Co. was sold for approximately $40,000,000.

The coffee merchant was the father of 11 children, two of whom died in infancy. Eight of his sons he took into the business with him. He is survived by the eight sons and a daughter.

Philippines Vote Defense Measure

Act Sets Up $8,000,000 Military Fund.

By the Associated Press.

Manila, Philippine Islands, Dec. 14.—The National Assembly approved the Philippine defense act today. It provides for compulsory military training and would muster all residents and resources for defense of the islands in wartime.

The measure appropriates $8,000,000 for military purposes, including the customary $3,500,000 for the commonwealth constabulary and $1,700,000 for the immediate purchase of equipment and for construction.

The defense act was the first major piece of legislation approved by the Assembly, created when the commonwealth was inaugurated a month ago tomorrow.

Silver Smugglers Seized in Shanghai

By the Associated Press.

Shanghai, Dec. 14.—Japanese consular police arrested 140 Japanese today in a blow at a huge silver smuggling ring.

The suspects had attempted to embark for Japan aboard the Tatsuta Maru with 242,000 silver dollars.

Ships arriving from Japan of late have been crowded with Japanese fortune hunters attracted by the easy profits of the silver smuggling racket.

(Under the Chinese silver nationalization laws, the price of silver in China is considerably below the world price. Consequently, it has been possible to export silver surreptitiously from China, despite an embargo decree, and sell it abroad.

Ted Turner's 68 Wins Medal in $10,000 Miami Golf Tourney

Horton Smith And Moore Get 69s

216 Entered in Classic; Cruickshank Is Among 8 Tied at 70.

Leo Walper, With a 72, Sets Pace for D. C. Contingent.

By the Associated Press.

CORAL GABLES, Fla., Dec. 14.—A slender, quiet golfer, Ted Turner, of Pine Valley, N. J., came blazing unheralded through the dusk today to post 68, three under par, for the first round of the $10,000 Miami Biltmore open and seize medalist honors.

Racking up four birdies in his brilliant round, which came within 1 stroke of equaling the course record set by Willie Macfarlane in 1933, Turner barely nosed out Horton Smith, Oak Park, Ill., and Frank More, young Chicago professional, who had 69's.

A 7-foot putt he ran down at the eighteenth green, while the gallery scurried to watch, was the 27-year-old Turner's margin of victory.

Smith Misses Putt.

Smith, playing with him, was 30 feet away. He smacked the ball up to the cup, but it failed to go down. His 2-under-par 69 nevertheless served notice on the field of golfing great gathered for the sport's richest tourney that he is back to the form that won him nearly $30,000 in 1929 and 1930.

Though the field numbered 216, the second largest in the six-year history of golf's richest tournament, all but three golfers managed to finish before darkness. They will complete their rounds tomorrow morning, having but one hole to play.

Leading the slender list of amateurs at the close of the day's play were Carl Dann, Orlando, State amateur champion, and Morton McCarthy, Norfolk, Va. Both had 74s.

Cruickshank Has 70.

Bunched just behind Smith and Moore, at 70, one under standard figures, were eight of the money players, Orville White, of Memphis, Tenn.; Bobby Cruickshank, of Richmond Va.; Jack Forrester, of Ora Dell, N. J., who was out in 32 for the day's best round, only to slip coming home; Clarence Clark, of Bloomfield, N. J.; Byron Nelson, of Ridgewood, N. J.; John Milutic, of Youngstown, Ohio; Bruce Coltart, of Woodcrest, N. J., and Frank Walsh, of Chicago.

Eight more matched even par, 71. They were Bob McDonald, Chicago; Paul Runyan, White Plains, N. Y.; Victor Ghezzi, Deal, N. J.; Clarence Ehresman, Philadelphia; Al Nelson, Hopewell, N. J.; Jimmie Hines, Garden City, L. I.; Ralph Kingsrud, Fargo, N. D., and Bert Montressor, Decatur, Ill.

Eleven were grouped at 72, among them Johnny Revolta, P. G. A. champion, who was the top-heavy favorite in betting odds; Henry Picard, Hershey, Pa.; Al Watrous, Detroit, Mich.; Zell Eaton, the Oklahoma City youngster who turned professional last week, and Leo Walker, of Washington.

Sam Parks, jr., the Open champion, finished with 74.

Walper Shoots a 72 To Pace D. C. Golfers

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 14.—Leo Walper, Bethesda driving range professor, paced the Washington, D. C., contingent with a 36-36—72, one above par, at the end of the first 18-hole round of the $10,000 Miami-Biltmore golf tournament today. Walper found himself in such select company as Johnny Revolta and Henry Picard.

Roland Mackenzie, of Congressional, shot a 37-36—73, and Wiffy Cox, of Kenwood, who was the leading money winner a few years ago, scored 38-37—75. Cliff Spencer, of Beaver Dam, posted 39-41—80.

Louis' Punch Hardest I've Seen, Says Scribe

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—In retrospect, I still think it was the hardest single punch I have ever seen delivered in the ring. I am referring, of course, to the one hot shot with which Joseph Louis Barrow pelted Paulino Uzcudun in their travesty of a prize fight held at Madison Square Garden last night. That, I guess, is just about as hard as it is humanly possible for one man to strike another. If Louis had been wearing the cestus on his hands instead of 6-ounce gloves, he would have caved in Uzcudun's skull as if it had been a paper bag. As it was, he smashed the left side of Paulono's face and mouth just as he broke Carnera's mouth with his first punch. Only he tagged Paulino harder than he ever hit Carnera. He tagged Paulino so hard he hurt everybody sitting within 15 rows of the ring.

After the soiree a number of us were discussing Joe Louis, and all of us agreed that the longer his fights went the crazier he drove us; the tenser and more nervous we got, until we wanted to jump out of our skins, waiting for him to explode. The only thing I can compare watching Joe Louis to is going to see a play and, shortly after the curtain goes up, one of the characters opens a bureau or desk drawer, takes a gun out, looks at it and puts it back again, and then for the rest of the evening you are uncomfortable and miserable because you know that some one is going to get shot or that the gun is going to go off, but you don't know when.

Nobody Was Prepared.

I thought last night that I wouldn't be able to stand it much longer if Louis didn't let one go soon, and then when he finally did it simply scared the hell out of me, both with its blinding speed and its terrible effect. We all knew it was coming, and yet nobody was prepared for it when it came. Certainly no one ever expected to see a man so wounded and stricken from one blow with a gloved fist.

As a demonstration of the value of Joe Louis as the greatest destructive agency the ring has ever known, the match was illuminating, but, as a prize fight, it was an out-and-out disgrace, and the New York State Atheletic Commission should resign for permitting such an uneven match to take place.

There is no denying that Louis is a smashing hitter, but there also is no denying that Paulino's chin is considerably shop worn, having been battered and beaten over a considerable span of years, and as you all know, with no visible effect. But Louis did not drop Paulino with a punch on the chin; he hit him in the mouth, and the effect would have been the same had he landed on the nose, or the eye, or the top of the head. But the thing that I find such a disgrace was that Paulino was too old and slow and ring-weary to offer the slighest bit of opposition to Louis.

Pirates Defeat Collegians, 14 to 0

Recovery of Fumble and Block of Punt Net Both Scores.

By the Associated Press.

PITTSBURGH, Dec. 14.—The Pittsburgh Pirates, National League professional football team, slithered through a morass of mud today to a 14-0 victory over a college all-star team.

The Pirates' first score came after Zaneiski, Duquesne University halfback, caught Fullback Zanninelli's kick on his own 24-yard line and fumbled on the next play.

Bray, Pirate halfback, broke through the Collegians' line, picked up the ball and scampered across. The Pirates' second touchdown was tallied soon after the start of the second half. The professionals blocked Meglen's punt, and Sortet scooped up the ball. He crossed the line standing up.

College Grids Facing Death, Is Warning

By the Associated Press.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 14.—Philip O. Badger, chairman of the board of athletic control of New York University, said today intercollegiate football as it exists at present "will be dead in 1942" unless "those in a position of trust as heads of institutions, get down to business."

Badger, speaking at the annual meeting of the Middle Atlantic States Athletic Conference, said college football after 1942 "would be professional as against amateur" if officials did not stop "dodging responsibility and rationalize athletics."

He expressed the belief intercollegiate athletics were on the verge of a "really insignificant rationalization on a broad front, provided the movement of direct college and university control of athletics spreads."

Badger said conditions in intercollegiate football "are worse than in 1932 when I told the Sportsmanship Brotherhood luncheon, the game would expire in 10 years."

He referred to commercial radio broadcasts in which "coaches and institutions trade on the good name of colleges" as an aspect of college athletics that should be watched.

Badger also referred to "the growth of gambling in all its forms, which if allowed to go unchecked, may create havoc and disorderly conduct at games."

Suspended After Fight Cool Spurns Referee;

Philadelphia, Dec. 14 (AP).—Eddie Cool, lightweight boxer, and Sam Weinberg, his manager, were suspended indefinitely by the State athletic commission today for Cool's refusal to fight Tony Falco in the main bout of a boxing show last night with Tommy O'Keefe as referee.

Commissioner Joe Rainey ordered Cool's share of the purse held up after he was forced to substitute Matt Adgie for O'Keefe.

Cool won a decision in 10 rounds.

Joe Louis Fails To Convince Dempsey

Has Yet to Face Foe Who Can Give and Take, Mauler Says.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Joe Louis, the new toast of Harlem, was being hailed as a second Jack Dempsey along Broadway today by almost everybody except the old Manassa Mauler himself.

Still the idol of the fight fans, Jack stopped pumping hands in his Eighth avenue restaurant long enough to give an authoritative lowdown on the Brown Bomber, whose fists are making ring history every time he climbs through the ropes.

Dempsey freely admits Louis is the outstanding heavyweight prospect in years, but he goes a bit slow on the superman stuff.

"We're not going to know if Louis is really great until we throw him in the ring with somebody who will do a little fighting himself," he said.

Has Yet to Face Test.

"Joe has got to fight somebody who cannot only take plenty, but give plenty back. Until a man of this caliber is found we'll not know just how good he is.

"Trouble is, most of the fellows he has been fighting folded up as soon as they were cracked. Joe has yet to meet a fellow who could or would take it long enough to get in a few punches on his own account."

Jack didn't hesitate a minute when asked whether Max Schmeling or James J. Braddock has the best chance of trimming Louis.

"Braddock unquestionably," he said. "Jim can take it and he has a pretty good right hand punch. He knows what to do in the ring and won't fall for any tricks. He's hard to hit. Schmeling can be hit much easier. And he can't punch as well as Braddock.

"I'm not telling you Braddock could lick Joe, but he has a better chance than Schmeling."

Louis, with almost $40,000 in his pocket and a new notch in the handle of his knockout gun, spent a day taking bows before leaving tonight for Detroit. Wednesday he starts for Havana to see what can be done about Senor Isidor Gastanaga, now being fattened up as the next sacrificial offering, December 29.

Even Musicians Are Proselyted

By the United Press.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Proselyting in American colleges extends beyond professionalism on the football field and affects even promising young debaters or talented musicians, it was claimed today at a meeting of a special committee of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

A number of the schools, it was disclosed, are willing to give as much help to a promising young debater or pianist as to a burly backfield man on the football team.

The committee, appointed by the association last spring, met to study the situation and to make recommendations on the stand which should be taken on the inducements which may be offered an athlete or debater and the imaginary line which divides ethical scholarships from proselyting.

Giants, Lions Clash Today For Title

25,000 Expected to Watch Air Battle of Pros at Detroit.

By the Associated Press.

DETROIT, Dec. 14.—The powerful Detroit Lions and New York Giants, only clubs of the National Professional League which went through their gruelling schedules without being shut out, clash in a playoff here tomorrow for the league championship. A capacity crowd of 25,000 is expected.

New York, winner in the Eastern division without much trouble, will be defending a title won last year from Chicago's Bears, 30-13. Detroit, which scored at least one touchdown in every game this fall, won the Western section crown with a fast finish after an uncertain start.

Both clubs will start in good condition. The Giants, seeking a third championship since organization of the league, will hold a weight advantage of about 10 pounds per man, but an anticipated dry, fast field is expected to favor the speedy backs Detroit will show in Earl (Dutch) Clark, Ernie Caddel and Bill Shepherd.

Players of both teams limbered up in light workouts today. The kickoff is set for 2 p. m. (Eastern standard time) at University of Detroit stadium.

First Meeting of Year.

The clubs will be meeting for the first time this year and the coaches, Patsy Clark, of Detroit, and Steve Owen, of New York, are looking for a game in which passing may be the deciding factor. In big Ed Danowski the Giants have a tosser who completed 57 of 113 aerials this season. Detroit has three able passers in Dutch Clark, Shepherd, Caddel and Frank Christensen.

The probable line-ups:

Detroit.	Position.	New York.
Morse	L. E.	Singer
Johnson	L. T.	Morgan
Knox	L. G.	Bellinger
Randolph	Center	Hein
Emerson	R. G.	Owen
G. Christensen	R. T.	Grant
Ebding	R. E.	Goodwin
Presnell	Q. B.	Danowski
F. Christensen	L. H.	Richards
Caddel	R. H.	Strong
Gutowsky	F. B.	Corzine

Referee—Tommy Hughitt (Michigan). Umpire—Bobby Cahn (Chicago). Head linesman—Harry Robb (Pittsburgh). Field judge—M. J. Meyer (Ohio Wesleyan).

East-West Teams Named for Game

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Dec. 14.—Twenty-two players, 11 from the Middlewest and 11 from the East and South, will represent the Eastern All-Stars in their annual charity game against the Western All-Stars at Kezar Stadium, San Francisco, New Year's Day.

Two 1935 All-Americans, Dick Smith, of Minnesota, and Riley Smith, of Alabama, will be the Eastern line-up, which Co-Coach Dick Hanley rates as the strongest in the charity series in which the West leads, winning the last two games.

The full All-Star Eastern team, coached by Hanley and Andy Kerr, of Colgate, entrain from Chicago next Wednesday for San Francisco. The full squad:

Ends: Longfellow, Northwestern; Antonini, Indiana; Loebs, Purdue; Train, Yale.

Tackles: Smith, Minnesota; Lewis, Ohio University; Stydahar, West Virginia; Wasicek, Colgate.

Guards: Oech, Minnesota; Fortman, Colgate; Jontos, Syracuse.

Centers: Jones, Ohio State; Francis, Alabama.

Backs: Heekin, Ohio State; Beise, Minnesota; Cruice, Northwestern; Crayne, Iowa; Smith, Alabama; Paul, Princeton; Comstable, Princeton; Irwin, Colgate and Smith, New York University.

Travis, Unable to Hold Job, Is 2nd in Fielding

By Shirley Povich,

Sports Editor of The Post.

ADDITIONAL evidence that Washington was a second-division ball club in last season's pennant race was revealed yesterday in the announcement of the official American League fielding averages for 1935. The Nats, perennially among the league's best fielding teams, in 1935 earned the unexalted ranking of a tie for fourth in the club fielding records.

The club fielding championship was becomingly won by the pennant-winning Detroit team with an average of .978. Two points behind were the surprising Chicago White Sox, followed by the Yankees. Washington and Cleveland shared fourth and fifth places with figures of .972.

The chief surprise revealed by the official averages is the final ranking of Cecil Travis, of the Nats. The young third baseman, who was not deemed good enough to hold the post with Washington and was transferred to the outfield, ranked second among the league's regular third basemen. Travis, with his .963 average for 114 games, was only one point behind the leader, Red Rolfe, of the Yankees.

Kuhel Ranks Sixth.

The disappointing season of Joe Kuhel, the Nats' first baseman, is reflected in the official averages. Kuhel, regarded in 1933 as the best defensive first sacker in the league, ranked only sixth among the eight regular first sackers, with an average of .991. Jimmy Foxx, of the A's, with only three errors out of 1,189 chances, led the first basemen with a .997 average.

At second base and shortstop, the Nats were a powerful defensive outfit. Buddy Myer, with an average of .979, placed second to Charley Gehringer, the traditional leader, who had figures of .985. Both Red Kress and Ossie Bluege, who divided the bulk of the Nats' shortstop duties, followed hard on the heels of Bill Rogell, of Detroit, who had a fielding average of .971.

Heinie Manush was the best defensive man among the Washington outfielders, according to the averages. Manush was fifth among the league's regular outfielders with an average of .985. Jake Powell ranked eighth with .975 and Johnny Stone sixteenth with .955, Sammy West, the former Nat, now with the Browns, led the outfielders with .989.

Nats' Catcher Last.

Manager Bucky Harris' search for additional catching strength apparently has been intensified by the fielding weakness of Cliff Bolton. The Nats' catcher ranked last among the league's regular backstops with a .971 average. Bill Dickey, of the Yankees, boasting .995, was the leader in that division

Washington, with 186 double plays, led all clubs in that respect—a dubious honor inasmuch as the presence of men on bases is necessary to double killings, and men on bases are an unflattering commentary on the club's pitching.

Depending upon Bolton and raw rookies behind the bat, Washington also led the league in passed balls with 15.

Uclans Upset St. Mary's, 13 to 7

Rally in Final Quarter to Win; Hold Foe Twice Near Goal Line.

By the Associated Press.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 14.—University of California at Los Angeles carved the final chapter of its greatest football season into the turf of Kezar Stadium, today with a 13-to-7 victory over a favored St. Mary's College eleven.

Outgained on the ground and far behind in first downs, the Bruins sighted an accurate aerial shot and made that shot and one swift ground thrust beat the galloping Gaels.

Unable to make a first down in the first half of the game, the Bruins nevertheless romped off the field at the half, leading, 6 to 0.

The second period touchdown of the team that finished in a triple tie for the Pacific Coast Conference title, came from a 26-yard pass, Charles Cheshire, all-Coast halfback, rifling the ball to Schroeder, left end.

St. Mary's opened the third quarter with a touchdown, gained from a smashing 80-yard drive, and converted the extra tally to go into a 1-point lead.

S. Conference Removes Ban On Radio

By the Associated Press.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 14.—Postponing action on both of the major controversial questions—proposals to outlaw financial inducements to athletes, and to increase the size of the league—the Southern Conference today lifted its ban on radio broadcasting, cleaned up a few minor odds and ends and then called it a day.

By its action the conference indicated, however, that it would pry the lid off the powder can at a meeting here February 7 and 8, when both the subsidization question and proposals to take new schools into the league will come up for final consideration.

Chairman Charles P. Nash of the conference committee on colleges emphasized that at the February meeting some final word should be given to the petitioning colleges which have been hanging around for years like often disappointed suitors, hoping for an approving nod.

In February there will come up for consideration the proposal of certani presidents of Southern Conference schools, led by Dr. Frank P. Graham of the University of North Carolina, to tighten the rules governing financial aid to athletes.

Three Fernandez Boys Ride 8 Havana Victors

Havana, Dec. 14 (AP).—The three Fernandez boys, two brothers and a cousin, staged a "family act" at Oriental Park race track today, making a clean sweep of all eight races on the day's card. The three jockeys brought home all eight winners and finished in the money on four other occasions.

A. J. Fernandez rode four winners, was second once and third once out of six mounts. His brother, F. Fernandez, drew seven mounts, finishing first twice and third once. Their cousin, A. Fernandez, won two races and came in second once in five attempts.

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 14.—Pittsburgh had Whitey Randour on its side today and his presence meant the football game won by the Panthers from the University of Southern California, 12 to 7.

The fleet back scored his first touchdown of the season after he had gained more than 750 yards this fall without crossing the goal line and this was the difference in the final accounting.

The halfback was a constant threat, for even when he did not run with the ball, the Trojans thought he might.

Southern California gave the crowd of approximately 35,000 its first chance to yell for the House of Troy when the game had less than a minute to go by completing a pass from the Pitt 39-yard line, Dave Davis to Bill Gainsford, who caught the ball on the 10-yard line and ran on to score.

Stopped on 1-Yard Line.

The Trojans escaped a shutout in the fifty-ninth second of the eleventh hour when it seemed they never would score. The Panthers' great defensive play had stopped the Trojans a minute before when they took the ball on the 1-yard line, and in the second period the home guard had seen the door shut in its face on the 5-yard line.

Pitt, too, had its chances but could capitalize on only two. Pittsburgh scored the first touchdown of the game in the middle of the first period when Frank Souchak intercepted a pass in midfield. He found himself surrounded evenly by a mass of Trojans and tossed the ball to Paul Shaw who struggled a few more yards to Southern California's 9-yard line. Three plunges left the ball only a yard from the goal and Frank Patrick plunged over on the fourth try.

'Santa' Gives Trip To S. M. U. Frosh

By the Associated Press.

Dallas, Tex., Dec. 14.—Christmas came early to the freshman football squad at Southern Methodist University.

Last week members of the squad—talking through split lips and walking on bruised legs received in almost daily scrimmage with the varsity team—made the rounds in an attempt to find a way to go to Pasadena to watch S. M. U. battle Stanford in the Rose Bowl.

All efforts failed.

Today there came a telephone call from Wilfred Kurth, New York philanthropist. He heard of the plight of the freshmen from "Bud" Sprague, his assistant secretary and former University of Texas and West Point gridiron star.

"I'm going to send those boys to that game," Kurth said. "I believe it will be the finest Christmas present anyone could give them."

Last-Race 'Also Ran' Still Running—Perhaps

By Walter Haight.

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Dec. 14.—"Give me something to remember you by—" goes the old song. Be there man, woman or child who saw today's seventh race at Charles Town and says that he or she will not remember it, I will answer loudly, "Nerts." The truth of the saying among turf followers that "something always happens at Charles Town" was brought out again today.

The mountain race track has certainly made the run of turf thrills. It has had the "painted horse," the race with not a win ticket on the winner, the fortunes in mutuels, the horse that was 12 lengths ahead in the stretch and then slid under the fence, the track that was washed out over night and forced a postponement of the races, the rock pile that used to shield the horses from sight on the clubhouse turn, the races where three and four horses out of every field of eight fell, the wholesale suspension of jockeys, the cases of doped and stimulated horses by the dozens and a winner which closed at 8-5 and paid a $16.80 mutuel.

But the race of races was run here today.

The boys in the pressbox dubbed it "The Merry-Go-Round Handicap" when it first appeared in the entries. Tonight, were they given another chance they probably would tag it the "Heaven Forbid Another Purse." Not only was this race run, but as far as I could ascertain before leaving the track on the special train a half hour after the horses were off, it is still being run—at least, one horse is still running.

Opposite the name of the ancient gelding, Fluttering, in the chart is the notation, "Lost rider." However, this describes only the beginning of one of the longest one-horse marathons on record. Fluttering lost Jockey Eddie DeMayo in a most spectacular manner. Caught in a jam soon after the break, Fluttering suddenly decided to stop. DeMayo had not been let in on the secret, thus when Fluttering suddenly propped his four feet and stiffly slid through the mud, DeMayo went flying through the air—a man flying without trapeze. But if you think Fluttering would stop running due to the loss of a jockey, you are mistaken. Like the boys who had just begun to fight, Fluttering had just begun to run. Not only did Fluttering run, but Fluttering ran the opposite way on the track where the field was attempting to run two miles.

Running head-on into the group of horses, Fluttering luckily decided to swing wide—and the crowd drew a sigh of relief. But the show went on. Fluttering, suddenly realizing that he was not in England, where the horses run clockwise, stopped, turned about and began to circle the course the other way. The race was over by this time, but Flutter-

Temple Faces Georgetown Wednesday; Duke vs. Catholic U.

G. W. to Meet Richmond U. Tuesday

Owl-Hoya Game Is Seen Battle of Promising Sophomore Fives.

By Lewis F. Atchison.

A COUPLE of triple-barreled, sure-fire basketball attractions, which if consolidated in a twin-bill would pack any house, will be served up Wednesday night when Georgetown faces Temple at Tech High School, and Catholic University mets Duke at Brookland.

Either game would appease the most avaricious court fan's appetite, but putting both on the schedule the same night appears to be bidding, in a small way, for an acute attack of sports indigestion. Furthermore, each promises to generate enough excitement for a whole season of basketball.

Other games are scheduled here this week, but all others pale into insignificance beside the above pair.

Opens Conference Race.

Georgetown's skirmish with Temple officially opens the 1935-36 Eastern Conference race of both teams. It is doubly important to both, inasmuch as they are represented by teams dominated by sophomore talent, and victory will not only give the winner a flying start toward the championship, but will instill some much-needed confidence in the players.

Although the Hoyas plainly evidenced the need of more competition in their game against Western Maryland, they also gave the most impressive demonstration any Georgetown quintet has shown in recent years on opening night. Coach Fred Mesmer has in Nolan, Bassin, Petroskey, Nau, Keating and a lengthy list of others, enough talent to give the school its long-hoped for winner.

Great Freshman Team.

Temple's freshmen team was reckoned as one of the East's best last winter and it is in these youngsters that Coach Jimmy Usilton is placing his hopes for a successful winter. Smuckler, the Owl's football star; Dublin, Wise and Juenger are back from last year, but authoritative reports from Philly indicate that these boys will spend most of their time on the bench while the sophomores cavort on the boards.

Catholic University's game with Duke is the Cardinal's final pre-holiday appearance. Immediately after the game Hermie Schmarr, "Irish" Carroll, Bill Adamaitis, Joe Yanchulis and other gridmen on the squad, will put aside their court garb and don football regalia and resume preparations for the Orange Bowl game in Miami New Year's Day.

Has Won Two Games.

Two victories, one an impressive triumph over Roanoke, already dangle from the Cardinals' belt and Coach "Fod" Cotton's crew looks good enough to add another—Duke's. Catholic showed a remarkable improvement over its first appearance in swamping Roanoke, and if Schmarr, Lieb, et al, continue to improve the team is destined for a great year.

Little has been heard of the new Blue Devil machine, but Eddie Cameron's coaching genius is sufficient to insure a smooth and well coached quintet and the Cards can look to their laurels.

George Washington meets Richmond Tuesday night in the Spiders' bailwick, inaugurating the new week. American University has an engagement with Maryland State Normal the same night on the Eagles' court. It will be American's last game until February when this business of throwing the ball into a hoop will be resumed.

Rinaldis Clash With Sleuths On Court

TWO old foes boasting new winning streaks will renew their rivalry at 3 p. m. today on the George Washington University court where the Rinaldi Tailors tangle with Bureau of Investigation. J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the G-Men, will toss up the first ball.

A preliminary game involving Agriculture's high-powered quintet and the Marine Barracks will open the program at 2 o'clock.

Investigation will be seeking revenge for a couple of costly defeats inflicted by Rinaldi last season when the Tailors carried Sholl's banner to the District championship. Sholl's whipped the G-Men for the Community Center crown and again for the city title.

Investigation, with Walter Morris, Herb and Jim Thompson leading a cast of 19 former college stars, goes into action with the more impressive record, having amassed 152 points to 46 for the opposition in its five games. Twin Oaks, District 145-pound titleholder, is the newest addition to the Slueths' winning streak.

Coached by Dave Keppel, diminutive basketball official and one of the town's brightest stars in his heyday, the Rinaldis are inaugurating a program which has as its ultimate goal the national A. A. U. championship tournament at Kansas City.

The Tailors will be represented by a team comprised almost wholly of former all-high talent this afternoon. The line-up includes Ollie Tipton, Cliff Keyser and Carroll Shore, products of Central High School; Bobby Lucas, from old Business High School; Bill Noonnan and Sammy Hook, graduates of Eeastern. With five consecutive victories under their belt the boys are confident of continuing their domination over Investigation.

Down the Fairway . .

Sam Mosby's Lost Putter

I

SAM MOSBY lost his putter, and his golfing game
Is way up in the 90's, which is quite a blooming shame,
Because until that trusty club so strangely disappeared
Sam Mosby was an opponent whom everybody feared.

II

IT was an ancient implement like Noah was wont to use
For hammering nails into the ark before his famous cruise;
But when Sam took it in his hands and putted toward the pin
From every angle of the green, the little ball rolled in.

III

HE has another putter now, but, oh, on every green!
Sam's putts are just the weirdest things you have ever seen.
It is a new and costly club, but sad it is, I vow,
That Mosby can't collect the coin from anybody now.

IV

PERHAPS you think I stretch this tale a little bit too far,
So if so, you are not the golfer that I really think you are.
For when you lost your putter, all golfers will agree,
Your game, just like the old gray mare, ain't what it used to be.

—HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST.

By Dave Herman.

THE grim reaper caught up with Sam Mosby last week, and it is only fitting that we reprint a poem composed in his honor six years ago by the Poet Laureate of Golf, Henry Litchfield West.

"Sam Mosby's Lost Putter . . ." that was the title . . . and how these verses bring back memories of the day that beloved old gentleman discovered his pet putter was gone.

So beautifully written was the poem, and so touching that his friends asked permission from Mr. West to print several hundred copies to be distributed to his golfing companions at Washington Golf and Country Club.

A copy of the poem, in frame, hangs today in the Grill Room of the club where, for the last two decades, Sam Mosby whiled away his time golfing, weaving golf yarns in his own inimitable manner . . . for he had the reputation of being the best story teller at the club.

Sam Mosby was the golfers' best friend. If he had one friend he had a thousand. How in the world could the day be complete at Washington Golf and Country Club without a chat with Old Sam, the Bard of the Weather Bureau, or, better, the prophet of W. B.?

The club golfers looked to him as the man who could tell them whether it would rain or shine on Saturday or Sunday. They would make their golf dates accordingly.

If Sam Mosby predicted a good day, and it rained, he would come in for a lot of razzing from the boys at the club. But it was all in fun. They loved the old gentleman.

With him around there was happiness galore. Without him there is sadness.

Yes, he was an institution.

Mike, the Office Boy, Expresses Himself on Golf.

EMERSON tells us in his Law of Compensation that there is as much good on one side as there is bad. Thus it would appear that for every booster of golf, there is a knocker . . . Maybe—

Comes a bit of guest columning from our little red-thatched friend, Philip McCray, known as Mac in the summer time, and Mike in the winter.

Mike never swung a golf club in his life. Once he saw a fellow tee up a golf ball, but didn't wait around to see him drive. That is the extent of his golf career.

A student at George Washington University in the day time, an office boy at The Post at night, Mike thinks the game of golf is—well, let 'im tell you.

Take the mike, Mike:

I DON'T know the first thing about golf. I may some day, but it seems to me now that it is one game which has been the cause for more bad tempers, discontented wives, and nervous disorders than any one chronic mania with which America is afflicted.

I think that I'm a happy fella, just as I am. Therefore, I see no need of my taking up a game that will bleed my very small purse, make me rave about birdies when all the time I have had my head too close to the ground to see a bird if there were one . . and cause me to arise early on Sunday mornings and make my way to a large pasture, there to assume an owlish look over a silly little ball that just won't go where one wants it to go. All of which, I have noticed, causes one to swear viciously at a harmless, innocent caddy who cannot suppress a grin at the antics of an otherwise sensible man.

I admire an array of shiny and efficient looking golf clubs as they repose in a sporting goods store window. When I look at the tag tied to the leather bag, I am almost tempted to smash the window, put my hands in my pockets, and glare at the salesman inside.

There are so many things I could do with money which I might otherwise spend for golf equipment. There is, for example, that set of Dickens, and Fraser's "Golden Bough," both of which could be purchased thrice for the price of a set of flexible steel-shafted clubs. Instead of causing me no end of worry about a slice, these volumes could be the source of many a comfortable evening's loaf at home with my feet propped up on the occasional chair and with a bowl of fruit at my elbow.

Prefers Buying a Gun to Shoot His Birdies.

Again, I could, if I felt that I must spend the money on sporting goods, buy a lovely 20-gauge gun that I have had my mind set upon for these many moons, and with a darned good dog and a pocket full of shells, spend a day of peace with God's creatures in the woods or fields. With a good gun and the proper frame of mind (which has never failed to present itself to me with no persuasion), one can learn more real and valuable lessons in patience, tolerance and good will than he could with all the niblicks that Sandy McHerman ever entered upon an order blank.

And among my fellow non-duffers, I'm certain that I could find a large number of otherwise normal housewives who admit they have the comic-page title of "Golf Widows." These poor souls are an actual class—not the imaginative source of inspiration for the gagman. They sit at home on Saturday afternoon waiting . . . waiting . . . for a man who is busy either pursuing a ball about a large green plot of ground and swearing about his faults, or else is at the "Nineteenth Hole" with a group of men who make it a point to outlie each other concerning their respective games . . . which is usually bad in proportion to the greatness of his imagination.

These "golf widows" would like to see their husbands at home (some of them because they actuually love these men and others because the grass needs cutting or because they would like to have a companion for an occasional drive into the country) just once in a while.

If you will bear with me while I break the thread of discourse . . . a salesman has just come in. Salesmen have a way of coming in, you know . . . (a pause while I listen to his smooth patter) . . . He's gone. He was a smoothie! Very smooth. He sold me a set of matched clubs, and I'm off to try them out.

George-Chewaki Mat Meeting To Aid Post's Christmas Fund

By George Considine.

THE rassle boys will figuratively, don fur-trimmed red suits and white whiskers at the weekly mat show next Thursday night at Promoter Joe Turner's arena, for a generous percentage of the gate receipts will be turned over to The Washington Post Christmas fund.

Speaking of donning, it all seems very appropriate that Ed (Don) George, famous world champion, should be chartered to exude the feature grunts along with the rollicking redskin, Chief Chewaki. And speaking of fur, even the casual fan will tell you that such a match is sure to make it fly.

There are a lot of former world wrestling champions floating around, but Ed (Don) stands apart from the rest. As ex-champs go, Ed (Don) is generally recognized to be the No. 1 contender for the title now held by Danno O'Mahoney. Last time Danno and Ed (Don) got together up in Boston 45,000 customers filed through the turnstiles.

In Chief Chewaki the crown prince of Rasselmania meets the meanest man in captivity. Not content simply to scare his opponents to death with his King Kongish appearance, the heap bad tomahawk-toter has been known to enhance his grip repertoire with brass knuckles and other underworld "persuaders."

Just last Thursday, when he appeared for his match with Doug Wycoff, former Georgia Tech football star, the chief was wearing at least ten yards of adhesive tape on his right hand. His ham-like mitt wasn't hurt. He just wanted to smear Doug's classical profile.

In a semifinal, Dean Detton, Salt Lake City's contribution to top-notch wrestling, returns to local mat warfare to tangle with hard-boiled Abe Kashey, who nearly stole the show last week with his rough-and-tumble antics.

A special 30-minute number finds Vic Christie going through his paces with George Lenihan, while in the curtain-hoister Irish Jack Donovan will take on Rusty Westcott.

Howard Five Play First Game With Alumni Here

The Bison quint of Howard University, Colored Intercollegiate Association champions of the past two years, will open its season tomorrow night against a strong alumni five, including Mickey Syphax, "Sallie" Hall and Lois Williams.

At the forward stations will be Capt. Willie Wynne and Herbie Jones, last year's sensations. Millard Williams, Justin Plummer and "Pie" Hampton will hold the guard positions during the initial encounter and Woody Gwaltney, freshman flash from Philadelphia, will jump center.

Delaware and Hudson Boasts Star With 17-Point Average

By George Considine.

ONE of the greatest basket ball teams to show its wares during the current season is the Delaware and Hudson quintet, which is now leading the Heurich League with five victories and no defeats. As proof that the D. and H. five is no flash in the pan, it might be cited that the same players have worked together for six years and are now approaching mechanical perfection.

But with a man like Odell (Slim) Mayfield around the team's success is not surprising. It is so easy for the 6-foot 3-inch, 185-pound center to drop shots into the basket that the boys are saying he couldn't miss even if he wanted to. To say that Slim has an eagle-eye is to underestimate his ability.

During his four-year college career Mayfield maintained the dizzying average of 15 points a game. But that's all very juvenile when compared with his present pace. He is averaging better than 17 points a game for the current season. (Now prepare yourself for a real shock). Last Friday night, while Delaware and Hudson was mastering the Little Taverns, the slim one tallied 28 points.

Surrounding Mayfield is an array of talent that makes one blink one's eyes. There is Maurice (Shorty) Long, former University of North Carolina star, who has raised dribbling to a fine art. Duke University contributes Ted Capelli and Don Garber, the latter one of Washington's most proficient tennis players. The shiftiness of foot that Garber learned on the tennis court has proven to be one of the Delaware and Hudson's most important assets.

Others, whose work has aided the D and H cause, include: George Beach, former Tech High luminary, Gordon Ball, Lawrence Ball, Joe Curtin, Jack Martin and Joe Rhodes.

Tech Five Bows To G. W. Yearlings

Tech High's basketball team became the third straight victim of the season for George Washington's freshman five last night as the collegians far outclassed the Maroon for a 33-to-15 triumph. It was the second game of the season for the high school, which opened its campaign with a victory over the Catholic University freshmen.

The collegians got off to a fast start with Sid Silkowitz, the New York marksman contributing most of the damage as they swept to a 20-to-3 lead in the first half. Tech converted the score into more respectable proportions in the final half against the freshman second stringers.

Silkowitz led the scoring for both teams with 12 points.

Football Today.

National Capital City league football games today find American Beer playing the Palace Preps at 2:30 p. m.; the Virginia Avenue 135-pound team meeting the Brookland Boys Club at 1 p. m. and the Georgetown Boys Club tackling the Centennials at 3 p. m. The latter game will be held on No. 2 West Potomac field. Georgetown Boys Club needs a win or a tie to win the championship.

Gallaudet Trims Southeastern U.

The Gallaudet basketball team made an auspicious debut last night in the Kendall Green gym, overwhelming Southeastern U., 40 to 13. Individual honors were taken by Hoffmeister, of Gallaudet, who tallied 12 points. Ellerhorst, of Gallaudet, and Jacobson, of the visitors, each accounted for ten points.

From the opening whistle the Blues outplayed their rivals and by half-time had rolled up a count of 21 to 8. The second half was a duplication of the first, with the ultimate result never in doubt.

Teams Vie Today For Soccer Title

In a game that will decide the first-half championship of the Recreation Soccer League, Sun Radio will boot it out with Littoria at 2:30 p. m. today on the Rosedale playground field. Neither team has been defeated, but Sun Radio leads by a single point because Littoria was recently held to tie by Occoquan.

Other Recreation League contests find Mitchell Brothers opposing Sabaudia at 1 p. m. on the Benning field and Silver Spring playing host to Occoquan at 2:30 p. m. on the Montgomery-Blair high school field.

At 3 p. m. on the Benning field Heurich Brewers will sqaure off against the strong Bethlehem Steel of Baltimore booters, in the second round of the Southeastern championships. The locals will be out to avenge a defeat handed them earlier in the season.

Marine Corps Riflists Beaten by Guardsmen

The District of Columbia National Guard rifle team outshot the Marine Corps marksmen by a score of 1,390 to 1,368 yesterday on the Marines Corps range. Individual honors went to Sergt. T. I. Harrell, of the guardsmen, with 286 out of a possible 300.

American Five Beaten, 41-22, In Debut

HOPELESSLY mired behind a 24-4 disadvantage at the close of the first half, American University's basketball forces staged a sudden, but futile rally, last night in losing to Hampden-Sydney, 41-22, in their opening game of the season. A near capacity house saw the Eagles in their debut.

To see the newest product of Walter Young's coaching career in that disastrous first period would lead one to wonder how the Eagles ever mustered enough courage to schedule the veteran Farmville quintet. But the closing stanza unravelled an entirely different, and for American supporters, a far more pleasing picture as the Young men outplayed their opponents most of the way.

Beginners' Luck Fails.

Inexperience and nervousness contributed to American's downfall. The Eagles rarely took a shot at the bucket, principally because the Tigers had possession of the ball most of the time. But even when they did get the ball they just passed it around as though exercise was all they wanted. Meanwhile, Bill Formwalt and Birch Douglas literally were pouring points through the bucket for the winners. Formwalt rang up 15 and Douglass went him one better.

The Eagles emerged from their shell of modesty in the last half, and with Mel Wheatley, Walter Edwards and Syd Zink doing yoemen duty, got back into the battle with a display of court pyrotechnics that threatened, briefly, to blast the Virginians right out of the picture.

At the annual meeting of the President's Cup Regatta Association, John A. Remon was re-elected president and Dr. Roy Lyman Sexton was voted to the office of vice president. Robert V. Fleming will serve again in the capacity of treasurer.

The executive secretary will be elected in the near future by the board of directors, which includes E. C. Baltz and Dr. Roy Lyman Sexton, of the Corinthina Yacht Club; L. Gordon Leech and William Shelton, of the Chesapeake and Potomac Power Boat Association; J. A. Councilor and Rear Admiral Harry V. Hamlet, of the President's Cup Association, and Thomas Keane and Thomas Lodge, representatives of the District Commissioners.

District 'Y' Wrestlers Win Over Wilmington

The Washington Y. M. C. A. wrestling team defeated the Wilmington (Del.) "Y" matmen last night, 18 to 11, at the Central Y. M. C. A. It was the opening match of the season for Coach Tom Clayton's forces. The Capital grapplers took four first places in seven matches wrestled. Three of the local triumphs were on falls.

126-pound class—Frank Genevich (Wilmington), defeated Max Schayre, 10 to 3.

135-pound class—Robert T. Myers (Washington), threw Noland Whitesell (Wilmington), on a fall in 3:28.

145-pound class—Tom Scott (Washington), defeated Roy Four on a fall in 6 minutes.

155-pound class—Tony Rapp (Washington), defeated Sigmund Kilos, 18 to 3.

165-pound class—Bernard Nelson (Wilmington), defeated Roy Potter, 3 to 0.

175-pound class—Frank Mitchell (Washington), defeated Roland Ackermann on a fall in 1:45.

Heavyweight class—George Jackson (Washington), threw Ted Wakefield in 7:58.

Paterson Five Will Oppose Heurich

Saunders, Borgeman and Clasco Are Among Invading Stars.

A GALAXY of professional basketball stars styled the Paterson (N. J.) Panthers will invade the Heurich emporium this afternoon to meet the Heurich Brewers. The game will start at 3:30.

American League title contenders, Paterson will present for the delectation of local fans such experts as Rusty Saunders, Benny Borgeman and George Clasco, who cut up capers with the now defunct Palace Pros here about a decade ago.

Although neither is the lithe youngster he was 10 years ago, Saunders, Borgeman and Glasco have lost none of their cunning as far as bullet-like passing and dead-eye shooting are concerned.

Leading Scorer.

Borgeman for years was the leading scorer in the American League, and Saunders has no peer in the art of the pivot play. As a guard, there are few pros in the league who can smear passes and leap up for the backboard bounce better than little Glasco.

Among others who will play for Paterson are Al Kellett, 6-foot 4-inch center; Dave Bass and Milt Trupin, fresh from college. Bass for four years was a star at New York University, and Trupin is a protege of the great Nat Holman, coach at City College.

In practice last week Joe Croson, the big, burly center, and Yowell, the former Maryland University ace, showed lots of old time zip, and promise to blend with Bennie, Buscher and Evans into a winning outfit today.

Speakers Laud G. W. High's Grid Team

ALEXANDRIA, Va., Dec. 14.—Praise ran fluently here tonight for George Washington High School's football team, which, this year, swept through one of the most successful seasons in the history of the school, winning 10 of the 11 games it played.

The players were not only the toast of the town and the mayor of Alexandria, but also of the football coaches of Georgetown University and V. M. I. at a banquet tendered jointly at the George Mason Hotel by the Pep Club and Alumni Association of the school.

Mayor Davison shared the speakers' role with Coach Jack Hagerty of Georgetown and Francis Summers of V. M. I. H. V. Moncure, principal of the school, introduced the speakers. Miss Gertrude Smith, president of the Pep Club, was in charge of the arrangements.

Monogrammed sweaters were awarded to 20 members of the squad by Fred Pettit, president of the Alumni Association. Capt. Paul Shu, All-State backfield choice, headed the list of recipients which included Lee Fones, Bennie Burrell, Cliff Davis, Bill Worden, Al Stewart, Hardy Mendleson, Lindsey Noble, Fred Kirchner, Izzy Kleinman, Wimp Wayland, Tom Nnnis, Mitchell Burroughs, Dick Burrell, Bernard Cooke, John Nugent, Louis Robinson, John May, Carlin King and Manager Gorham.

Following the banquet, George Washington easily defeated Washington-Lee in basketball, 33 to 17, in a Virginia State League contest. Nappy Nugent, flashy football end, led the scoring with 14 points.

The Columbia No. 4 basketball team swamped the North A. C. five 33 to 16, last night on the Alexandria Armory Hall court.

Corner Boy in Upset Victory as Eastern Racing Season Ends

$19.40 Mutuel Is Paid by Winner

7,000 Attend Last Day of Muddy Sport at Charles Town.

By Walter Haight,

A Staff Correspondent.

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Dec. 14.—Corner Boy fooled the last day customers at another Charles Town meeting. The son of Stratford, which waited until the last program of the summer session to outclass a field by 12 lengths, came back today to toy with his opposition in the $600 Jennings Randolph Handicap. Breaking well, Corner Boy was rushed into the lead and the farther the field went the greater was his advantage.

A select few of the 7,000 who witnessed racing under miserable track condition, had their important money on Corner Boy and they cashed at the rate of $19.40 for each $2 investment. Second money went to Billowy Wave which had a margin of a half length over Postponement.

Although there was no rain during the afternoon, the track was knee deep in mud and water. The times for the races were the worst ever recorded over this oval.

Furled Flag proved the only bad actor in the lineup at the barrier and lost all chance when he swerved at the break. When Starter Palmer let the field go, Corner Boy jumped to the front and it was all over except the pay-off. Jockey A. Diliddo, whose presence in the saddle had much to do with the large odds on Corner Boy, guided his mount along the rail saving ground all the way. Billowy Wave came from far back but not to get into the fight for first money, but he did succeed in taking the place from Postponement. The latter had occupied the role of No. 1 chaser most of the way and the muddy going tired him out.

The disappointment of the race, among others, was the showing or lack of showing of Jinnee, the favorite. The colt would not extend itself at any stage and finished fifth.

Rolling Along, ridden by Jockey J. Brooks, made it two straight victories by taking the first race at a $5.80 mutuel. Banna, a $57.80 place proposition, was second in the field of eight. Third money went to Tuleyries Star. Truthfully, the early pace-setter, tired with a furlong to go and dropped out of the contention.

Bond Colors Win.

The popular red colors of the Bond Family of Baltimore were borne to victory in the second race by the favored Inscription, ridden by Sammy Palumbo. Lady Buck was second and Bromide third. Palumbo steadied Inscription along until the stretch and then came to the outside to put up a driving finish. The winner paid $3.80.

The third race went to Ardawn with Jockey Tryon in the saddle. The filly was rushed to the front going to the first turn and was never threatened. Coming Back was in trouble taking the first turn, gained a lot of ground thereafter, but hung in the last sixteenth. Hard Chase was third. The winner paid $6.40.

The "Battletown" purse, named for the "Battle of Charles Town," proved a romp for Paul Junior despite an assignment of 122 pounds. The son of Sun Edwin bounded to the front at the break and he gave his backers no anxious moments. Ray Booker did the riding in excellent fashion and a pay-off of $11.40 was displayed. Gentleman closed a lot of ground to be second ahead of Stack Arms.

Colored Season Ends.

Winding up action in the Washington Colored Football Conference the Northeast A. C. will exchange punts and plunges with Anacostia today at 1 p. m. at Gonzaga Stadium and Navy Yard faces St. Cyprian immediately thereafter.

Old Oaken Bucket Is Alexandria's Reward

Symbolic of victory in the annual Washington-Lee High School-George Washington High football game, an old oaken bucket last night passed into possession of the Alexandria team. Gertrude Smith, president of the G. W. High Pep Club, which feted the Alexandria team at a banquet, made the presentation. At left is "Tubby" Walsh, Washington-Lee captain; at right, Paul Shu, G. W. captain. George Washington won the game, 12 to 9.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ROLLING ALONG, $5.80, $4.20, $3.00; BANANA, $57.80, $12.60; TULEYRIES STAR, $2.60.

ROLLING ALONG, hustled from the start, took command when straightened on the back stretch, was rated in front when clear, saved ground and was well in hand at the finish. BANANA refused to extend herself in the early stages but closed with good speed. She was no match for the winner. TULEYRIES STAR, slow to find her speed, gradually improved her position, but could not get up.

SECOND RACE—Charles Town course. The Winchester. Purse, $350; allowances. For all ages. Start good from stall gates. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 2:09. Off at 2:10½. Winner, Mrs. J. B. Bond's ch. f. (3), by Messenger—Super Rock. Trained by J. B. Bond. Value to winner, $230; second, $65; third, $35; fourth, $20. Time, 0:25 2-5, 0:50 4-5, 1:21, 1:25.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—INSCRIPTION, $3.80, $3.60, $3.00; LADY BUCK, $6.80, $4.80; BROMIDE, $4.40.

INSCRIPTION, taken back from the early pace, moved up on the outside on the final turn and gradually wore LADY BUCK down. The latter had good speed to take command from the outset, was rated in front, but could not withstand the challenge of the winner. BROMIDE forced the early pace and held on well. HOGARTY appeared to dislike the going but closed well. VERITAS raced evenly but was tiring at the finish. The others were outrun.

THIRD RACE—About seven furlongs. The Loudoun. Purse, $350; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won ridden out; place, driving. Went to post at 2:37. Off at 2:39. Winner, H. M. Stewart's b. f. (4), by Artesian—Daughter of Dawn. Trained by H. M. Stewart. Value to winner, $230; second, $65; third, $35; fourth, $20. Time, 0:25 3-5, 0:51, 1:19 3-5, 1:33 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—ARDAWN, $6.40, $2.60, $2.40; COMING BACK, $2.40, $2.60; HARD CHASE, $3.80.

ARDAWN was hustled into command early, was rated in front when clear, shook off a challenge from HARD CHASE and drew clear under mild pressure. COMING BACK lacked speed to keep up in the early stages but closed resolutely. HARD CHASE forced the early pace, was hard ridden, but tired at the end. RADIATOR was well placed in the early running but was faltering at the finish.

FOURTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth. The Battletown. Purse, $350; claiming. For 2-year-olds. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:06. Off at 3:08½. Winner, Mrs. P. A. Shaw's b. c. (2), by Sun Edwin—Charred Keg. Trained by C. Pollard. Value to winner, $230; second, $65; third, $35; fourth, $20. Time, 0:26 1-5, 0:53, 1:22, 1:51 1-5, 1:59.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—PAUL JUNIOR, $11.40, $5.20, $3.00; GENTLEMAN, $6.80, $3.00; STACK ARMS, $2.40.

PAUL JUNIOR had good speed to go to the front immediately after the start, required shaking up when he appeared to loaf on the back stretch, drew out under the urging and was never threatened thereafter. GENTLEMAN lacked early speed, but closed stoutly on his own courage. He was no match for the winner. STACK ARMS raced evenly but could never threaten. WHAT CHEER made up some ground.

FIFTH RACE—One and one-eighth miles. The Jennings Randolph. Purse, $600. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 3:38. Off at 3:46. Winner, West and Coyle's ch. c. (4), by Stratford—Village Maiden. Trained by W. Right. Value to winner, $425; second, $100; third, $50; fourth, $25. Time, 0:25 1-5, 0:52, 1:22 2-5, 1:50 3-5, 2:01 4-5.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—CORNER BOY, $19.40, $5.20, $3.80; BILLOWY WAVE, $4.20, $4.20; POSTPONEMENT, $6.20.

CORNER BOY, favoring the going and well handled, was hustled into the lead at the start, saved ground while being rated in front and easily held sway to the finish. BILLOWY WAVE, slow to find her stride, gradually improved her position on the inside, closed with good courage, but was no match for the winner. POSTPONEMENT, closest to the leader throughout, gave way to BILLOWY WAVE in the final stride. FURLED FLAG could not improve his position. JINNEE was taken back sharply when in close quarters entering the back stretch and did not extend himself thereafter.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-quarter miles. The Conhongroota. Purse, $350; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:15. Off at 4:17. Winner, Mrs. J. C. Marino's ch. g. (6), by Sting—Dawn Star. Trained by A. Hutchins. Value to winner, $230; second, $65; third, $35; fourth, $20. Time, 0:26, 0:53 1-5, 1:23, 1:51 2-5, 2:23.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—WISHING STAR, $5.80, $4.00, $2.60; TENLESS, $4.40, $2.60; IRISH VOTE, $2.20.

WISHING STAR, favoring the going and well up from the start, wore down GOOD JEST on the final turn and drew out easily. TENLESS, raced in the first flight from the start, made up ground through the stretch but could not threaten the winner. IRISH VOTE was taken back sharply when in close quarters on the back stretch and made up considerable ground thereafter. PRINCESS WRACK was in trouble leaving the front stretch and bumped CALORIC while being pulled up.

SEVENTH RACE—Two miles. The Charles Washington. Purse, $350; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good from stall gates. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 4:44. Off at 4:45. Winner, Mrs. I. C. Mourar's b. g. (4), by Wrack—Roman Princess. Trained by I. K. Mourar. Value to winner, $230; second, $65; third, $35; fourth, $20. Time, 0:26 1-5, 0:53 2-5, 1:23 2-5, 1:52, 2:49 1-5, 3:53 4-5 (track record).

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BAY WRACK, $4.20, $2.80, $2.80; BROWN WREN, $3.40, $3.00; DOUBTLESS, $6.80.

BAY WRACK, rated behind the pace of SIEMPRE for a mile, moved to the front when called upon, drew out thereafter and easily held sway to the finish. BROWN WREN, under stout restraint for a mile, gradually made up ground thereafter but could not reach the winner. DOUBTLESS lacked early speed but made up some ground at the end. MISS CATALAN had some early speed, moved up after a mile, but faltered badly. SIEMPRE flashed speed but stopped. FLUTTERING lost his rider entering the stretch the first time around. RIVER ROSE fell on the back stretch after seven furlongs.

Furr-Wilson Title Fight Expected to Pack Arena Tomorrow

Pair Renews Old Rivalry In Ring

Ahearn Will Inaugurate Policy of Six-Round Supporting Bouts.

RENEWAL of the ancient rivalry between Phil Furr and Bob Wilson promises to bring to the new Joe Turner arena tomorrow night the first packed house since the fight site was opened a few weeks ago.

The District welterweight champion and Wilson are scheduled for 15 rounds, with Furr's title at stake. It will be the second time they have battled for the local crown, Furr having been declared the winner in a previous bout ordered by the Boxing Commission to determine who was the best welterweight in the District.

Since their last meeting both boys have been beaten several times, but the question of individual supremacy remains unanswered. Furr lost decisions to several out-of-town fighters, but always managed to pull himself together when his local title was at stake. His most recent victory was a knockout win over Sid Silas, whom he stopped in the thirteenth round of a championship encounter.

Wilson, who zoomed to prominence here before the last Furr fight by virtue of a record of eight knockouts in nine bouts, left immediately after his defeat by the present wearer of the local diadem for a tour of Australia.

The Australian tour was fairly successful, but Bobby longed for the homeland and returned to the States as quickly as possible. He was the victim of a quick—and disputed—knockout at the hands of Harry Dublinsky at Griffith Stadium last summer, but since has chalked up wins over Glen Morgan and Young Raspi.

Wilson was just rising from the canvas as the referee tolled "ten" in to Dublinsky battle and many believe he should have been allowed to continue. He stopped Morgan in Richmond, and in taking a decision from Raspi broke the Baltimore boy's jaw with his very good left hook.

Believing the customers want bouts packed with action and that the average preliminary fighter is unable to perform at top speed for more than a few rounds, Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn will inaugurate a new policy in the supporting card. Instead of the usual six and eight round bouts, there will be five four-round preliminaries.

Tony Livingston, the Quantico Marine, who was doing all right in his professional debut against Pike Muskogee last week until he lost his head and refused to cease firing when ordered, will meet Muskogee in a return match. Livingston had Muskogee on the floor in the first round, but the Baltimore deaf mute bounced back to send the Marine to the deck in the second, then Livingston lost his head—and the fight on a foul.

Stanford Carrier, Washington welterweight, has been matched with Bill Rose in another supporting bout. In the remaining engagements Doug Swetman will tackle Joe Doty, and Jack Huey and John Miller, a couple of colored welters, will have it out.

BRAWN PATROL

(With Apologies to Ed Sullivan.)

NEW YORK, Dec. 14.—Jimmy Johnston, the Little Napoleon of boxing, has eased himself into the saddle on the Joe Louis proposition . . . he must approve all opponents for Joe in fights held in the Garden . . . and his organization gets half the profits . . . Una Merkle, the beautious blonde cinema star, with the honeyed accent, is a regular patron of Jack Dempsey's when she's in New York . . . Ray Carlin, Frankie Klick's manager, has unearthed his white hope . . . a lad named Lou Nova, who won the National A. A. U championship in St. Louis this year . . . and boasts a string of amateur titles a mile long . . . Ray believes he will be the guy to uproot Louis in a few years.

Joe Lippa, the Ty-Ty, Georgia lad who is making good on the main stem, was to have fought Al Delaney, knockout conqueror of Bob Godwin, in his Garden debut . . . but something went wrong—or rather right for Joe . . . Max Schmeling has signed a new contract with Joe Jacobs . . . but Herr Yussel doesn't get near the cut he did under the old one, which expired a few weeks ago . . . That is why Yussel the mussle was trying so hard to sign Max up for a Louis bout last summer, and Schmeling held out . . . Incidentally, Hans Birkie, who gave Louis one of his best fights, was to have met the Brown Bomber in the Garden this winter, but Schmeling insisted that Louis take no more fights following the Retzleff bout next month until his date with him in June.

Ted Deglin, publicity impresario at the Garden, will be in Havana for the Dark Destroyer's bout with Isidore Gastanaga. . . . Frankie Klick is signed to fight Lew Ambers in the Garden. . . . With the winner to meet Tony Canzoneri again for the lightweight championship. . . . Sh-h-h, breathe it lightly, but our inside information department tells us Marty Gallagher is under consideration for a bout against Joe Louis at the Garden (Ohmigawsh, can't this guy write about anything but the Garden or anybody but Joe Louis?) . . . Three once great fighters sponsored preliminary boys on the card at you-know-where between Paulino Uzcudun and You-know-who last night. . . . Young Jack Gibbons, son of old Mike Gibbons; Jack Dempsey's Joe Lipps and Lew Tendler's Al Ettore. . . . Jack Dempsey still needs a shave . . . and so does Francis Albertanti . . . but Max Waxman always is as freshly barbered as a college boy on his first date with a show girl. . . .

The high-priced customers were so late arriving for the Louis-Uzcudun fight that the fisticuffing fuss might have been thought a complete washout when the first preliminary boy clambered into the ring. . . . Had one looked only at the $16.50 ringside seats . . . but a glance at the galleries, which were not only filled, but jammed with standees, would have corrected that impression in short order. . . . The celebrities reached the scene of action fashionably late . . . giving the photographers plenty of worries shooting the second-rate early arrivals . . . then a lot of work breaking up their early shots in favor of the pictures taken later of really important people.

Gulli Retains Her Title in 8th Sweeps

Young Second by 4 Pins in Annual Meyer Davis Bowling Event.

LORRAINE GULLI, ace Capital duck pinnists, successfully defended her title, to win the eighth annual Meyer Davis Sweepstakes, last night at the Lucky Strike alleys, downing a field of 30 entries with a total pinfall of 1,173. Lucille Young finished second with 1,169. Catherine Quigley took third place with 1,162 and Annetta Matthew gained fourth with 1,129.

Gulli came through to win after trailing Catherine Quigley at the end of the first block by 30 pins when the latter took the lead with a brilliant 616 set. Gulli's consistent rolling assured her of victory, adding a 587 set to her first block total of 586. Lucile Young made a gallant effort to cop the title, shooting a 599 set which was tops for the block.

The winner's share was $45; second place, $22.50; third, $12.50 and fourth, $10.

Grays Face Martins.

The Mount Rainier Grays, Prince George County basketball champions, will endeavor to prolong their winning streak tomorrow night when the fast Saint Martin quintet is met in the Mount Rainier High gym.

City Baseball Champions Given Post Trophies, Symbolic of Title

Chris Heurich, jr., presents to Capt. Huck Stahl, of the Heurich team, one of the miniature gold baseballs awarded by The Washington Post to the individual league champions of The Washington Post Baseball Association. The Heurich team, after winning the Industrial League title, captured the District championship in the inter-league play-off. Heurich Fetes Brewer Nine At Banquet

MEMBERS of the Heurich baseball team, champions of the Industrial League of The Washington Post Baseball Association, were honored last night at the annual "athletic night" and banquet sponsored by Chris Heurich, jr., team backer, at Schneider's Cafe.

Gold baseballs, gifts of The Post, were presented the following players:

Huck Stahl, shortstop and captain; Fee Colliere, catcher and captain-elect; Ed Ratke, first-baseman; Bud Shelton, second baseman; George Ortell, 1934 captain and third-sacker; Dick Wingate, Ev Russell, Mike Chaconas, Dick Knight, Ralph Bennie, Johnny Fenlon, outfielders; Gordon Freas, Frank Cumberland, infielders; Pete Bechert, catcher; Reggie Brown, Frank Watt and Walter Jones, pitchers; Bill Flester, manager and president of the Industrial League, and Heurich.

More than 50 athletes, members of the baseball, bowling, soccer and basketball teams were present.

Many Speakers

Buck O'Neill, local sports writer, was master of ceremonies. Those who spoke were Bill McGowan, famous American League umpire, Dutch Bergman, coach of Catholic University's football team; Joe Judge, former Washington baseball club infielder; Nick Altrock, comedian-coach of the Nationals; Johnny Fenlon, Fredericksburg High coach; Max Farington, assistant director of athletics at George Washington; Jimmy Green, president of the District Umpires Baseball Association; Bozey Berger, budding star of the Cleveland Indians; Bob Considine, of the Herald, and Dave Herman, of The Post.

McGowan said that Frank Cavarretta, young Chicago infielder, was one of the best ball players he ever saw.

Tangora, "Cops and Robbers" Hero, Aims for G-Man Post

PAUL TANGORA, the Washington youth and Northwestern University guard, who ferreted out and fell on a Notre Dame fumble to start the Irish downhill toward their first defeat, and who later made the All-America team, wants to be a G-man. An Associated Press dispatch from Evanston, Ill., seat of Northwestern where the former Devitt Prep star is working for his degree, disclosed that he is taking courses that will fit him for a career in the Bureau of Investigation.

At Tangora's home on Fifteenth street last night, a sister recalled that Paul as a child, was extremely fond of the juvenile game of "cops and robbers," and that he always arrayed himself on the side of the law. But she added that his intentions of becoming a G-man were "news to the family."

Tangora made a tour of inspection of the Bureau of Investigation on his last visit home, escorted by Charley Fish, former Georgetown University boxing star. In Chicago the Northwestern star is a warm friend of "Babe" Cannoughton, former Georgetown tackle and All-America selection, who is a Department of Justice attorney, and also of Danny Sullivan, a former Gonzaga High School center, who is one of the ranking officers in the Chicago office of the Bureau.

District Bowlers Vie in Baltimore

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Baltimore, Md., Dec. 14.—With nearly 30 Washington bowlers entered, the second annual Ray Von Dreele classic, a seven-game contest, will be held here tomorrow afternoon and night.

Meyer Jacobson, who won the event last year, will be forced to forfeit the title because of illness. Officials estimate the competing field at seventy.

Bowling Champs At Silver Spring

The national champions doubles team, Helen Randlett and Oliva Schmidt, of Richmond, will make their appearance at the Silver Spring (Md.) alleys this afternoon at 2:30, meeting Evelyn Ellis and Catherine Quigley, local woman bowlers, rated highly in the national rankings.

Carrying averages well over 110, the Richmond pair is fresh from a victory over Lorraine Gulli and Polly Shugrue, gaining victory by bettering its own world record mark of 764. Mrs. Quigley, one of the game's most consistent stars and No. 1 honorary bowler of the country, is holder of the 25-game world's record and is carrying an average of 111 in the Ladies District League.

Sweepstakes To Jarman, Spillman

PAUL JARMAN and Russell Spillman, two Virginia bowlers whose duckpin activities are concentrated on local mapleways, topped a field of 15 crack doubles teams to win the fifth annual Atlantic Coast Doubles sweepstakes, which was completed last night at the Recreation alleys.

Leading at the end of the first block at the Rosslyn (Va.) alleys in the afternoon by a scant margin of four pins, the Virginia pair adjourned to the Recreation, where they boosted their grand total to 2,533 to nose out Astor Clarke and Joe Harrison, the latter two closing with a rush only to finish second, nine pins short.

Ollie Pacini and Joe Freschi, second at the end of the first block and pressing the leaders all the way, finished third with 2,506.

In chalking up the victory, Russell Spillman turned in a brilliant individual performance, rolling a sensational 707 set in his first block and 652 in the second for a high ten-game mark of 1,359. Astor Clarke was second high with a 1,307 total, in which he included a high game of 171.

The value to the winners was $65; second place amounted to $40 and $25 for third. Consolation prizes of $5 each to nonwinners were annexed by Harry Hilliard with a 151 game; Reds Megaw's 638 set, Seims' 159 game and Smith's 636 set.

S. E. Fives Led By Congress Heights

Teams to Be Divided Into Sections When Play Is Resumed in 1936.

THE first series of games in the Southeast Community Center Basketball League will close by the first of the new year when a complete revision of the schedule will be effected. Thirty-eight games have been played since the league started November 1. Congress Heights A. C. is now leading the league with seven victories and no defeats, with the Trojans a close second with four wins and one loss.

After January 1, Congress Heights, Eagles, Nu Chi Gamma and the Trojans, who appear to be much stronger than the other teams in the circuit, will play a schedule of games and will be known as the Class A Section.

Section B Teams Listed.

Section B will be made up of the remaining eight teams, Northeast Business Men, Sigma Mu Gamma, Epworth, American Stone Co., Government Printing Office, Marvin Methodists, O'Donnell's Restaurant and Eighth Street Southeast Business Men. This eight-team league will be more evenly balanced and competition and rivalry more intense than the original set-up.

There will be two stellar attractions at Hine Junior High this week. The Epworth Girl's sextet, who did not lose a game last season, will play a Southern Conference game with Mount Vernon on Tuesday night at 8:15, and on Thursday at 9:15, Congress Heights will battle the Trojans. If the Trojans should win, a tie will be created in the Southeast League.

Games This Week.

Monday, 7:15 p. m., Northeast Business Men vs. Epworth Church; 9:15 p. m., Sigma Mu Sigma vs. Epworth.

Tuesday, 7:15 p. m., Nu Chi Gamma vs. Northeast Business Men; 8:15 p. m., Epworth Girls vs. Mount Vernon; 9:15 p. m., Eagles vs. unnamed opponent.

Wednesday, 7:15 p. m., American Stone Co. vs. Marine Reserves; 8:15 p. m., G. P. O. vs. Eighth Street Business Men; 9:15 p. m., Trojans vs. Golden Bears.

Thursday, 7:15 p. m., American Stone Co. vs. Eighth Street Business Men; 8:15 p. m., O'Donnell's vs. Marvins; 9:15 p. m., Congress Heights vs. Trojans.

Friday, 9:00 p. m., Eighth Street vs. Eagles.

Horse Is Running At Charles Town

ing kept going, and he had company. Miss Catalan, with Jockey J. Brooks in the saddle, had come to the conclusion that a two-mile race was not enough exercise for a lady, so she proceeded to circle the track twice behind Fluttering while Brooks tried in vain to bring her to a halt.

Miss Catalan finally stopped, but Fluttering started playing a game of "horse, horse, who's got the horse." Stablemen ran out on the track and tried to stop him. He dodged them. The out-rider went out on the lead pony, but Fluttering eluded him. Not once, but several times. The boys in the press box completed their stories, the lights were on in the mutuel department and most of the crowd had left the plant.

But Fluttering was still running. One of the track touts had said before the race, "That Fluttering can run all night" when some doubt was cast on the horse's stay ability. In my book I will place the notation, "Fluttering can run for a week."

As I said before, Fluttering is still running—as far as I know. If you arrive at the track for the meeting next June and see a skeleton of a horse, staggering around the track it will be Fluttering—still fluttering.

But Fluttering was not the only horse to lose a rider during the race. River Rose, a daughter of Tutti Frutti, separated herself from the dusky jockey, C. Grigg, the first time around the course. To get the right picture, I must remind the readers that the track was so full of water this morning that the track superintendent caught two bluefish trolling; at least, that was the report.

Now, a horse by the name of River Rose cannot be expected to run 2 miles. Naturally, she decided to swim. At the far turn, the first time around, River Rose dove into the mud. After using the "Australian crawl" for 50 yards, the filly found that Jockey Griggs couldn't do anything but the "Dead-man's float." So she left him on the track, arose and ran to the nearest gate—the shortest way to the stable.

The winner? Oh, yes, it was Bay Wrack.

came after a march of 81 yards. With two dashes of 25 yards by Randous helping their cause, the Panthers moved steadily to within 7 yards of Southern California's goal. Randour then helped himself to his only touchdown of the year. Homer Beatty blocked the try for extra point.

Accounts and Deposits Pin League in Debut

An added starter will be listed among the numerous duckpin leagues of the city tomorrow afternoon at the Columbia alleys when the office of the commissioner of accounts and deposits, of the Treasury Department, makes their debut with a 10-team league, formed under the guidance of A. Schumann, jr. An official of the department will start the first ball rolling down the alley at 5:15 p. m.

Letters of Philo the Penguin

By H. I. Phillips

Dear Ed:

I don't know whether you have noticed it or not, but if you have seen many musical shows during the past two or three years, a revolution was taking place right under your nose. I do not mean a revolution in the sense of violence, but a revolution in stage scenery. It used to be thought necessary to have scenery really look like something. All the old-time producers had an idea that scenery should be as realistic as possible, even in musical shows, but a look at the settings for the acts and skits in recent productions leaves the audience wondering whether the idea is to save money, let some modernistic artists have a good workout, or just confuse the spectators.

* * * *

For instance, if there was a little comedy skit written around a man and wife at home in a living room, the producer would build a scene that looked like a living room and under no circumstances could it be mistaken for a subway kiosk, a modernistic mousetrap or a turnip field. If the skit was one of those boudoir things, the scene would look sufficiently like a bedroom to give the audience the general idea. Nobody would have to study the setting intently before making up his mind whether the acting was taking place in a delicatessen store or a haymow. And if the scene was supposed to represent a business office, it never looked like a collection of old desks against a background suggesting a welsh rarebit nightmare.

* * * *

David Belasco was a stickler in such matters and he became famous for his attention to the minutest details in attaining realism in the theater. If Dave had a scene in a living room he would devote months to collecting the correct pieces of furniture and furnishings, even to a convincing log in the open fireplace. He was the envy of all producers. But within the last few years a sort of modernistic mania has set in and it has now reached such alarming heights that nobody can sit in a theater and watch a scene with any real conviction whether the goings on are happening in a house or out on the middle of a skating pond.

* * * *

The other night I saw a sensational musical revue, one of the hits of the year. One of the acts was supposed to take place in a hotel in Paris. Well, the scenery consisted of a purple back drop with an impressionistic map of France on it, an arched doorway with a crimson flare looming through it, and a love seat and one chair. The audience couldn't get any idea whether the skit was taking place in China, Hindustan or Wappingers Falls until it listened to the dialogue or looked at the program.

* * * *

There was another skit supposed to take place in Moscow. This was acted before a curtain on which was crudely painted the face of a Cossack with a red beard. The door was represented by something that looked like a huge sofa pillow enlarged 100 times. Whenever anybody entered they seemed to come out of the pillow. There was a table, a telephone and a pair of boots on the stage. I suppose the boots were put in to make the Russian atmosphere convincing. But it was all Greek to me until an actress walked on and said, "Ah, how lovely to be in Moscow!"

* * * *

I went to another big musical show recently. It was more or less about sea travel, but do you think there was anything like a boat shown in the entire production? Certainly not. One of these modernistic scenic artists had just draped the entire production with loose curtains of light grey decorated with drawings of leaping mackeral, playful seals and here and there a mermaid. There was one drop in pale green on which he had daubed a couple of waving lines and scrawled a rough outline of a lighthouse leaning over at an angle of about 45 degrees. This was supposed to give the audience the atmosphere of a day on the bounding main and the scenic artist was praised by most critics as a genius and a great discovery.

* * * *

This business of trying to throw the cash customers off the track and keep them from understanding a show has gone too far. I like to have a general idea what a skit is about and where it is supposed to be taking place. If it is a scene in a cafe, I like to see a regular bar with mirrors, free lunch, masculine bartenders, a cash register and a bowl of pretzels. It balls me up to see the curtains unfold and show a red, white and blue tea table presided over by six chorus boys in knee pants against a red plush curtain and be told that it is the well-known bar of some swanky London hotel. And when there is a comedy skit with a Scottish background, 100 yards of black velvet, a lounge and a few strains of "I Love a Lassie" from the orchestra will still leave me wondering what it's all about.

I cannot yell too loudly for the return of a little realism in stage settings, particularly in musical shows. Those modern scenic artists are just playing a joke on the producers. And it is time the producers got wise to it. The cash customers are getting sore.

Yours,

PHILO THE PENGUIN.

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, DECEMBER 15, 1935 B

Americans Reveal Their Hopes and Fears in Nation-Wide Poll

1. 'Cure unemployment'— More vital than any other issue, Americans decide, is the problem of finding jobs for the jobless.

2. 'Stop waste'— "Government spending" is another constant refrain.

3. 'Stay neutral'— The third ranking issue of today is preserving American neutrality in any warfare outside the United States, citizens declare.

Jobs, Economy, War Top List of Worries

Thousands Indicate Concern Over Increased Taxes, Government Extravagance and the Unemployment Problem.

By Dr. George Gallup,

Managing Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

New York, Dec. 14.—"Solve unemployment."

"End government extravagance."

"Keep us out of war."

Those are the chief thoughts in the mind of America today.

Until time satisfies these demands America will continue to ponder them. And no session of Congress, no party platform, no serious candidate for high office will succeed in avoiding them.

They are the issues of today. They may continue to be the issues throughout 1936.

Employment. Economy. Neutrality.

Voter after voter throughout the United States, in the last few weeks, opened his ballot from the National Weekly Poll of Public Opinion and wrote down the equivalent of one of these words. Then he returned it to the organization which reports the facts about public opinion—the American Institute of Public Opinion.

The ballot asked, "What is the most vital issue before the American people today?" Without any suggestive list of issues being offered on the ballot, or any place provided to draw an easy "X," thousands of Americans took time to write down their opinions or reported them to one of a staff of 100 interviewers.

Voters sent in their views from every State in the Union. Voters from every familiar pattern of life—from farms, from small towns, from cities. Unemployed voters. Voters poor but self-supporting. Voters moderately well-to-do, and so on.

Employment. Economy. Neutrality.

They answered what was on their minds.

"Save the Constitution," Write Some Citizens.

There are other issues, the survey shows, that Americans are pondering. The Constitution is one. Taxes and farm conditions are others. The policies of President Roosevelt are an issue.

"Save the Constitution."

"Reduce the tax burden."

"Get the farmers on their feet again"—write many Americans.

But the three foremost issues are employment, economy and neutrality. Together they outswell the 70 other issues which Americans thought worth writing on their ballots. They account for half of the total opinions cast.

Issues Will Be Laid On Capitol Doorstep.

When the Seventy-fourth Congress convenes at noon, next January [illegible] will find these three issues on the Capitol doorstep.

The employment issue is familiar enough. It was an issue in 1932. It is still an issue after three years of trials with public works, with the dole, and now with work relief. Platforms to deal with it will be framed by each of the major parties; but today, although citizens in every section of the Nation rank it the No. 1 vital issue, it will will probably not be the subject of the hottest political cross-fire in the coming campaign.

Democrats and those who identify themselves on their ballots as favoring a third party agree in ranking it above all other issues in importance. Republicans place it second to the issue of "curbing Government extravagance"—the economy issue. Young persons who have become of voting age since 1932 name it twice as often as their elders. Persons on relief rolls name it in six cases out of ten.

And the Bitterest Issue Of All—"Government Economy."

The bitterest issue in coming months may well be the issue of economy. It is an issue which has grown like a rolling snowball during the last two and a half years. Voters have watched with greater and greater disapproval, while Federal spendings mounted. Successive polls conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion chart this trend.

In a poll made nearly two years ago, slightly more than a third of the voters believed the government was spending too much for relief and recovery purposes. In a poll made this October, and published in The Washington Post and other leading newspapers from coast to coast, it was found that nearly two-thirds of the country were of the opinion the Government's expenditures for relief and recovery were too great. (The Washington Post, October 20.)

Although opposition to the Government's spending record does not necessarily mean a vote against Roosevelt in 1936, yet the economy issue is one on which all Republicans unite. It was their vote, in the October poll, which tipped the balance against Government spending. It is their sentiment which today swells the vote for "economy" (meaning retrenchment and a balanced budget) to the proportions of second-ranking national issue.

Republicans today rank it above employment in importance. It is the second-ranking issue in every section of the country. Democrats vote it No. 3 in importance by a slight margin. Third party adherents rate it one position higher, while younger persons and persons on relief pay scarcely any attention to it.

But the issue is there, simmering for the opening of Congress in January and for the campaign that is to follow. The Republicans know it. So do the Democrats. The President, in his Atlanta speech last month, recognized it when he defended both the "necessity for the expenditures of this Government" and the definite results we have attained with the dollars we have spent."

Nation Anxious Over Threat of European War.

Neutrality becomes more and more a positive issue for the United States as the Italo-Ethiopian war—with its tangent rows over sanctions, oil, and other materials of war—remains unsettled.

Today voters throughout the United States recognize that what is happening across the Atlantic deeply threatens our neutrality. It is the third great issue, their ballots declare. Only two sections—the Mountain States and the Pacific Coast, which are currently bestirred over Townsendism—place this issue lower than third.

As Congress considers measures to replace the temporary neutrality laws which it enacted at the last session, it finds America in a temper to re-enforce rather than to diminish them. Virtually half the voters of the country, according to a poll conducted in November by the American Institute of Public Opinion and published in The Washington Post and other leading newspapers, favor halting all exports to warring countries. Another one-third of the voters (37 per cent) urge partial embargoes. (The Washington Post, November 17.)

22 Vital Issues Named Most Frequently Today.

Of all the issues which voters named in the weekly poll's survey, 22 were named by 1 per cent or more of the total. The issues rank in America's mind, in order of importance, as follows:

1. Employment.
2. Economy in government.
3. Neutrality.
4. Reduction of taxes.
5. Preservation of the Constitution.
6. Ending the depression.
7. Less Government control of business.
8. Repudiation of the New Deal.
9. Townsend plan.
10. Labor problems.
11. Farm conditions.
12. Pensions.
13. Repudiation of President Roosevelt.
14. Redistribution of wealth.
15. Liquor control.
16. Religion and morality.
17. Maintenance of the New Deal.
18. Political honesty.
19. Social security.
20. Re-election of President Roosevelt.
21. Increased national defense.
22. Payment of the soldiers' bonus.

Among nearly 50 other issues which received recognition were revision of the Constitution, extension of Federal control over business, revision of the Supreme Court, communism, inflation, curbing of monopolies, education and birth control.

Voters Who Have Switched to G.O.P. Since 1932 Say—"Economy"

The list above probably holds the core of the major-party dispute of 1936.

This becomes apparent when the opinion of those who have shifted to the Republican Party since 1932 is recorded. These persons—who indicate on their ballots that they voted for Roosevelt in that year but would now vote for a Republican—are today vociferous in criticizing the Democratic Administration for extravagance and waste. Economy, they assert on their ballots, is the most vital issue before the American people today.

Republican spokesmen will likely seek to use this issue as a lever, therefore, to pry away from Democratic ranks as many conservatives as possible—of both parties—who may have voted for Roosevelt in 1932. Democratic leaders will rally to a defense of the spending program, and the broad grounds of the campaign will have been established for the rhetorical days to come.

Two other issues which scored recognition from 4 per cent or more of the voters in this survey hold portent for the coming campaign.

Reduction of taxes: This issue takes high place among the vital issues in the East and Middle West, but is sidetracked for pensions and the Townsend plan in the Mountain States and the Pacific Coast States. Republicans rank it fourth, and Democrats place it lower. Young persons and those on relief ignore it. President Roosevelt's latest fiscal messages have promised it attention: No higher taxation measures will be necessary, he has intimated—unless the cash bonus passes or the AAA processing tax structure collapses permanently.

Preservation of the Constitution: As an issue, this is almost strictly a Republican idea. But they place it immediately below employment in importance. New Republicans (i. e., persons who voted for Roosevelt in 1932 but who would vote Republican today), are much less concerned about it than regular Republicans.

This ballot is one of many thousands received from every section of the country in the polls reported on this page.

Most of the voters who returned ballots to the American Institute of Public Opinion in this survey of vital issues undoubtedly have never made a public speech, never written a letter to the editor of their newspaper, or been called to Washington to confer with a President of the United States.

The following are typical expressions of what they answer to the question:

"What is the most vital issue before the American people today?"

"Get back to God. Get rid of booze. Be ready to whip the rest of the world if necessary" . . . "Limit incomes and make multi-millionaires impossible" . . . "Get Uncle Sam out of his Santa Claus costume."

The largest single group of comments describe employment as today's most vital issue:

"Give 90,000,000 a chance to live or quit reproducing them" . . . "Chicken in everyone's dinner pail and jobs for all" . . . "Adjust our machinery of distribution so that everyone who wishes to work may work and have a just share of the profits of his toil" . . . "Unemployment is destroying the morale of our youth" . . . "More work, and bigger jails for those who won't work" . . . "Starvation is the issue—how to avoid it."

"Employment is the issue. If a man's employed he has money and he's happy" . . . "Get work for the people and put them to work. This relief business is a pain. I never was in favor of it but there are a lot of things that a man gets that he's not in favor of anyhow" . . . "Open up the factories, and give people a chance to work" . . . "Find a method by which every man can earn a living" . . . "Find where the next meal is coming from."

Vociferous are the citizens who complain against the Government's expenditures for relief and recovery purposes, against phases of the New Deal and against the Brain Trust:

"Send Tugwell to Russia and keep him there" . . . "Rid the Government of book worms and put in level-headed business men" . . . "Having a White House instead of a nut house. Get our feet on the ground and some common sense in our heads" . . . "Put men at the head of the Government that have at least a child's mind" . . . "Abate the New Deal nuisance" . . . "Stop increasing the national debt. All this pauperizing of the lower stratum is merely prolonging the depression. Put relief on the local communities and then only to the deserving. Heavy taxation will be necessary for a long time."

• • • •

"Put Henry Ford in the President's chair and dollar-a-year men in the Senate, and we will have a wonderful country. We are heading to ruin now, thanks to our government" . . . "Cut down expenses. Cut out dole and tree forests and other unnecessary expenses" . . . "Return government to the people so that they rule rather than be ruled; stop the growth of bureaus and boards and increased payrolls for political patronage" . . . "Pay the bonus out of the $4,000,000,000 that is being thrown away."

• • • •

"Get rid of the entire New Deal and return to sanity" . . . "Balance the budget and buy American" . . . "Learn to live as our grandparents did and not be a burden on the Government" . . . "Get back to the horse and buggy days—in government" . . . "Stop all relief at once. Let the people paddle their own canoes for awhile" . . . "Balance the budget and pay as you go" . . . "Good wages, plenty work. Cut out this give-away stuff" . . . "Chase every Democratic rascal out of office."

Others rally to the support of the New Deal, seek extension of Federal powers or lambast the G. O. P.:

"Let the moneyed class be more sympathetic and get over their heebiegeebies" . . . "Put electric lights in farm houses" . . . "Save labor from the bosses. See that the workers get the square deal they're entitled to. Roosevelt is the only one who will see to this" . . . "Keep Hoover and any of his wrecking gang out of the White House" . . . "Return NRA so as to help workers in their demands for wages high enough to meet increasing living costs" . . . Extend the social security program" . . . "Roosevelt saved me from bankruptcy! I am for him right or wrong. Roosevelt is the second Messiah. We want him. I love him!"

"In justice to the average man, keep such people as Harding, Coolidge, Mellon and Hoover out of office" . . . "Kick out the present old fossils and put new ones in the Supreme Court, like we did with the Republican administration" . . . "Give the farmers buying power—no matter how" . . . Redistribute entrenched wealth" . . . "Break up the Wall Street Gang" . . . "Join the League of Nations and guard against lowering the standard of living now that NRA has been made helpless" . . . "Support the President and we're sure to win" . . . "Restore the Blue

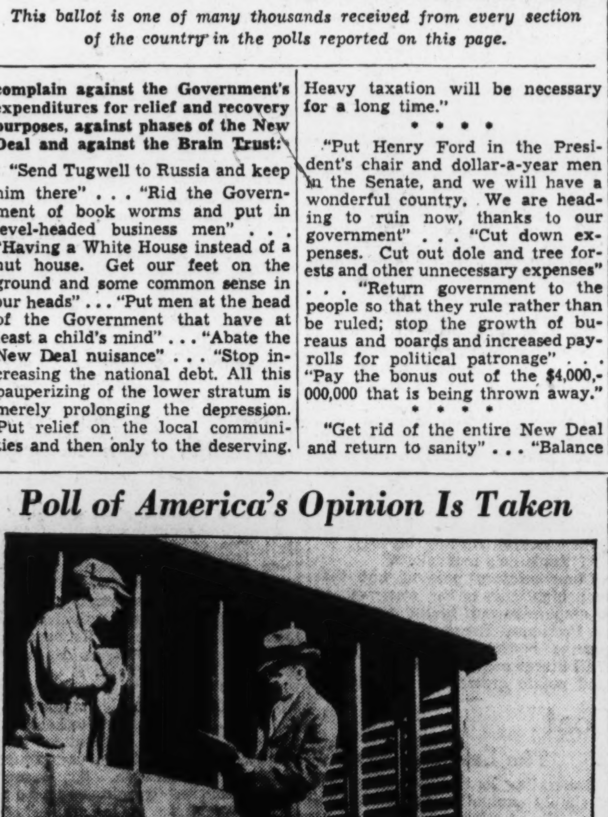
Poll of America's Opinion Is Taken



One of the American Institute of Public Opinion's 100 interviewers records the vote of a farmer in Valley Junction, Idaho. Personal interviews are checked on the results of 100,000 to 200,000 ballots mailed.

New Kind of History Recorded in Surveys

Nation-Wide Referendum Reveals the Points of View of Many Different Groups of the Population.

What problems are uppermost in the public's mind today? What issues will America be worrying about a year from now?

The American Institute of Public Opinion believes that the poll reported on this page, the first of its kind ever undertaken, marks another progressive step in American journalism.

With facts presented here, a new kind of history can be written beginning today. Historians of this era will not have to reconstruct the thoughts uppermost in the public's mind from stray facts. They will have first-hand evidence from the only reliable source—the people themselves. Not politicians, or self-appointed spokesmen, but thousands of typical Americans selected in such a manner as to represent accurately the entire Nation, have paused in their daily work to report what they believe to be of utmost importance to the Nation today.

Americans in every State and every class of society have reported their opinions in this Nation-wide referendum—city dwellers, farmers, ranchers, persons on relief, bankers—and in correct proportions. Had ballots been distributed to 50,000,000 adults, the results would be virtually the same as those reported on this page.

In addition to seeing clearly the state of the public mind today, thoughtful readers will find in the results a preview of tomorrow's legislative and economic trends. What America thinks today decides what statesmen do tomorrow.

Periodically, the Institute will conduct a similar investigation of public opinion. The results, in common with the regular national weekly polls, may well become part of the story of the times. Here is history in the making!

Is Roosevelt Leading in the District Today?

Next week, in reporting the results of its regular monthly poll on President Roosevelt's standing with the voters, the American Institute of Public Opinion will publish a State-by-State breakdown showing which States the Democrats would carry if a national election were held today.

Eight weeks ago 53 out of every 100 voters of the two major parties the country over said they would have voted for Roosevelt if an election had been held then. Four weeks ago the proportion was the same. Next Sunday The Washington Post and more than 50 other leading papers will report whether events during the four weeks from November 20 to December 20 have changed the President's political "batting average."

Issues for the Political Platforms of 1936

The tables below indicate the order in which voters of three parties rank the most vital issues of today, as a result of the Nation-wide survey just completed by the American Institute of Public Opinion.

Employment is the issue most frequently cited by persons who show on their ballots they would vote for Roosevelt today, and also by those who indicate they would vote for a third party. Government economy is the most vital issue among Republicans.

The News of the Week Passes in Brief Review

National Affairs

Hoosac

Mr. Reed Collapses

Last Monday the lush, plush, rose-draped inner sanctum of American Justice was packed to the S. R. O. point with notables. Diplomats with chest badges and many a Government dignitary stood first on one foot and then on the other. Solicitous attendants whisked Rudy Vallee to a choice seat.

The Hoosac Mills case had at last reached the argument stage before the Supreme Court of the United States. Over a year ago this textile firm took to the Federal District Court of Massachusetts its constitutional objection to paying $82,000 processing taxes to the AAA, a sum Southern farmers eventually would get for not planting certain acres of cotton. Defeated in its first move, the mills appealed to United States Circuit Court in Boston and won. As the constitutional issue involved the whole foundation of Secretary Henry Wallace's whole farm program, the case has hung like a super-sharp Damocles sword over the Roosevelt Administration.

Hence came all the shooting when the case had its ultimate appeal last week. Hoosac Mills as challenger was engulfed by the American Association of Cotton Manufacturers as "friends of the court" and the $82,000 by the question: Will there or won't there be any more AAA? The answer is expected January 13 at the soonest.

Overworked, bespectacled Solicitor General Stanley Reed contended: 1. The tax was legally levied as a revenue measure and it isn't the court's business to ask what the money is used for after it goes into the Treasury. 2. That the money is used to keep form production down and prices up, thus making for a balanced economy, and that this is a legitimate end under the "general welfare clause" of the Constitution.

Former United States Senator George Wharton Pepper, of Pennsylvania, eloquently said in half an hour that: 1. The purpose of the tax, to regulate agriculture, is beyond the constitutional authority of Congress and that hence the tax is unconstitutional. 2. That the Secretary of Agriculture has too much discretion in fixing the amount of the tax and that Congress, tax-fixer under the Constitution, had illegally delegated this authority to the Secretary.

The justices grilled Reed extensively on just how much leeway the Secretary had in fixing the taxes.

Next day Reed was at it again, this time over the Bankhead cotton act, entering the fray as a "friend of the court," while Texas Cotton Grower Lee Moor asked the judges to make the Texas & New Orleans Railroad carry his cotton even if it didn't have AAA tags on it. The Bankhead act adds to the ordinary AAA control-by-inducement a penalty tax on a farmer's production beyond his allotment. The Moor suit put this measure's constitutionality before the court.

Late in the afternoon Reed collapsed under a barrage of questions from the bench. He was physically exhausted. Next day the Government rested its case.

Meanwhile, 15,000 farmers at the Chicago conference (see Roosevelt) heard Chester C. Davis, agricultural adjustment administrator, say:

"The farm program will go forward on the same lines, under the Supreme Court decision, whatever it may be * * *"

Later in the week it was developed to the flare of headlines that Seth Thomas, until recently chief lawyer for the Department of Agriculture, had advised Secretary Wallace in a memorandum shortly after the Schechter decision killed the NRA that the Bankhead act was unconstitutional.

Roosevelt

Steak Made Him Speak

President Roosevelt last week added several thousand more miles to his total of over 50,000 since entering the White House; made four speeches, two prepared and two extemporaneous; ate a juicy super-sirloin steak; was awarded a gold medal for distinguished service to agriculture in 1935; received an honorary degree of doctor of laws from Notre Dame University; worked on the budget; worked on his annual message to Congress; opened the Washington winter social season, and listened to the fire engines shriek past the White House for over two hours Thursday night.

His semi-vacation at Warm Springs over, the President left Georgia in a cold drizzly rain, his special train rolling away over hundreds of miles of guarded and especially-track-walked roadbed to Chicago, where it halted in the very center of the famous stockyards.

In the International Amphitheater there, he banged a sunburned fist (an unusual gesture) on the rostrum of the American Farm Bureau Federation before 15,000 assembled cheering farmers in a warm defense of the Administration's farm program, even as the AAA was being challenged seriously in the Supreme Court in Washington.

In an aggressive reply to critics, he pledged himself to continuance of his agricultural recovery policies in an attempt to align in permanent balance agriculture, industry and business

He denounced "calamity howlers" and "dispensers of discord," said the purpose of the agricultural program is "to stop the rule of tooth and claw that threw farmers into bankruptcy or turned them virtually into serfs," and blasted the "political profiteers" who sought to capitalize on the depression at the farmers' expense. He repeated his belief in the necessity of preventing wild swings in prices of commodities, which, he said, had been as great as "300, 500, 700 per cent," and mentioned that farm income had risen nearly $3,000,000,000.

His speech was based upon a statement he made in 1932, that "the economic life of the United States is like a seamless web," in which "farm prosperity cannot exist without city prosperity," and vice versa. He said that while investors are aghast if a security drops 50 per cent in value, "many leaders in this country, not farm leaders, have shrugged their shoulders when they have seen cotton run up and down the scale between 4½ and 28 cents, wheat up and down between $1.50 and 30 cents . . ."

After receiving the medal he went immediately to the steak luncheon at the famous Saddle and Sirloin Club, where he was so pleased with his steak that he made an extemporaneous address reaffirming the solidity of his intentions that the United States will not "get mixed up" in the rest of the world's wars.

Then his train sped to South Bend, Ind., where, midst considerable ecclesiastic pomp, he received the honorary degree, and was so highly and eloquently praised by George Cardinal Mundelein, Archbishop of Chicago, that he confessed to "choking up."

Cardinal Mundelein, in what was construed as an allusion rebuking alike Father Coughlin and Martin Carmody, Knights of Columbus Supreme Knight, emphatically asserted that no individual has the right to speak politically for the 20,000,000 Catholics in the United States. The Cardinal then went on to praise the President's "indomitable fighting courage . . . the courage that caused him to set aside the traditions of his class, the friendships of his youth, the pressure of the money-power, to come to the aid of the forgotten man in the more equal distribution of wealth."

The President discussed religious freedom, emphasizing this Nation's desire to perpetuate that ideal, and testified as to his personal happiness in signing the document that gave the Philippines national freedom. In Toledo he addressed a platform crowd on the spur of the moment.

Then the President returned to Washington for the serious labor, broken by the Christmas and New Year holidays, of preparing for the January 3 Congress.

Berry

He Forgot to Smile

The bitterness in the business ranks over their wrongs, both fancied and real, at the hands of the New Deal, coupled with nervousness at the future, flared high last week to make a fiasco of the conference for industry and labor.

On the eve of the parley, his invitations shunned by a wide section of industry, Maj. George L. Berry predicted that if the conference failed to meet squarely the problem of taxation, public debt and unemployment, "a later one will."

The invitations had been rejected by the United States Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, the Automobile Manufacturers Association, the American Iron and Steel Institute and the Cotton Textile Institute—with numerous others.

Despite these rejections, nearly every large business and industry had representatives in Washington for the parley. The hotels were jammed with delegates from organizations that had refused to come, but wanted to be present as "unofficial observers." This testified to the intensity of the worry over the possibility that the President's "breathing spell" will not last, and the accompanying fear that NRA might return in some form.

Said Berry:

"I have been composing human differences for 30 years and have learned to face success or failure with a smile."

The next day's news photographs showed Maj. Berry's scowling face as he shouted down an audience of bellowing men.

For the national conference called by the NRA co-ordinator turned into a tremendous row.

All began peacefully. Maj. Berry, at the first session Monday morning, concluded his address and then abruptly declared the meeting adjourned for group discussions. Robert W. Irwin, head of the National Furniture Manufacturers Association, jumped to his feet and tried to get the floor. He was ignored, and Dr. A. O. Haake, executive secretary of the National Furniture Association sprang up on a chair and nominated John W. O'Leary, head of the Machinists and Allied Products Institute, to take the chair and continue the meeting. O'Leary is a former president of the United States Chamber of Commerce.

The hall was in pandemonium. Hisses, booes, catcalls sounded everywhere. Scores tried to talk. Photographers began flaring bulbs. Newspaper men jotted swiftly. The labor representatives through the hall kept their seats, many smiling.

"Get yourself a hall!" shouted Berry. "You're out of order!"

Berry advanced to the front of the platform and cried:

"You are trying to blow up this meeting. You were sent to dynamite this meeting and you're not going to get away with it!"

"You're an unqualified liar!" said Dr. Haake.

"And you're another!" blared Berry. "Come up here and I'll make you eat it—eat it—eat it!"

SOLICITOR GENERAL REED—Collapsed defending the AAA.

Many began leaving the hall. Numerous other groups left the committee meetings in the afternoon to go sightseeing.

There was much talk on both sides as the conference, except for the labor section, folded up swiftly. Maj. Berry postponed until this week the formation of an industrial council. The conference, sick before it started, died violently. Industry's fear of the NRA's revival, said analysts, made failure of even such a mild co-operative move inevitable.

Utilities

Last-Ditch Struggle

Attorney General Homer Cummings and John J. Burns, general counsel for the Securities and Exchange Commission, a week ago filed a motion in the District Supreme Court requesting a stay in all proceedings involving the constitutionality of the public utility act of 1935 until such time as the Electric Bond & Share Co. suit is decided by the highest court of the land or "until that case is otherwise terminated."

This piece of strategy, first major move by the Government in its efforts to narrow the flood of utility objections to the act to a single suit, was necessitated by the fact that the overworked legal staff could not possibly handle the enormous flow of litigation ensuing when the holding companies, after refusing to register under the act with SEC by December 1 as required by law, questioned the act's constitutionality.

During the week Philip H. Gadsden, chairman of the committee of public utility executives, offering to "co-operate" with the Government in reducing the multiplicity of suits, said:

"If the Attorney General and Secretary are anxious to avoid the prosecution of the suits they can rely on the full co-operation of the utilities. We recognize that it is important not only to the electric light, power and gas industry but in the interest of all business recovery that the constitutionality of the act be passed upon as soon as possible by the Supreme Court of the United States. The utilities are anxious to avoid the lengthy and burdensome litigation based upon a multitude of legal actions."

There are about 50 such suits now. The Government wants to test the law in the Electric Bond & Share Co. case filed two weeks ago in New York. Mr. Gadsden suggested that the major holding company groups and the Government get together and select three or four typical suits for early testing. The Government didn't reply to the public-statement suggestion.

It was considered merely a jockeying move for position.

Then on Thursday Attorney General Cummings unprecedentedly appeared in the District Supreme Court to ask that all utility attacks be pooled in one suit to be selected by the Government. The utilities countered with the idea that they be given a voice in the choosing. This was unacceptable to Mr. Cummings.

Justice Jennings Bailey took the Government motion under advisement for a week or ten days. His decision will lay down the boundaries of the important struggle.

Landon

Hearst Lauded Him

The most recent voice of the many urging the populace to file away predictions in their hatbands for reference in November, 1936, was that of Senator Joseph F. Guffey, of Pennsylvania, during last week.

He said that 17 Democratic Senators will be re-elected without serious difficulties next year.

This viewpoint was somewhat at a tangent to that of the Rev. Charles E. Coughlin, of Detroit, known as the radio priest, who said:

"Be not too certain that there will be an election in 1936. * * * The Federal Reserve bankers are sowing the seeds which * * * shall obligate us to take sides in the actual war already existing. * * *. This is no time for us to seek to return to Hoover or Coolidge prosperity. Away with such nonsense of seeking to return to that kind of sordid prosperity which created profits for the manufacturers and bankers and tears for the millions of American citizens who were losing faith in their Government."

Other political news of the week was featured by a full declaration of war by Norman Thomas, leader of the left wing of the Socialist Party, on the "Old Guard" of that party in New York. The left wing seceded with him and Thomas predicted complete reorganization of the third party.

Earlier Senator William E. Borah, of Idaho, in a radio address had condemned Herbert Hoover and President Roosevelt alike, the first for the "extortion" of 1929 and the latter for "neglect" of the Constitution. He rallied the G. O. P. to a "war of freedom."

A canny move, typical of the smooth pre-campaign strategy marking his forward push, was the address of Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas before a Young Republicans Club, in which he declared that the 1936 election confronted the voters of the Nation with an issue transcending a choice between parties."

News in Bulletins

The joint commission of the three branches of Methodism in the United States announced its approval of a merger plan for a consolidated Methodist Church with 7,200,000 members. The plan must be ratified by the three conferences and individual churches.

Victor Koussow, fired from a menial job in New York's Presbyterian Medical Center, returned and shot two professors dead with a revolver, wounded a third, and then killed himself. He was a Russian emigre.

The Southeastern Conference in Atlanta voted, 11 to 2, to countenance officially special financial assistance to collegiate athletes. Coach Chet Wynne, of the University of Kentucky, described the move as "the acme of sportsmanship."

Socially prominent Charles H. Tompkins, 27, pleaded guilty in District Supreme Court to a charge of manslaughter in the traffic death last March of Mrs. Ruth Storey, 30. Tompkins' automobile had run onto a street car loading platform. He was committed to jail pending sentence Friday.

JAPAN'S ADMIRAL NAGANO—Presented a parity plan.

EGYPT'S KING FUAD—Restored the constitution by decree.

He said that this election "would decide whether the American people want to strengthen democratic institutions or to accept more centralization of power." He avoided mention of himself as a candidate.

This strategy of "going above party," thus appealing to disgruntled Democrats, is comparable to that of President Roosevelt in cutting across party lines in 1932 to win huge slices of territory from the Republicans.

For some this favorable reaction was neutralized by a Topeka visit of William Randolph Hearst, the publisher, who sized up Mr. Landon at close range over a luncheon table and then hailed him as a man who could rout the Roosevelt forces in 1936. Also outspoken on the same visit was Paul Block, also publisher of a newspaper group, who said:

"Landon's an even bigger man than I thought."

Said Hearst, smiling broadly:

"I think he's marvelous."

Commentators pointed out that such highlights of the week served to emphasize that in the opposition to President Roosevelt are many strange bedfellows, ranging from Wall Street men through New England potato growers to Mr. Hearst.

Coal

The Leaguers Say No

Reiterating its altruistic intention of simply promoting public discussion, the Nation's most opulent amateur court sat and opined last week while the Supreme Court was hearing about the AAA. This latter circumstance was unfortunate, from a publicity standpoint, for the American Liberty League's 59 lawyers, but they managed to get in the record (albeit in the back pages), that they thought the Guffey coal act was and is unconstitutional for this reason: that Congress went outside constitutional bounds in passing it.

The 59 also issued a spirited defense of their right to sit and opine if they wanted to. Their feelings had been hurt by commentators and officials who intimated that, as a committee of the wealth-born Liberty League, their opinions might not be uninspired and that at any rate their opinions were gratuitous.

The last thing they held unconstitutional was the Wagner labor relations act, which would guarantee industrial workers the right to "bargain" collectively, and so forth.

The coal bill would set up a "little NRA" to regulate labor and other conditions in that industry by a penalty tax arrangement. About 70 per cent of the bituminous industry came into the Guffey fold voluntarily, the Government announced last week, while 40 firms are in court trying to stay out.

Meanwhile United States Judge John Paul, in Lynchburg, Va., temporarily enjoined the Government from collecting the penalty tax from 14 producers who refused to accept the code.

What appears to be many industrialists' fear—that labor will induce Congress to apply Guffey bill principles to other industry and so bring back the NRA bit by bit—was illustrated last week when representatives of 750,000 garment workers met here and decided they wanted their shops patrolled by the Government. Garment labor, like all other labor, wants shorter hours and more pay and labor leaders said they were afraid pre-NRA sweat shop conditions might come back.

Labor

Mr. Green vs. Self

Labor Leader William Green last week declined flatly to be chief of a revolt against himself.

John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America, tried unsuccessfully early in the fall to talk the American Federation of Labor convention into switching from craft unionism to industrial unionism in its organization of mass industries. He was soundly beaten by A. F. of L. President Green and conservative henchmen. So Lewis quit as A. F. of L. vice president to become president of the Committee for Industrial Organization, a group within the Federation. Mr. Green issued solemn warnings about creating schisms in the ranks of labor. He and other craftists were accused of blocking the new movement for fear they would lose their leadership in the shift. Lewis wrote Green a few days ago offering him the presidency of the Committee for Industrial Organization at "an honorarium . . . equal to that you now receive." Mr. Green didn't accept with some heat.

Other labor items of the week:

Joseph P. Ryan, a heavy-handed, blue-eyed Irishman who is head of the International Longshoremen's Association, ordered his unionists on both Atlantic and Pacific Coasts to resume servicing ships operating out of 26 Gulf of Mexico ports where a stubborn I. L. A. strike had been in force for two months. Ryan said 25 of the 26 ship lines involved had agreed to dicker and that the other one would. The strikers went back to work.

A long, bitter and exceedingly complex inter-union fight in the motion-picture industry appeared to have been settled at a conference of seven film producer executives and five presidents of international unions of the A. F. of L. The direct result was avoiding a strike that would have darkened most of the Nation's movie theaters. Indirect result was a slight victory for the craft union movement espoused by John L. Lewis.

PHILIP H. GADSDEN—Spars for position in utilities court war.

William Green threatened to remove next year's A. F. of L. convention from Tampa if the State of Florida didn't punish whoever tarred and flogged three non-A. F. of L. labor organizers there. Florida promised a probe.

Courts

Freed Herndon

The mills of justice last week ground out this miscellany:

Angelo Herndon, Negro Communist, convicted in 1932 and sentenced to 18 to 20 years under Georgia's anti-sedition law dating from the carpetbag days of 1866, went free on $8,000 bail when Fulton County (Atlanta) Superior Court Judge Hugh M. Dorsey found the law unconstitutional. Herndon's sedition consisted mainly of possessing Communist literature and leading 1,000 families in an appeal for relief. Judge Dorsey ruled that the law under which he was convicted was "too vague and indefinite" and gave the State 20 days to file an appeal. Herndon headed for New York with an armful of books on Fascism and said he hoped to stump the Pacific Coast in behalf of communism soon.

Editors clarioned the salvation of States' Rights and admonished Congress not to do it again on the basis of these two Supreme Court rulings:

All nine justices agreed the home owners' loan act could not give a building and loan association a Federal charter to operate in a State without the permission of the State. About all that commentators could make out of the decision was that it was in favor of States' Rights. A six-to-three decision held a special Federal penalty tax on illicit liquor dealers in dry States was invalid. Lay analysts had a hard time with this one, too, but it clearly tended to limit the Federal Government's encroachments on the police power of the States.

The National Labor Relations Board asked the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals in Philadelphia to enforce its order that the Pennsylvania Greyhound Lines, Inc., bargain collectively with the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America. The union and the board charged the lines with unfair labor practices. The case will probably go to the Supreme Court as the constitutional test of the Wagner labor act, which guarantees labor the right of collective "bargaining."

Business

Ups at Year-End

Business of the week in three items:

Electrical power production in the week ended December 7 again established a new all-time high record, zipping up to a new mark of 1,969,662,000 kilowatt-hours, 13 per cent more than in the corresponding 1934 week, and with the definite prospect of a 2,000,000,000-kilowatt-hour-week before the year's end.

Steel's operating rate, after climbing to a 57 per cent of capacity high the week before, slipped a point to 56 per cent during the week as consumer pressure relaxed and jobbers began paring inventories with the approach of January.

Col. Leonard P. Ayres, business statistician and vice president of the Cleveland Trust Co., predicted modest progress on the recovery road during 1936; said that 1935 was the best of the three depression-recovery years, and forecast an average 10 per cent upping in nearly everything.

Money

The Silver Mystery

Every day in London for a long, long time, four bullion brokers, known as "The Four Just Men," have met to compare bids and offers in the silver market. After studious consideration these four men finally arrive at a price that will permit the entire amount of silver offered to be sold. That price is the price of silver—the London bullion quotation—as London is the largest market, with Bombay, New York, Shanghai and Montreal following in that order.

Since the United States has become the most important and often the only purchaser of silver, the task of these men has been light, their consciences perforce made easy as they merely have accepted the bid of the Treasury of the United States as the silver price of the day.

Last Tuesday there appeared to be no bid from the Treasury. The four brokers labored valiantly in an effort to find some sort of price basis in a market without the semblance of a buyer. They toiled until 6 p. m. and gave up. Flooded by silver sales from the Orient, the market collapsed, or rather, disappeared, as there was nothing exactly left to collapse. For the first time since the war days of 1914 the market was without a price and the London fog settled over the bazaars of Bombay, the market of Montreal and all the rest. Metal stocks fell everywhere.

For the first time many people saw the fragility of the silver market and the utter dependence of that market on this nation's position as a purchaser.

Apparently the Treasury had withdrawn from the market.

The Silver Purchase Act of 1934 ordered the Treasury to purchase silver until the world price reaches $1.29 an ounce or the stock of silver held totals one-third of the monetary gold stock. Since then the Treasury's gold holdings have gone over $10,000,000,000. The Treasury would have to get 3.33 billions of silver. Figured roughly it now holds less than 500 billions or less than one-sixth of that amount.

The crash in the silver market continued. The price didn't fall so far, dropping from 65⅝ cents to 61¾ cents per ounce in the first three days, but the uncertainty of the future worried the world. Tied up in the American attitude and position are the economic futures of Mexico and China, certainly, and less directly, a number of other nations.

The silver act was passed at the insistence of the silver States' Senators, and with the cooperation of Senator Elmer Thomas (Democrat), Oklahoma, an avowed inflationist, who saw great inflationary possibilities in the move. The arguments made were that the act would supply a necessary reserve for American currency, stimulate domestic recovery and increase our trade with China.

The gold reserves were larger than required for the support of American currency at the time the act was passed and have increased hugely since then; the purchase in tremendous quantities of silver at a falsely high price has contributed nothing factually demonstrable to economic recovery, and our trade with China has taken a sound drubbing due to the deflation of Chinese commodity prices, caused chiefly by those very American silver purchases.

Editors pointed out that the silver program has brought a lack of confidence in the Administration's money policy at home and has resulted in demonetization of silver in the only countries abroad which used it. Two worries attend the course—the future of the dollar and the possible further demoralization of the world's monetary systems.

Senators Thomas and Key Pittman, Nevada Democrat, were the only voices lifted happily over the debacle. Thomas hailed it as "the finest thing that could happen from the standpoint of eventual stabilization of world currency. Pittman saw "absolutely no cause for alarm" and denounced British political propaganda.

The Treasury participated in the London market very lightly the rest of the week, while beginning to order much more heavily in the New York market. In the meantime Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau, jr., made no effort to clarify the situation until Thursday, when he revealed the extent of American silver purchases (761,774,000 ounces since the act was passed) and hinted to newspapermen that a reading of the provisions would show that the act empowers the Treasury to handle the buying as it sees fit, and many observers agreed that possibly the Secretary's withdrawal of American support from the London market meant merely that some of the speculators who have fattened on the silver price's consistency since August were being shaken out.

Meehan

On Trial for Rigging

The Securities and Exchange Commission last week went to work hammer and tongs in its first effort to convict a major stock trader of rigging the market. It will attempt to drive Michael J. Meehan, New York Stock Exchange member, from the brokerage business.

Promised a month of hearings, the public settled back to smack its lips over the juiciest raking of Wall Street muck since Ferdinand Pecora waded into the exchange operators last year.

The Government's specific charge was that Meehan systematically and successfully all last summer fooled the public into believing his Bellanca Aircraft Corporation shares were worth a lot more than they are. Commission Counsel John J. Burns said he would have witnesses show that Meehan used everybody from his stock exchange friends to his bookie at the races to spread a golden glow over his holdings. Large graphs, purportedly indicating abnormal activity in the stock last summer, were displayed.

Hoeppel

For Dear Old Army

James W. Ives, stocky, ruddy young member of the 1932 United States Olympic lacrosse team and former Johns Hopkins football star, received an appointment to the United States Military Academy at West Point on May 5, 1934, from Representative John H. Hoeppel, California Democrat. Five days later Ives, a Baltimore boy, resigned from the academy, going to the War Department with a story that he had been forced to give Representative Hoeppel, through the latter's son, Charles J. Hoeppel, a $1,000 promissory note for the appointment.

Last March, after a Department of Justice investigation, a District of Columbia grand jury indicted Hoeppel and son on a charge of conspiring to sell a West Point appointment for $1,000 and on a charge of receiving a note for that amount from Ives. The latter charge was dropped.

The pair went on trial last week in District Supreme Court with the defense claiming that it had all been done in a spirit of good clean football scouting and out of loyalty to West Point.

Representative John H. Burke, also of California, testified that he had swapped his right to make West Point appointments to Hoeppel for the latter's Annapolis appointments. This trade gave Hoeppel the vacancy that went to Ives.

Ives took the stand and identified the younger Hoeppel as the "Charles Alexander," who had driven an uncompromising bargain with him for the $1,000 note.

The jury deliberated 6 hours and 4 minutes Thursday night and found that Hoeppel and son were guilty as charged of conspiring to sell an appointment to the United States Military Academy for $1,000.

Foreign Affairs

Parley

Japan Goes Big-Navy

The international naval conference met in London last week for a few weeks of intensive study of the naval situation.

At the end of each day's polite but serious and technically involved discussions the newspapers solemnly announced that the powers were deadlocked.

This was true enough, but about as much news as a hot scoop on the fact that the sun will rise as usual.

The Japanese proposed parity—that the Japanese navy be equal to that of Great Britain and the United States. However, their demand also asked that the three navies be reduced to the lowest possible tonnage entailing the scrapping of warships. This was pretty crafty work, for the Japanese want to be able to tell the home folks that their navy is equal to any in the world, but also does not want to get into a naval building race with two powers which can easily build twice as many ships of twice as much power with about half the economic strain. Yet on the surface the move appears to be a disarmament move.

The United States asked for a straight 20 per cent cut, the idea of President Roosevelt. The Japanese rejected this on the idea that it perpetuated the 5-5-3 ratio of ships, while they must have parity.

Thursday four powers and three dominions joined in refusing Japan naval equality. The British want equality with no other navy than the United States.

There will be more talk.

War

And a Peace Plan

Emperor Haile Selassie, anxious, harassed and sleepless, last week reiterated that any Ethiopian territory the Italians get they must take by conquest—and palace spokesmen made plain that the Emperor, with the rest of Ethiopia, doesn't think Italy's chances are any too good.

But the Emperor became one of the most-ignored men in the world, for in Geneva, in London and in Paris the world's diplomats brooded on the partition of Ethiopia. While the final plan was not revealed, it was understood everywhere that Italy was to be "given" the eastern Ogaden Desert and the northern area as far as Makale, while it was to assume some sort of vague protectorate and exploitation right in southern Ethiopia.

The exact terms of the plan were sufficient to give the British government and populace some bad moments, however, for Capt. Anthony Eden, Sir Samuel Hoare, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin and other leaders were in considerable unexplained pother over their inability to reconcile the partition of Ethiopia with their last-election (November) promises to conclude a peace acceptable to Haile Selassie.

The Thursday and Friday meetings of the League to plaster down the final oil sanctions on Italy somehow faded away under the discussion of direct negotiated-peace possibilities, for Mussolini was believed ready to consider the new plan . . . the more so since his armies have actually flopped terribly in Ethiopia as yet. The wily tribesmen are following their strategy planned as long ago as last March, to draw the Italians deep into the country until their communications and supply lines are stretched to the thinnest, and then strike—and strike effectively.

Fuad

The Cabinet Quit

In Egypt for over a month unarmed students have rioted unceasingly against bayonetted British domination. At least six of them were killed by British drilled and British armed Cairo police, many of whom are former Tommies.

Last week the source of the inspiration for these activities was hinted by a police order barring students from the Lawyers' Club where it was charged they were meeting Wafdist leaders. Wafd is the Egyptian Nationalist Party, led by former Premier Nahas Pasha, which controls 95 per cent of Egyptian ballots whenever there are any.

By last week that British puppet known as the cabinet of Premier Tewfik Pasha Nessim became so wrought up by anti-British demonstration that it spoke out loud in favor of Wafdist aim No. 1, viz., a return to the parliamentary constitution of 1923 which was abolished in 1930. Finally the cabinet got its resignations ready to hand to elder King Fuad, who has buffalo-ho mustaches and was half-sick anyway.

Next day news dispatches said that "with the reluctant consent of Great Britain" King Fuad had by royal decree restored the constitution. The Nessim Cabinet will carry on for a few weeks until a parliament is elected. Watdist Nahas Pasha stands every chance of becoming premier and dictator. The students paraded in hysterical glee to hail the return of home rule.

Latest indications were that Britain would still control Egypt's foreign policy and continue to bear the burden of its defense—which would mean continuing to keep troops there. What everybody wondered was, just how much influence was Britain, even "reluctantly," relinquishing over the country that geographically controls Suez, the country which lies next to Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, the country that has for months been flooded with pro-Italian propaganda?

In one way or another, Britain has been master of Egypt since 1882.

Asia

The Surge of Japan

Miniature of Asiatic troubles:

Last week Chinese students rioted, parading in Peiping in protest against the autonomy move for north China, as the "Nanking government helplessly agreed to the creation of that state, with Gen. Sung Cheh-yuan as head of it, as well as governor of Hopei Province.

Tientsin's port was seized by a Japanese-led mob, the Chinese police were ousted, while the Manchukuoan troops moved south and west into border states to take Kuynan in southeastern Chahar. This is Japanese expansion into Mongolia. Later in the week these Manchukuo men moved farther into the border provinces, killing 80 Chinese soldiers and taking Paochang.

The Japanese military spokesmen said they would look askance at any move by the Chinese heads of the semi-autonomous state to absorb the smaller, but completely Japanese-controlled new autonomous state in eastern Hopei.

Germany

Busy With Religion

The Third Reich last week was preeminently occupied with religion, although it found some time to devote to re-writing history.

Most spectacular move was the start of a drive to deport all foreign Jews. Polish Jews, of whom the Reich harbors 50,000, were first on the list and hundreds were ousted on three days' notice. The church division of the secret police continued raids on homes and offices of Catholic priests. The rumor was that they were very much annoyed at finding the Catholic bishops had a counter intelligence service that got secret police orders before the secret police did.

The war between rebellious Protestants and Church Minister Hanns Kerrl reached the digging-in stage, although five new pastors were ordained in flat defiance of a Kerrl decree. The Nazis were apparently halting rough stuff in hopes of cajoling all Protestants into the church state with promises that this body would be freed to work out its own destinies after two years of supervision.

Four items sifting over the cables last week:

The number of unemployed rose 156,000 to a 1,985,000 total in November.

The Nazi No. 1 history re-write man, Dr. Alfred Baeumler, professor of political pedagogy in the University of Berlin, announced that the Middle Ages, contrary to a belief prevalent for some centuries, only came to an end when Hitler took over Germany two and a half years ago.

The latest edition of "Wer Ist's" (Who's Who) omits Dr. Albert Einstein, Thomas Mann, Stefan Zweig and other non-Nazis.

Wealthy Jews were reported planning a bank in Germany to liquidate the property of emigrating Jews. The aim would be to cut the heavy losses suffered by hasty going-out-of-the-country sales.

Cuba

Postpones the Polls

Cuba is still trying to get around to that election. It was scheduled for December when the island of pin-wheel politics got its brand new constitution duly signed by Provisional President Carlos Mendieta last June. Princeton President Harold Willis Dodd was called in to arrange the election procedure, as no Cuban would trust any other Cuban to do it. What with one thing and another, the polling date has been changed four times.

For months the election situation has been seething because all the presidential aspirants except Col. Mendieta felt they wouldn't have much chance with him in office during the balloting. Last week Gen. Mario G. Menocal, a former president, officially withdrew his National Democratic Party from participation in the election and said it would stay out unless Mendieta resigned. Mendieta, in what was widely hailed as a sincere patriotic step, became Cuba's former president No. 6 since Dictator Gerardo Machado was ousted by revolution in 1933.

The election is now scheduled for January 10. Career Diplomat Jose A. Barnet, 71, was named provisional president by the cabinet.

Ramon Grau San Martin commented from the safety of Miami Beach that the excitement didn't mean much, that Col. Fulgiencio Batista, chief of staff of the army, still was the ruler of Cuba and still would be no matter who was elected president.

People

Cardinal

Hit Birth Control

At pontifical high mass, 11 a. m. last Sunday, Patrick Cardinal Hayes mounted the pulpit of St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City and spoke his mind heartily.

This was the first time Cardinal Hayes had preached the sermon at St. Patrick's since October 25, 1931, but he felt impelled to voice, although reluctantly and with some embarrassment, opposition to "the effrontery" of the proponents of birth control.

For the first public meeting of the American Birth Control League since 1928 had been held the week previously in Carnegie Hall with 2,500 people present, with birth control presented from the scientific viewpoint.

So the cardinal denounced the speakers at that meeting including several Protestant and Jewish clergymen, as "prophets of decadence," and "the smug Carnegie Hall audience" for desiring to control the lives of the poor as if they were cattle.

He said the true solution was in self-discipline.

In Washington Dr. Prentiss Willson, physician secretary to the National Committee on Federal and State Birth Control legislation, said:

"The law prohibits dissemination of birth control information, but permits an abortion if necessary to save a woman's life. I say that is absurd."

Mercy

Drive for Euthanasia

The letters-to-the-editor columns of London newspapers have been taking an increasingly morbid turn for the last two months as the drive for legalized "mercy killings" has steadily gained momentum. After the Daily Mail a few days ago printed what purported to be a respectable surgeon's confession to putting three incurables and two idiot children out of their misery, there appeared a ghastly flood of letters from mothers regretting that they lacked the courage to administer "the black bottle" to their own incurable offspring.

Last week Lord Moynihan of Leeds, one of Britain's most distinguished surgeons, presided at the organization of the Voluntary Euthanasia Society. Two hundred charter members paid their five shillings dues. The movement got the formal backing of Sir Humphrey Rolleston, physician-in-ordinary to the King, and of many Anglican Church leaders. Among them was the Very Rev. W. R. Inge, the retired "Gloomy Dean" of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The society will put its euthanasia bill before Parliament in January and has already drafted a tentative form to be signed by applicants for death. Under the proposed law the applicant must be over 21; in great pain; pronounced incurable by two doctors. He must also have the consent of his nearest relatives and have two witnesses to his request.

Mrs. Catt

Lists Ten Ladies

Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, 76, widow of two husbands, veteran feminist and leading sponsor of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution, each year makes a list of the ten outstanding women of the Nation. For the third successive year, the First Lady, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, has been named First Woman by Mrs. Catt. Mrs. Catt made it clear, however, that she was naming Eleanor Roosevelt, not a President's wife.

Others on the list released last week:

Dr. Florence Rena Sabin, anatomist, of the Rockefeller Institute.

Mrs. Ogden Reid, vice president of the New York Herald Tribune, a newspaper.

Mrs. Ruth Byran Owen, United States Minister to Denmark.

Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, first woman member of a United States Cabinet.

Miss Mary Anderson, chief of the Women's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor.

Anne Morrow Lindbergh, wife of Col. Charles Augustus Lindbergh.

Amelia Earhart Putnam, aviatrix.

Federal Judge Florence Allen, of Cleveland.

Anne O'Hare M'Cormick, roving foreign correspondent of the New York Times.

Harvard

Money for Education

The scientific view of American history has, since Henry Adams broke down the problem for all to see in the last years of last century, long held that the United States has been both cursed and fortunate in the log-cabin origins of so many of its public administrators. Pushing on to the conclusion, the view has held that on the purely unfortunate side has been the log-cabin education of the statesmen, Governors, presidents, legislators and judiciary of the Nation.

For while the matter of origins in such a country as this remains democratic, the analysis say, the public's servants should have as high a minimum standard of education as possible. For this reason thoughtful men have long deplored the lack of a school of government, in which future administrators could be trained comprehensively, and to a high standard, for their someday service to the United States.

Last week Lucius N. Littauer, 76, of New York City, retired glove manufacturer, and former United States Republican Representative, gave to Harvard University $2,000,000 for the establishment of a graduate school of public administration. President James Bryant Conant of the university announced that Mr. Littauer's gift was for the declared purpose of "promoting the science and art of government, administration, and the improvement of public administration—national, State and local—for the welfare of the people.

The aged philantropic's two million dollars may save the country hundreds of millions some day, said editors.

News Quiz of the Week

By Elmo C. Wilson.

Here is the second news quiz prepared by a university faculty member as a memory test for newspaper readers. In the first two sections one of the statements preceded by a letter of the alphabet tells why one of the men named was in the news recently. To work this part of the quiz place in the brackets after the names the letters of the statement which you think tells why these persons were in the news. In the third section each statement is followed by five possible answers. Pick out the one which you think is correct and place the letter which precedes it in the brackets at the end. The correct answers are given below. Another test will appear next Sunday.

Mother

Hurries to Sweden

Mrs. Ossie Drimmer, 28, brunette, vivacious and Swedish, just didn't want to be in this country for Christmas. She wanted to be with her family in Gothenburg, Sweden. She was homesick.

Two months ago she came to Los Angeles with her husband, who is a student in chiropody (science of treating foot ailments, usually known as corns and bunions). One day last week she wired to New York for a cabin on a Sweden-bound ship, gathered up a little baggage and her 21-month-old son, Ali, and boarded a plane for the East coast. Storms delayed her flight. Desperate, knowing she would be too late for the ship, but unable to explain the situation in English, at Cleveland she made an ally out of Capt. T. Rieber, chairman of the Texas Corporation, who speaks Swedish.

As the plane reached Cleveland, he radioed ahead with these results: The steamer delayed her sailing for half an hour, then cast off and a little later cast anchor off Ambrose Lightship. Mrs. Drimmer was met by an amphibian plane at Newark Airport, gentled down on the choppy seas and pulled, with Ali, through a port of the good ship Gripsholm. They are now on the bounding main for Sweden and Christmas.

Rose

Teaches, Though Fat

Miss Rose Freistater, 26, of the Bronx, whose adiposity created a cause celebre before the New York State Board of Education when she was refused a license to teach four years ago, triumphantly appeared before the board last week with her lawyer and without 35 superfluous pounds. She renewed her appeal for the license.

In March of 1931 she weighed 182 pounds. For a height of 5 feet 2 inches, the board thought this was too much for good health and gave her six months to get down to 150. She missed by 10 pounds and was denied an extension of time. Since then her efforts to reduce have made her one of the most famous fat girls in the world, while she has taught, as a teacher in training and as a substitute, in a Bronx high school without missing a day. Her teaching is "swell," said supervisors.

When she appeared in a modish black frock before State Commissioner of Education Frank P. Graves, announcing that she had reached the 150-pound desideratum, she was told her appeal for a license had no legal basis, as she was guilty of laches (legal for undue delay).

Her lawyer, Harry A. Mabel, indicated the fight wouldn't stop there, and her doctor, Gerald Schuman, published in the papers the diet that had taken off the 35 pounds in three months. Here it is:

BREAKFAST
Fruit
One egg
A half slice of bread
Three strips of bacon
Coffee with cream and sugar

LUNCHEON
Fruit
Vegetable salad
One slice of bread and butter

Crime

Edith

She Wept in Court

"Edith," said elderly Judge H. A. W. Skeen, in the stern dignity of his stand-up collar, "the ruling of this court is that the sentence be carried out according to the judgment of this court."

"She ort'n ter be let live," opined a mountaineer who more than agreed with the judge.

That was the result last week of Miss Maxwell's plea for a new trial in Wise County court after she was sentenced to 25 years for killing her father with a high-heeled slipper when he attempted to punish her for staying out past midnight with the boys. Her attorneys plan an appeal to Virginia's highest court, and a clemency plea to Gov. George Peery.

Three days before, Haugeman Falin, 16, also of Wise County, had gone to court without lawyers on a charge of killing his father with a pistol. Witnesses said Haugeman fired after his father, in a drunken frenzy, attacked him for failing to put water in the auto radiator. Haugeman was put on probation for a year.

Bruno

His Plea Denied

The Supreme Court of the United States refused the plea of Bruno Richard Hauptmann for review of his conviction for the kidnap-murder of the Lindbergh baby with one word:

"Denied."

Thus the last avenue of escape was apparently closed to the stolid carpenter from the Bronx, still asserting his innocence steadfastly in his cell in the red-brick death-house at Trenton, N. J.

In the meantime Ellis Parker, famous New Jersey detective, was still supposed to be investigating the case on his own hook from a conviction that Hauptmann's story is true and that Isidore Fisch, furrier who died in Germany, is guilty.

The taint in Jersey politics was believed to hang around the investigation in some quarters, while in others commentators pointed to Parker's superb record and integrity for evidence of his good faith.

Editor

Slain by Gangmen

Walter Liggett, radical editor, equally militant with his violent pen and his two powerful fists, was assassinated in Minneapolis last week by a gangland machine gun. As editor of the weekly Midwest American, his crusading career in Minnesota for the last several years was one long welter of political and underworld enmities.

Originally a friend and political assoicate of Gov. Floyd B. Olson, he had recently turned his heaviest guns on the Minnesota chief executive, tying him up with the Twin Cities underworld every week in a front-page editorial. His exposes of vice and gambling conditions led him to predict his own assassination.

Early last summer Liggett was apparently the victim of a frame-up in connection with a statutory charge involving two girl minors. He easily won acquittal. A few weeks ago he became front-page news by being brutally beaten at the hands of as yet unapprehended hoodlums.

As editor of the magazine Plain Talk he gained notoriety in 1929 by estimating the Capital's liquor bill at $20,000,000. He created furious enmities in Boston, Pittsburgh and other cities by spectacular exposes.

His wife, who was also his editorial aid, saw him shot down and identified one Isadore (Kid Can) Blumenfeld, liquor salesman, as the trigger man, and demanded that State authorities supersede county and city police in the investigation of what she charged was a political murder.

Gov. Olson late in the week sent a long and elaborate telegram to Washington inviting the Department of Justice to investigate.

Aviation

Skies

Filled With 'Fleas'

These events made news in the air last week:

Roosevelt Field. Long Island, was visited by the French "Sky Louse," a 17 H. P. single seater on the European market for $400. Clyde Pangborn will demonstrate the "fool-proof flivver-plane" in this country.

Benjamin King, Washington sportsman pilot, established a pair of minor world records for speed with his tiny seaplane weighing less than 551 pounds.

Great Britain and the United States reached an agreement to extend mutual landing field privileges, thus bringing one step nearer the contemplated Anglo-United States transatlantic air line.

Eleven were killed when a Belgian air liner crashed in England. The ship's wings were ice-coated. Three Army fliers drowned after their bomber plunged into Canal Zone waters. Three swam the shark-infested waters to safety.

Pilot Russel W. Thaw, son of Evelyn Nesbitt Thaw, wrecked the plane scheduled to wing into the Antarctic dusk in search of lost Lincoln Ellsworth. Another plane was made available for delivery to Ellsworth's supply ship, Wyatt Earp, waiting off Chile.

Wedding

The Executioner Waits

"* * * until death do you part."

And suddenly the skies cleared and bright sunlight flooded a dingy press room just off the Queen's County District Attorney's office in New York last week. Anna Downey, a slim, dark girl of 18, had become the bride of her sweetheart, John Collins, 26, who was waiting until Friday, December 13, for a New York judge to pronounce on him a mandatory sentence of death in the electric chair.

A week before Collins, who had a long police record, had been convicted of murder in connection with a holdup. Three days later he appeared manacled to two deputy sheriffs at the New York Marriage License Bureau and got the license. Unable to get a special dispensation from Bishop Molloy, of Brooklyn, for a priest to perform the ceremony, the couple were united by New York Municipal Court Justice William H. Robinson.

Four deputy sheriffs, hands on guns, watched the bridegroom narrowly. One of them was slated to be best man, but as that didn't seem fitting a reporter from the New York Daily Mirror was drafted for the office. The merciless, cold lenses of the news cameras soaked up every detail as the wretched couple kissed and wept.

The child Anna is soon to bear will have a father's name.

Brothers

A Van Sweringen Dies

Death last week dissolved the Van Sweringen railroad partnership that controlled $3,000,000,000 worth of the Nation's carriers. Mantis James Van Sweringen, 54, died of influenza and a cardiac infection. Oris Paxton Van Sweringen, 56, brother and partner, was at his bedside.

The brothers grew up together in rural Ohio, worked together as office boys, made a fortune together out of real estate, built a railroad empire together, and lived most of their lives as bachelors, together on an estate outside Cleveland.

In 1916, they bought the moribund Nickel Plate Railroad from the New York Central and put it on its feet. By 1930 they had acquired a huge network covering half the Nation. Their colossal rail-finance pyramid weakened in 1934, collapsed when they couldn't pay up a $48,000,000 loan to the Morgans early this fall. Their last spectacular coup came a few weeks ago when the banks auctioned their controlling interests and the brothers bid in and bought it back for a measly $3,000,000.

They spent their private lives in extreme retirement, living much of the time with their two unmarried sisters.

Art

Frick

A Gift From 1919

Multimillionaire Henry Clay Frick, coke and steel pioneer, a man who loved art masterpieces for themselves, died in 1919, bequeathing his magnificent art collection and Fifth avenue residence as the Frick collection, "for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a gallery of art for the encouraging and developing of the story of the fine arts, and of advancing the general knowledge of kindred subjects—to the end that the same shall be a public gallery of art to which the entire public shall forever have access, subject only to reasonable regulations."

During the lifetime of Mrs. Frick, who died in October, 1931, the mansion and the collection were reserved for her use. On her death the trustees called in Dr. Frederick Mortimer Clapp, head of the fine arts department of the University of Pittsburgh, to survey the task, and accepted his report. A burglar-proof, waterproof, fireproof air-conditioned vault was first built in the basement, and the collection was transferred there while alterations were made.

The alterations were for practical purposes, in order to route visitors to the collection, usually estimated as worth at least $50,000,000, on a one-way circuit of the house. But they were carried out in the grand manner at terrific cost, to fix, for many years at least, the masterpieces with which the steel magnate surrounded himself.

In this collection, which opened to the public by card reservation in New York last week, four years after the death of Mrs. Frick, will be available for public view in this country for the first time many of the world's greatest paintings and objets d'art.

Here, among hundreds of masterpieces the visitors last week at an invitational (700 people) preview, saw the famous Rembrandt self-portrait, Titians, Holbeins, Italian bronzes, French and English furniture, Chinese porcelain and many other minor splendors in the great house at Fifth avenue and Seventieth street. The public may write in for dates.

Sports

Baseball

Magnates Swapped

The magnates of baseball met in Palmer House in Chicago last week for their annual bull-sessions, player-trades, shake-ups and rumor-monging.

Bob Quinn, shrewd "Old Pappy" of baseball, former Brooklyn Dodger assistant, became president of the Boston Braves, with the tough task of rebuilding the broken-down ball club into a shiny-new ball club that will make the turnstiles click like a tick-tack-toe on a window at Halloween.

The wily 64-year-old veteran almost at once pulled out of his hat the finest straight trading deal of of the session with a swap of Outfielder Randy Moore and Pitcher Ed Dutch Brandt to Brooklyn for Catcher Al Lopez, Second Baseman Tony Cuccinello and Pitchers Ray Benge and Bob Reis.

Other actions at the meet:

Sunday double-headers are prohibited until June 15; the plea of the Amateur Baseball Congress for $20,000 for the Olympic Games was rejected, which was partly a slap at Nazidom and partly stinginess, the writers said; and adopted the four intersectional series plan.

Largest deal was that of the Boston Red Sox with the purchase of Jimmy Foxx and John Marcum from the Philadelphia Athletics for players and cash. It was estimated that Tom Yawkey, millionaire owner of the Red Sox, has spent more than $3,000 every day since he acquired the club three years ago.

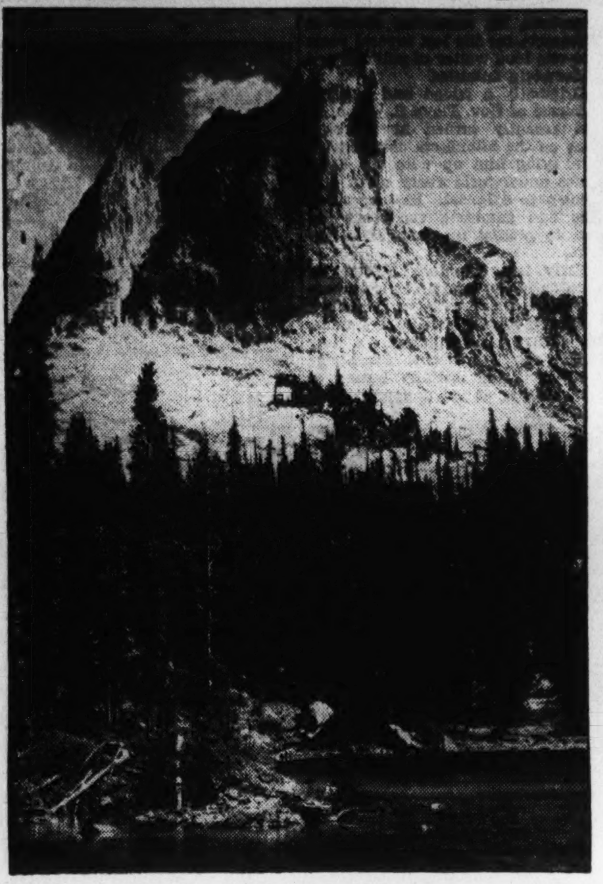
Basque

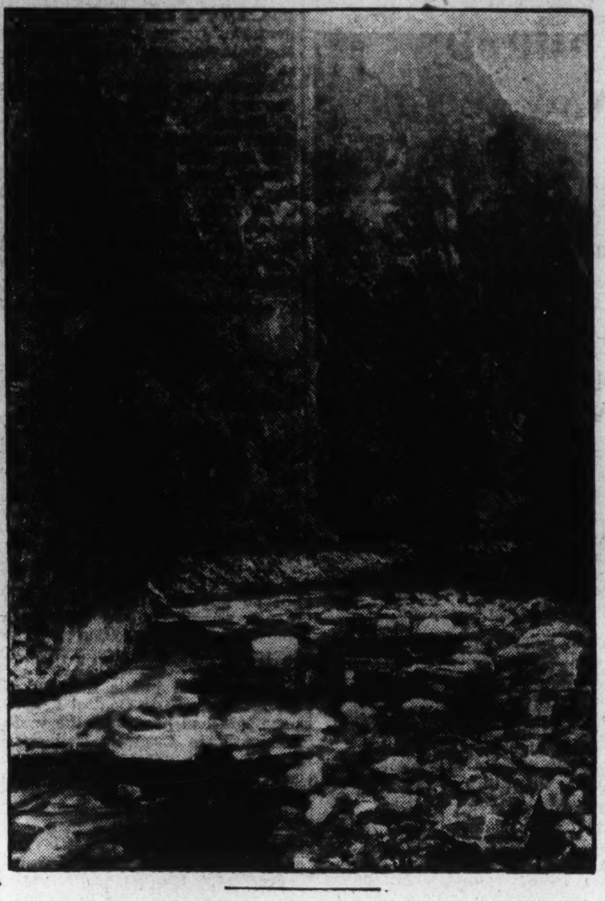
Bounced on His Ear

Another heavyweight was dug up last Friday to set before Joe Louis, Dark Angel of Detroit, as a minor obstacle in his pursuit of the world's heavyweight championship. This was Paolino Uzcudun, the gold-toothed Bounding Basque, the man who had fought 69 fights for 12 years. He had never been floored, let alone knocked out.

Paolino, built as delicately as a fire hydrant, came out of his corner in the 15-round match in Madison Square Garden to baffle the calm 21-year-old Negro for three rounds with his crablike defense, which exposes only skull and elbowbones to attack. Louis, saving his hands, watched for an opening. One came in the fourth round, he whipped through a streaking right, and Uzcudun went down. A few seconds later the bout was mercifully stopped by Referee Arthur Donovan. Uzcudun was almost totally unconscious five minutes.

National Geographic Explorers Plunge Into Idaho's Mystery Land





Idaho's vast primitive wilderness has neither roads nor towns. But its scenic splendors include mountains like the jagged peak of old Half Dome (above, left) and primeval forests that often turn into giant bonfires like the one at the center below.

Above are the members of the National Geographic Society's expedition into Idaho's land of mystery, and up the Salmon River, shown on the right. They will seek rare mineral deposits along this wild mountain stream, known as the "river of no return."

Men Seeking Mineral Wealth in Wilderness

A Million Acres of Virgin Soil Have Neither Towns Nor Settlers, but May Prove Rich in Natural Resources.

By Louise Rowlett.

In the heart of the State of Idaho there exists a "Primitive Area" of 1,000,000 acres. These lands have remained in a natural state of wildness such as the Puritans once found when landing on the Eastern shores of America.

Idaho is a strange State completely bisected by the Salmon River. The core of the State is known as the Primitive Area. It is wilderness country with no passable roads, no towns, no settlements.

State representatives from the northern counties must cross over into Oregon in order to travel down to the State capital of Boise in the southwestern part of the State. On the other hand, all mail and telephone communications to Salmon City in the northeastern part of the State are routed through Montana.

Tourists Miss Beautiful Area.

Tourists who cross the State on the Union Pacific Railroad, or motorists who drive across the old Oregon Trail from Pocatello into Boise, miss entirely the beautiful sections of the State. They cross two great deserts each of 40 or more miles of unbroken sagebrush. These deserts are separated by one oasis of green, the Twin Falls irrigation tract.

The adventuresome autoist who is willing to leave the lateral highway can journey north away from the sheep and sagebrush land into the cattle country. This is the Stanley Basin, where the famous Rocky Mountain Club is located. Eastern millionaires have paid fees of $15 or more a day at this club, which is reached by a high mountain pass known as Galena Summit, out of Ketchum. All this country is snowbound from September to June. Objects are dwarfed by distance on the great grazing plains; the horizon is endless.

On into the mountains, to the north of the cattle country, is the wild game country in the primitive area. It is inaccessible to casual tourists. Their cars demand roads which do not exist. The region is reached by sailing down the Salmon River on rafts, or by entering from the west with mule and pack train.

Senator Borah is one of the famous fishermen who have penertated this area. A young Representative of the States has recently made a trip down the Salmon River with an expedition from the National Geographical Society. The magazine will carry an account of this trip shortly.

The Salmon River out of Salmon City, Idaho, is sometimes spoken of as "The River of No Return." A new raft must be constructed for each party going down the river. It is impossible to navigate back up the river and the raft must be abandoned. Such parties emerge from the area on the extreme western border of the State after crossing it.

On a ridge above Salmon City, Sacajawea, the Indian maiden, once met the party of Lewis and Clark.

They knew that they could not ride down the river in their canoes, but they thought they would be able to take horses and follow it to the Pacific. It was she who told them of the impassabe rocks that rose on either side of the river for many miles, making a narrow chasm of the river. It was she who guided them across this primitive area on trails to the Columbia.

Harry Guleke, an experienced river man, lives at Salmon City. For several decades he has constructed rafts and collected equipment and supplies for parties making the trip down the river. He builds his own log rafts, designed from his experience of what is needed.

Rafts on Sale At Salmon City.

A raft entering the canyon walls is at the mercy of the tossing river that rushes violently past many rapids. Guleke steers his raft between these vertical cliffs. He cannot stop if a novice in a party experiences a change of heart. There are no beaches nor landing places for three hours, only sharp-toothed rocks. The novice must see the trip through to the finish. The raft is thrown downward with momentous speed through the splashing spray for many miles before it finds calm waters.

Harry Guleke has never lost a patron on any of the many hazardous journeys he has made. He charges a party from $100 to $150 for all outfittings and provisioning, for the raft and for his services.

The parties which sail down the river, eventually ground their raft, and go on into the hunting regions either afoot or on horses that are to be rented at one of the few isolated ranches. Hunters find deer, elk and goats in abundance.

"Uncle Dave Lewis," an early settler who owns an isolated ranch in this section, acts as a guide to hunting parties. He has piloted many of them and his name is justly famous wherever pack-horse hunters gather.

The very lack of roads keeps the game in this primitive area. It is country preserved for hunters, not against them. In recent years the Forest Service has constructed a system of trails through the mountain fastnesses. These trails follow the most accessible routes along the stream beds and ridges. Thousands of acres along the breaks of the Salmon River and the middle fork are so precipitous and inaccessible as to render anything but foot travel precarious or impossible. In ascending from the river to the crest of high plateaus and ridges, it is frequently necessary to climb 6,000 feet in a distance of 8 or 10 miles.

Grand Coulee Dam May Ruin Run.

No other section of the United States offers so great a variety of big game in such great numbers. Better fishing streams can not be found. The Salmon River gets its name from the Salmon run, which comes from the Pacific, up the Columbia River and then into the Salmon River. When the run is on, every man who is able, whether he be a CCC camp boy or a workman on a road gang, deserts his job. He rushes to get his equipment of long spear and large shiny brass spoon. The grand Coulee Dam on the Columbia River, which is under construction, may one day ruin this run.

The hunter can find deer in this section in a few hours. It takes him several days to find the elk ranges and to get an elk. Mountain goats and mountain sheep are side diversions.

Few men dare enter the region in the winter. While the country to the south from McCall and the Fayette Lakes into Lowman and the Stanley Basin is also snowbound in the winter, there are settlers. A man on skiis can make his way out. The primitive area is entirely shut off.

Thomas Coski is employed by the State to hunt cougar in the area in the winter with his bear dogs. His dogs fear no cougar in the mountains and Coski has difficulty in keeping them from opening an attack once they have located the "cats." If they do attack they return to him looking like shredded wheat biscuits.

Coski usually makes Warrens his main base of operations. His hounds are exceptional hunters. Unlike other dogs they do not follow trails. They make a bee-line for the cougar by following scents carried in the air. Only occasionally do they sniff the ground. Instead, when released, they hunt with their noses in the air. Most cougars fear dogs and take to the trees where Coski shoots them down and skins them. Later he collects a bounty of $15 for each pelt.

Pelts from wild animals are brought into the State Capitol Building in Boise once each winter and are offered at public auction: fox, martin, beaver. The State pays a bounty from $2 to $5 on coyote skins and $15 on wolves.

During the summer Coski works for the Forest Service as a packer. Occasionally he takes a party of hunters into the big creek area and deeper into the basin. He refuses to let tenderfoot hunters waste deer. With keen eyes trained to the wild, he can see when inexpert firing has only wounded a deer. In a country where hundreds of these animals can be slain in a few hours, he refuses to see them slaughtered.

During the winter months, the deep snows rise 6 to 30 feet to cover the forage on which the deer feed. Then droves of them are driven down from the primitive area into more civilized spots. Even though the State sends rangers with grain up to feed them, many thousands of them die of starvation. The road from Idaho City, an old mining, town, into Boise was at one time completely blocked with such droves. They filled the narrow ribbon of road that stretched above the Boise River along the rim of the mountain and many of their dead were lying among them.

This region to the south of the primitive area contains some 60 C. C. C. camps. Gov. C. Ben Ross, of the State of Idaho, obtained more of these camps than any other State in the Union. These boys are helping to build roads, and during the dry summer months they fight the ever-recurring forest fires.

They have begun two fragments of road on either side of the primitive area, one from Salmon City down stream to Shoup. The other is on the opposite side of the State, stretching upstream from Riggins. The construction is exceedingly expensive and the only excuse for such expenditure of Government money is that it may open up mining and timber territory.

Because gold was once taken out of all the territory of the south, every miner surmises that it exists in great quantities in the primitive area.

Mining Camps Now Deserted.

Today only skeletons exist of the many mining camps that once peppered the State. In the Boise Basin 25,000 men swarmed into Idaho City. In a few years after 1862, gold amounting to perhaps $100,000,000 was taken out of the State. As these fields petered out, the year 1900 brought a gold rush into central Idaho within 30 miles of the primitive area.

Ten thousand men threw up a hastily constructed town of shacks on its very border, which they called Roosevelt. Gold was in the streams. Ledges and veins of the yellow dirt lay at the edge of the water, so they placed their huts at the foot of precipitous canyon walls.

But like an ever vanishing mirage, gold quickly disappeared. The population of Roosevelt dissolved. The miners, like packs of hungry wolves, left for Nevada and the Yukon.

The wind beat on the deserted dwellings and storms blackened the unpainted walls for several years, then a landslide buried the streets and houses in a large lake at the foot of the steep canyon.

The strangest sight of the State, on which a CCC boy or any other newcomer first comments is that of great drifts of sifted dirt lying in ridges about deserted mining towns. After the miners left it the Chinamen who had been imported into the country to work on the railroad down in Utah came into Idaho and resifted it. They found very profitable leavings in it. Today, in some places, expensive machinery is sifting it for the third time, at a profit.

State Has Chinese, Basque Population.

A few very aged Chinese miners are being kept from starvation today by small State pensions. One or two, who are around 70 years of age, still live in the underground tunnels at Idaho City. These were once used for opium dens.

One old Chinese woman died last winter on a remote ranch in the interior of the primitive area. For 40 years she had not been near a town. She was the wife of a white man, who had won her in a game of roulette in a noisy, flourishing mining camp.

The few crude eating houses on the Payette River highways into McCall are operated today by Chinese descendants of these early miners. Others of them work endless hours on small vegetable gardens out of Boise. They are not allowed to own land, merely to lease it. They are a familiar sight selling their wares to housewives on the streets.

These Chinese are as peculiar to the State of Idaho as its Basque villages down in the sagebrush, sheep-grazing territory. No parade in the State is complete without Senator Borah at its head, followed by a contingent of Chinese in their silk costumes. They weave a long paper dragon in a dance, to the tune of weird music, and patriotically explode all their firecrackers from the old country.

The primitive area is a source of great danger during the hot dry summertime. A burning avalanche of fire shooting down a mountainside defies humans to stop it.

Men are recruited on one side at Spokane to fight it. In Boise, on the other side, the streets take on the appearance of a town directly in line of battle. Thousands of men in overalls, with knapsacks and frying pans tied to their belts, sit on the curbs surrounding the city hall, waiting for the trucks that transport them into the fire zones.

Two summers ago the Governor declared martial law and called out the National Guard to fight the dangerous flames. Hundreds of acres of timber were aflame. Black clouds, through which the sun could not break, rolled over the entire area. Several of the guard boys, in different localities, were burned to death when fire suddenly jumped a gap and cut them off from rescue.

Last summer fire burned for many miles on both sides of the road between Idaho City and Lowman. The road, across which fire leaped from one tree to another, was closed to pedestrians and automobiles.

Men were at work, within the danger zone, cutting away burning logs and trees that had fallen across the road. Individual property owners were protecting their own buildings. Many of these were men with large sheep holdings who lived with their families in the mountains during the summer. They had pumps laid in the stream below which pulled up the water and threw a futile stream on their homes.

The Weyerhauser interests have large timber holdings in this section. A young scion of the family was recently kidnaped from his home in Spokane. Their lumber mills support whole communities in the State, such as Emmitt and Barber.

By a strange quirk, in the remote wilds of the primitive area there is a grave of a United States soldier. In 1925 the old regiment of Private Harry Eagan and the War Department erected a modest monument to mark his grave. The headstone was transported from the nearest railroad station, McCall on the Payette Lake, for some 70 miles by wagon and then nearly 40 miles by pack mule to its destination at Soldier Bar.

Harry Eagan was killed in Indian wars; his grave is more remote from civilization than any other soldier's buried within the United States. Eagan was sent out from Fort Boise in 1879 with a small regiment to curb the Sheepeater Indians after a massacre. He was buried at the spot where he met death.

Renegade Indians Raided Ranches, Stole Stock

The Sheepeaters were renegade Indians from the Bannock, Shoshone and Weiser tribes. They lived on mountain sheep, deer and the other game abundant in the area. They hid among the huge rocks of the area and preyed on neighboring ranches. On several of their raids they killed ranchers and stole stock. They robbed prospectors' camps on the upper fork of the Salmon, burned buildings and stole horses.

The high-timbered mountains, the heavy snows that made the passes inaccessible, country unexplored by white men, all helped them to elude two companies of United States troops numbering

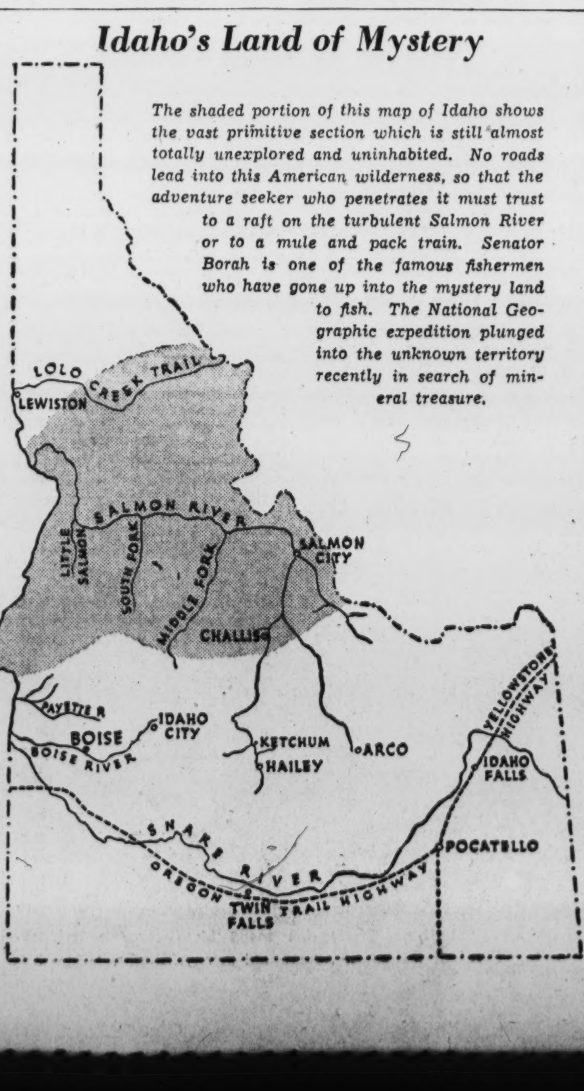
Idaho's Land of Mystery



The shaded portion of this map of Idaho shows the vast primitive section which is still almost totally unexplored and uninhabited. No roads lead into this American wilderness, so that the adventure seeker who penetrates it must trust to a raft on the turbulent Salmon River or to a mule and pack train. Senator Borah is one of the famous fishermen who have gone up into the mystery land to fish. The National Geographic expedition plunged into the unknown territory recently in search of mineral treasure.

Plan to Cut Communications Of Italians Called Atrocity

Sir Leo Chiozza Money Says Step Would Abandon Soldiers, Colonists to Savage Foe, Mean War by Rome on Britain, Unaided by France.

(Sir Leo Chiozza Money, who has written the article that follows for the Associated Press, is one of England's leading writers on economics, internationalism and war. He served during part of the World War as parliamentary private secretary to Mr. Lloyd George, then Minister of Munitions, and also was a member of the "restriction of enemy's supplies committee." It was he who suggested the rationing blockade policy which the government adopted during the war.—Editor's note.)

By Sir Leo Chiozza Money.

(Written for the Associated Press.)

Bramley, Surrey, England, Dec. 14.—Proposals that the British fleet be used for the purpose of cutting Italy's sea communications with her East African colonies would be nothing short of an atrocity.

If this were done, as Lord Hardinge has pointed out, the Italian colonists and 200,000 soldiers "would be cut off from all resources and left to the tender mercy of a savage and barbarous enemy."

It is not the Italians alone who would suffer from a diabolical outrage of this kind, so coolly suggested to educated minds.

The first move to "cut communications" would mean war. Italy would fight, and for the first time an overwhelming force of aircraft would be launched against the British fleet while Italian submarines would work to deadly effect in the tortuous Mediterranean.

Italian troops would promptly occupy Egypt, and help themselves to Kenya.

France could not and would not help. She has declared against such a war. There would be another French revolution if her government were so mad as to back Viscount Cecil.

But let us return to the question of humanity.

In Ethiopia, Italy is conducting a humane war which is really a triumphant march, welcomed by the oppressed. She has already freed some 16,000 slaves and is feeding and tending them. Thus Viscount Cecil would cut off the food of the rescued and leave them to be murdered by the Amhara.

Lord Mottistone (Gen. John Seely, D.S.O.) told the House of Lords the other day that Mussolini, when it was pointed out to him that the closing of the Suez Canal would starve his soldiers and that this prospect raised the question as to whether the Ethiopian needy should continue to be fed at Italian risk, replied:

"Take the risk. Continue to feed the natives as before."

Viscount Cecil would stop Mussolini's civilizing mission by war on Italy. To that war he could not go himself, but it would not end until millions of young men had been rushed into uniform and sent, after a mockery of training, to fight and die on continental and African fields.

I write as one who believes that the ancient friendship of Britain and Italy must be restored if Europe is to find permanent peace. The proposal to cut off Italy from East Africa is as unwise as it is atrocious.

Things are bad enough as it is. During the World War it was my official duty to help blockade Germany, a sickennig business even against a brutal foe that dropped bombs on London.

It is horrible now to know that Britain is striking at the women and children of a friendly land while Italian soldiers are sharing their rations with the slaves they have liberated.

New British M. P. Conducted Unique Campaign for Office

A. P. Herbert, Staff Writer for "Punch" and Staunch Supporter of the "Pub," Wins Parliament Seat With 1 Speech, 20,000 Letters.

By the Associated Press.

London, Dec. 14.—The new House of Commons is assured of some fun no matter how serious the international clouds which roll up to darken its deliberations.

Alan Patrick Herbert, 45, "A. P." for short, writer, humorist and firm advocate of the "Pub" as a British institution, has been elected to Commons as Oxford University member.

"A. P." entertained his supporters at an "election reception" the Sunday following the balloting in a room marked "private bar," at the Black Lion, public house on the bank of the Thames at Hammersmith.

Twenty thousand letters to voters, one speech, and a day and a half of actual campaigning won Herbert, an Independent, the Oxford seat over the official Conservative candidate and a Socialist. Mainly he relied on his electoral letter, which, shorn of traditional political arguments, set a new mark in British electioneering.

The agricultural problems of the nation, for instance, Herbert—otherwise "A. P. H." of the staff of Punch—dismissed with five words. Under the heading "agriculture" in the letter appeared this sentence: "I know nothing about agriculture."

Like a bank clerk applying for his first job, Herbert assured his university constituency: "I am a member of the Church of England . . . 45 years old . . . and in good health."

In another paragraph the potential M. P. passed along the word that he would be handy to his work; no overnight journey necessary to see him on the job of helping frame the nation's laws.

"I live," read the letter, "at Hammersmith, a half hour's journey from Westminster."

At least one trip down the Thames by boat, to step ashore almost on the terraces of the Palace of Westminster, is one of his ambitions. For years he has been hammering at the authorities who control the Thames to establish a fleet of fast river boats to supplement the city's transportation system.

The regulations governing the "pub"—public house—traditional scene of the workman's pint of ale and game of darts, are due for an airing if Herbert has his way.

Last year he took the kitchen committee of the House of Commons to court, because drinks are sold there without a license, and lost. The court ruled that the kitchen committee can go right on selling drinks unlicensed because the Palace of Westminster, which houses the commons, actually is a royal palace.

Herbert has retired from that fight, knowing he is whipped, but he intends to keep the question of the "pub" before the House.

"I shall continue," he says, "to urge that the 'pub' is a valuable institution—politically a center of sanity; socially a common ground for the classes, and for temperance purposes an instrument of control."

The new M. P., who satirized Britain's divorce laws in his 1934 best seller, "Holy Deadlock," also promises to have something to say about marriage law reform, but he warns that it will not be sensational, because he's "a happy husband of 21 years and the father of four children."

Disappointment With NRA Caused the First Real Break.

By Felix Bruner.

Any partnership that may have existed between big business organizations and the New Deal has been dissolved. Organized business has withdrawn. Not content with merely withdrawing, it is actively hostile.

The partnership originally was based upon necessity rather than upon good will and mutual confidence. The first job of the New Deal was to attempt to aid business in lifting itself out of the slough of depression. The only thought of business was that of getting out. Any assistance was welcomed.

The change has been gradual. It was brought about by two very definite causes—business improvement, and a distinct feeling among business and industrial leaders that the New Deal did not live up to its part of the contract.

Failure of the attempt last week by Maj. George L. Berry, co-ordinator for industrial co-operation, to obtain the cooperation of a considerable section of business was merely symptomatic of the situation. Such a conference might have been fairly successful a year ago. Now it is completely impossible. The fault was not Berry's. Business simply offered no opportunity to co-ordinate industrial co-operation, because co-operation did not exist.

The Big Guns Start Firing.

The country's two largest—and most articulate—business organizations, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and the National Association of Manufacturers, already had brought up their big guns and commenced a heavy bombardment of the New Deal citadel. Many individual small business men already had deserted because of disappointment with the NRA.

It long ago became apparent that any effort to revive the NRA, short of legislation that would stand the test of constitutionality, forcing business into the compliance, would be impossible. The Supreme Court was not responsible for the death of NRA. Its decision merely hastened the end. NRA was dying even before Gen. Hugh S. Johnson stamped out of the picture.

NRA was dying for the two reasons just given, improvement in business and distrust of the Administration. The latter reason was at the time, and probably still is, far the more important. Business improvement has come largely since the Supreme Court decision.

Business men have the same reactions as other human beings. They withdrew their co-operation because they felt they were not getting all that they bargained for, and because they felt that labor was getting more than it should. Stress was put on labor provision of codes. The principal purpose of NRA, in the last analysis, was to put men to work. This situation gave labor a natural advantage.

Labor Fumbled Many Chances.

But labor fell far short of making the most of its opportunities. Labor organizations grew to some extent, but only a small percentage of the total working population has been organized. Such industries as steel, automobiles and rubber are not organized, except for some very minor groups. Disagreement within labor groups and lack of firm leadership have been responsible.

An answer to the question of why labor still is so willing to remain in partnership with the Government, while business is not, can be found in the Government's own statistics. Production has reached about 94 per cent of the 1923-25 average, while employment is only about 80 per cent. Labor still is looking to the Government in desperation born of an estimated 11,000,000 unemployed.

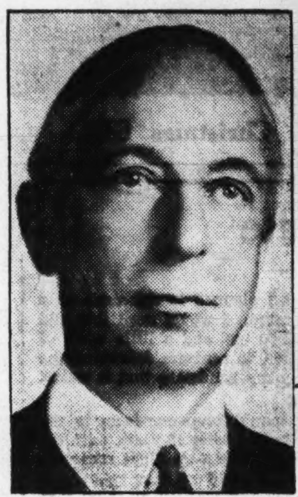
Business distrust of the New Deal goes farther than its differences with the NRA. Taxes and Government spending constitute a powerful reason for disaffection. The official attitude is that spending is necessary to prevent actual starvation among the unemployed. The business attitude is that the spending is much greater than necessary, that it is not being done wisely, and that resultant taxation is retarding recovery. Such legislation as the holding company bill and the increase in taxation for corporations and incomes in higher brackets, together with the Administration's monetary policies, have definitely alienated the business and industrial groups.

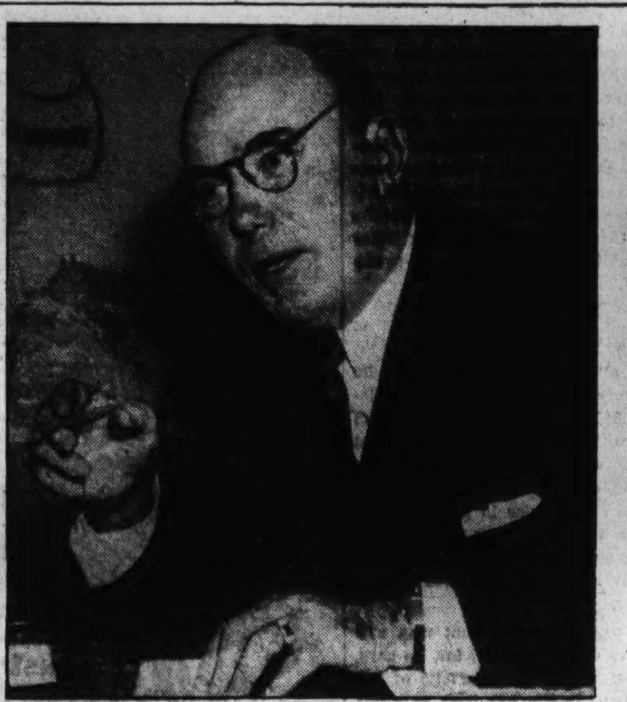
C. of C. Started Out Friendly.

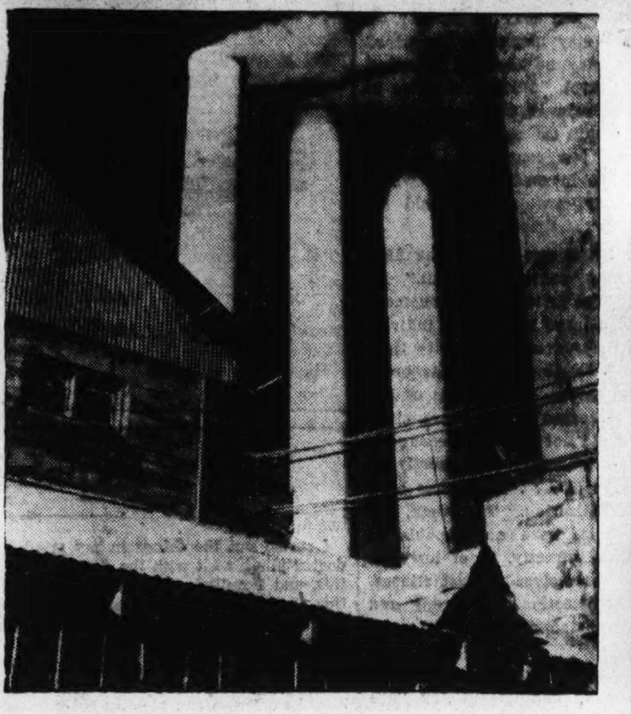
A summary of the changes in the attitude of business is contained in the various pronouncements of the Chamber of Commerce. From the beginning it was much more friendly than the Association of Manufacturers. At the start of the New Deal the Chamber of Commerce showed every evidence of willingness to go along. A year ago the tone of the resolutions adopted at its annual convention became critical, but little more than that. This year the tone was distinctly hostile.

The last really serious attempt by leaders of big business to co-operate with the Administration was made just a year ago, when a group of 90 of the country's leading industrialists met at White Sulphur Springs, W. Va. There they drew up a platform for American industry. It was not friendly to the New Deal, but it left the way open for compromise and further co-operation.

Alfred P. Sloan, jr. (above), president of General Motors Corporation, said recently: "I cannot see how any intelligent observer can have any possible faith in the capacity of political management to provide either stability or progress, particularly in industry." Below, Harper Sibley, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, which has declared itself firmly opposed to New Deal regulation of business.







Maj. George L. Berry (top center), New Deal co-ordinator for industrial co-operation, had a hard time at his business conference in Washington last week finding any industries which desired to co-operate or be co-ordinated. There was a time when sheer necessity and hard times drove manufacturers and business men to join hands with the Government in the effort to restore prosperity. But factory chimneys are belching smoke again—and industry wants as little interference as possible.

Clinton L. Bardo (above), president of the National Association of Manufacturers, said: "Whether we like it or not, industry, much against its will, has been coerced, in sheer self-defense, to enter the political arena or be destroyed as a private enterprise." Below, Lammot du Pont, who took an active part in the association's recent meeting in New York, in which it came out strongly against the New Deal.

The Administration slammed the door in the face of the business group. The platform was brought to Washington by a designated member of the conference and presented at the White House. President Roosevelt never gave any indication that he had even read it. That marked the parting of the ways. The breach has merely widened since.

As evidence of how far the breach has widened in the past 12 months, one need only read a paragraph in the White Sulphur platform, which said:

Statement Shows Widened Breach.

"The new act (a new NIRA) should require every code of fair competition to contain suitable provisions concerning maximum hours and minimum wages, prohibiting child labor, safeguarding both labor and employers by giving to labor the right to deal with employers either individually or collectively, directly or through representatives of their own free choice, without intimidation or coercion of either party from any source."

That statement was made just a year ago by a group of the country's leading industrialists! In that group was Alfred P. Sloan, president of General Motors Corporation. Recently, at the Congress of American Industry in New York, Mr. Sloan said:

"I cannot see how any intelligent observer can have any possible faith in the capacity of political management to provide either stability or progress, if it should set out to operate the agencies of wealth creation, particularly industry. It is my firm conviction that any form of 'Government regimentation of industry' is bound to result in an ever-increasing interference with the broad exercise of initiative—the very foundation of the American system.

"I hold that political management, irrespective of degree, can have no other result than lowering the ceiling of industry's ability to contribute toward human progress."

A year ago business still was considering the possibility of continuing the NRA. Today business is crying out against any form of "Government regimentation." It is crying out against such legislation as the Wagner and the Guffey bills, which follow the essential lines of White Sulphur platform, proposed by business itself.

But in some other essentials, the White Sulphur platform foreshadowed the present situation. It asked for:

Sound currency.

A balanced Federal budget.

Elimination of Government competition with private business.

On these things the business attitude is unchanged. Only the tone is changed. Social security was discussed a year ago, with a show of at least some willingness to cooperate. At the recent New York convention a demand was made for outright repeal of social security legislation.

With business and industry showing such an attitude, Maj. Berry called his conference. He insisted that his motive was not a revival of the NRA, but that he was merely attempting to learn what business wanted. For the most part, business organizations replied that they had already expressed themselves. They wanted to be left alone; they had no intention of trying any new experiments; they wanted to be relieved of the burden of ruinous taxation.

Business almost unanimously stayed away from the Berry conference. Labor almost unanimously responded. It is true that several hundred business men did attend, but many of these represented only themselves or minor groups, many were men who are regularly stationed in Washington to report on what is going on in the Capital, and a few appeared for the distinct purpose of breakng up the meeting.

The disturbance created when this last group attempted to obtain the floor at the opening session of the conference was of no particular significance. Even had these speakers succeeded in gaining recognition they could have caused little damage compared with that done by the majority who didn't appear at all. The conference was foredoomed to failure even before it was called. The active opponents in the meeting could have made little difference.

Berry Forming Progress Council.

Berry is now organizing what he terms a council for industrial progress. It will include few representatives of major business groups, a considerable number of small business men who represent only themselves or small groups, and a very representative group of labor leaders. In no sense can this council be said to represent American industry.

Last summer, at the close of Congress, President Roosevelt sent a letter to the chairmen of the Senate Finance Committee and of the House Ways and Means Committee. He asked them to find out, during the recess in Congress, how far business wanted to go along in cooperation with the Government. He hinted broadly at a plan for a new NRA. Shortly afterward, he named Berry to obtain similar information.

Their Accord Was a Child Of Necessity

Depression Was the First Problem of This Administration.

Revival of Trade Was an Urgent National Issue.

Berry has said that he has obtained this information, that thousands of letters in his possession give the viewpoint of business. In this he is undoubtedly correct. But it is not necessary to read these letters to obtain this viewpoint. It was not necessary, either, for the Congressional committee or Berry's organization to attempt to find out. Business itself took the initiative. It is speaking its mind nearly every day. It has discovered that it can become articulate. From its former policy of using its influence quietly and in the background, it has become as loud as the loudest soapbox orator.

C. L. Bardo, president of the Association of Manufacturers, expressed the attitude at least of his organization, when he said:

"Whether we like it or not, industry, much against its will, has been coerced, in sheer self-defense, to enter the political arena or be destroyed as a private enterprise. In the inner recesses of our minds we no longer feel that America must submit to guardianship, that we must choose thralldom instead of freedom."

Breathing Spell Fails to Impress.

Organized business obviously is taking little stock in President Roosevelt's "breathing spell." In the first place, business spokesmen say, the mere reference to a breathing spell was an admission that business had been strangled. How, they ask, can anyone take seriously promise of a breathing spell with taxes and expenditures mounting, with restrictive legislation piled upon restrictive legislation, and with the constant threat of further "regimentation?"

Uncertainty, business spokesmen claim, is retarding recovery. They are crying for some assurance that experimentation is ended. They want more assurance than the promise of a breathing spell.

"For who will build while the earth trembles?" asked James A. Emery, general counsel for the manufacturers association.

The latest attack comes from the Chamber of Commerce. Recently the chamber conducted a poll of its organization on general New Deal policies. Ninety-eight per cent of those who voted in the poll voted against the New Deal. Critics of the canvass insisted that the questions were worded so that they allowed of only this kind of answer. There was little doubt, however, of the feeling of the majority.

The chamber has just released its report on fiscal affairs and is conducting a new poll.

Taxation Outlook Termed Menacing.

"The menace of still larger demands for taxes threatens all our citizens," said the report of the chamber taxation committee. "All must bear the burden one way or another. It is a fallacy to assume that well-to-do and rich individuals can be made to defray more than a small proportion of the total costs of government. There are not enough of them, nor do they have sufficient income, to meet more than a small part of total public expenditures."

Business is making public spending the issue in its own campaign. The drive cannot help being tied up with politics as the next election approaches. What actual effect it will have on the election is a question that is beginning to interest political observers. Friends of the New Deal say that business is playing into its hands, that the heavy bombardment from its ranks is strengthening the support of the workers and the farmers, numerically far stronger than business. But business still pays the bills, not only of government but of political campaigns.

After Ethiopia—Does Arabia's Oil Beckon to Mussolini?

Yemen, Arabia, Has a 1926 Commercial Treaty With Italy.

By Selim Totah.

His Majesty Victor Emmanuel III, King of Italy, represented by Signor Gasparini, Italian Governor of Eritrea and His Majesty the Imam Yahia, King of Yemen (Arabia) entered into a "solemn" treaty on the second day of September, 1926, signed, sealed and delivered in the City of Sanaa, Yemen, Arabia.

Where is Yemen?

Yemen is opposite Eritrea on the other side of the Red Sea, just as Albania is opposite Rome on the other side of the Adriatic. Addis Ababa, Harar and Adrigat are everyday words on the lips of the American public. Maybe in the near future Sanaa, Aden and Hodeida and other Yemenite cities, so called, will likewise be as common in everyday conversation in America.

Artile III of the treaty reads: "The government of His Majesty King of Yemen declares that it is its desire to import from Italy the supplies, that is, the technical means and material, required to promote the economic development of the Yemen. This applies also to technical staff."

Arabic Text Governs.

Article VIII of the same treaty in substance states that the Arabic text of the treaty is to govern in case of doubt or divergence of opinion in regard to the interpretation thereof.

The treaty was written in Arabic and in Italian and both texts were signed by the contracting parties. The King of Yemen, although not the holder of a law degree, was more shrewd than his neighbor, the Emperor of Ethiopia, in a similar situation in the past. The absence of a clause such as Article VIII almost led to war. King Yahia took no chances with the Italian text.

This Yemen-Italian treaty, to the writer's best information and belief, is the first of its kind and tenor between Yemen and a European nation. Yemen has always resisted the incursions of the outside world of whatever kind or nature, including the Turkish, co-religionists of the Yemenites, efforts to make inroads on Yemen to subjugate them although Yemen was nominally a part of the Ottoman Empire. Until this very day, the outside world knows very little about Yemen except tales and travel talks of scholars who persuaded the King of Yemen of their harmlessness in a visit to his domain.

Therefore, a treaty between Yemen and Italy was highly significant in 1926 and its portent can now be seen. Great Britain made many treaties with other Arab chieftains and had failed to gain favor with King Yahia until very recently. The capitals of Europe were puzzled as to the real motives behind the Yemen-Italy treaty.

Up to the signing of this treaty and not since Napoleon's Egyptian campaigns has there been a direct attempt against the British route to India.

With Eritrea and Yemen—under the control of the same European power—not Great Britain—the Red Sea shipping lane would be at the mercy of such a power. Aden would be worthless to Great Britain.

Signor G. A. Rosso, an Italian officer, wrote a book, "Diritti d'Italia Oltremare" in 1916 in which the problems of Italy in her oversea colonization in the Mediterranean, Asia and Africa are set forth.

In this book the Italian officer claims for Italy not only Ethiopia, but also Yemen.

The Italian military invasion of Ethiopia is now partly accomplished. Will the invasion of Yemen follow and if so, when?

The claims of Signor Rosso to Yemen are, first, that Yemen is separated from Eritrea by a sea scarcely as wide as the Adriatic, and, second, that Yemen is an essential complement of Eritrea. History, he contends, consecrated inseparable bonds between Yemen, Eritrea and Ethiopia. Ethiopia, he goes on to say, was colonized by Invasion of Yemen by Italian Forces Is Possible.

Semetic tribes from Yemen, bringing with them the Sabean civilization. This is borne out by the facts that the Amharic (the language of Ethiopia) alphabet is derived from the Sabean; that in the sixth century A. D. the kings of Aksum, then capital of Ethiopia, recently captured by the Italians, invaded and annexed Yemen, and that the Yemenites in a later period exercised control over Ethiopia.

Oil Available In Large Supply.

Yemen, in its climate, soil, topography and general characteristics of inhabitants and the mode of life, is similar to Ethiopia. The soil and climate of Yemen are fit for European colonization, whereas the deserts of Hedjaz and Nejd are not. Wheat is grown there. Fruits abound, and even petroleum, necessary to airplanes and tanks, is claimed to be available in quantities. The Standard Oil Co. not long ago secured an oil concession in the eastern part of Saudi Arabia, bordering on the Persian Gulf, from King Ibn Saud. Italy needs petroleum in the worst way, and control of such oil fields is inviting. Great Britain and France already are assured of oil from Irak and Persia.

King Yahia, ruler of Yemen, has had skirmishes with both Ibn Saud, King of Hedjaz, and Idrisi, Emir of Asir. Both are friends of Great Britain. Hajj Abdallah (Sir St. John Philby), British convert to Islam, is reputed to be the political adviser of Ibn Saud.

Any Italian treaty of friendship and economic exploitation with Yemen, therefore, in the nature of things, must concern the British.

Of course it is pertinent to mention in this respect that hostilities between King Yahia and Ibn Saud were settled by the Treaty of Taif, of May 24, 1934, which provided that the two parties would jointly protect their interests from foreign interference; that they would not form an alliance with any third party which would injure their mutual relations, and that in case of foreign intervention in the kingdom of either party each would act to support the other. Accordingly, in the event of Italian intervention in Yemen it would seem that King Ibn Saud would be called upon to come to the support of King Yahia.

On the other hand, it is common gossip in the bazaars of Aden, Hodeida, port of Yemen on the Red Sea, Sanaa, and other Arabian centers, that the Italians have sought to exert influence on the King of Yemen by means of Italian officers, engineers and doctors who are active in Yemen, and that Italian army officers are serving in the Yemen army. Just how far such efforts upon the King have been successful it is difficult to judge, though bazaar gossip in that region is as authoritative a source of information as a reputable newspaper in any other part of the world.

Talk of Alliance Formally Denied.

From the same sources it seems possible that a military alliance between the Imam and Il Duce has been entered into, although in a recent press telegraphic dispatch such an alliance was denied.

In 1926-27, not very long after the signing of the Yemen-Italy treaty, Dr. Wolfgang Von Weisal, a representatives of the Vossische Zeitung, a Berlin daily, visited the Arab countries on the Red Sea, on the heels of Il Duce. In Dr. Von Weisal's articles, published in February and March, 1927, he discusses Fascism on the Red Sea.

Massaua, chief Italian port in the Red Sea, and second only to the Port of Suez, is developed out of proportion to the trade of Eritrea and the adjoining territories and leads an observer to believe that Massaua was being developed to handle the commerce of Yemen.

A LEADERSHIP battle, that may overshadow the stormiest of recent interfaction fights for House speakership, is bubbling merrily away behind the scenes on Capitol Hill.

But the lid is still on the kettle. How long it will remain on, under pressure of accumulating steam, is a problem in thermodynamics that would trouble the ghost of Jimmy Watt.

Joseph Wellington Byrns is still Speaker and is likely to remain so as long as he wants the job. But it takes an efficient corps of subleaders as well to run the business of the House. And that is what the row now simmering is about.

It all started when Representative William B. Bankhead, of Alabama, was elected majority leader last session before members realized he was a very sick man.

In health, they know Bankhead as a capable, forceful, effective leader, on the floor and off. Members like him. He is poison to the Republicans whenever the partisan going gets rough.

So much for his talents. Unfortunately, due to his illness, and enforced absence, he was unable to demonstrate them for as much as a single day after he was chosen leader. Still he held on to his nominal title. Reports are that, improved in health, he still plans to hold on.

This news was perplexing to other Democratic top-notchers, mostly friends of the Alabaman, who would go down the line for "Billy" Bankhead any day in the week. Few of these would be so indelicate as to suggest that Bankhead resign, few so blunt as to propose a caucus to displace him.

This group realized that something would have to be done if the strenuous leadership job was going to function smoothly. So the other day some of them got together and tentatively evolved a plan. Bankhead would continue to be nominal leader, but under him would be a whole galaxy of subleaders, who would do the hard work.

THAT is the lid that is resting uneasily on the kettle. It would not take much boiling to blow it off. Bankhead himself might contribute to a final eruption, for one report has it that he will insist on resuming his full duties.

More than ordinary significance attaches to the dilemma, because Acting Majority Leader Edward T. Taylor, 77, but hearty, has intimated that he may not desire to continue in the arduous "acting" role.

Friends have advised him to "sit tight" because they think his resignation might precipitate a scramble for the leadership that would disrupt House Democratic harmony in a crucial Presidential election year.

But there are many House Democrats who think the scramble is coming anyway and some who privately suggest it isn't quite fair of Bankhead to handicap the organization if he is not able to give his full time to the job.

Naturally, there is a bevy of men, who would not scorn to run for the leadership if the way were clear, and who may attempt to force a show-down House caucus anyway. For the leadership is an important stepping stone to the highest House office.

In the end, it will be Speaker Byrns, who takes a look at the kettle and decides what's to be done. Just now, he's not so far out in the Pacific, in the bow of a boat heading home.

You may hear this is a Democracy come Jackson day, but if you want to get an eyeful of evidence stroll down Jackson place some dull afternoon. No, we couldn't identify the well-groomed cosmopolite, who plays chess there with his chauffeur in the tonneau of his parked limousine.

CABINET heads have learned to turn the tables on newspaper correspondents during the Government news dearth of the last four months.

Ever hopeful reporters tumble out in numbers for the current press conferences only to have their own favorite query of "Well, what's the news?" flung into their teeth.

Secretary of Agriculture Wallace was the last to pull the gag at his meeting with the press last week. It didn't go over.

Wallace grinned sheepishly.

"These press conferences are very helpful to me," he laughed.

Wallace has a way of teasing the press along when he has a story he doesn't want to give out, but, withal, he manages somehow to keep them in a good humor.

There was the question about the sales tax. A reporter wanted to know if it stands a chance if the processing tax is invalidated.

"Well, it has its advantages and it has its disadvantages," responded the Secretary, skillfully trailing the red herring.

"I always say there's nothing so good it doesn't have its disadvantages, and nothing so obnoxious it doesn't have some advantages.

"You know, we try not to have too hard and fast a view of these things.

Senator William E. Borah is one Progressive who isn't worried about a return to the "horse and buggy days." His tastes are mostly the homely ones of the early part of the century. With taxis and limousines zooming all around, he generally manages to weave his way through to the nearest bus or car stop. He mingles with the crowds on the trolleys, and is generally recognized. But once in his Senate office, a protective shield is thrown around him. You've got to have just the right word to get by his efficient secretary, Cora Rubin.

The Wealth Of Ninevah.

Administrator Hopkins concludes that the physical wealth of the country will be increased to the extent of some $5,000,000,000 by the work-relief construction program. In return for the billions being currently expended to create jobs, he points out that the country will be richer in buildings, roads and various civic improvements lumped together under the comprehensive designation "wealth." Presumably this economic nonsense is designed to prove that the WPA and other relief agencies are not costing the people of the United States anything at all.

The methods employed in appraising the value of relief projects betray either a complete ignorance of what is meant by "wealth" or else a calculated indifference to accepted formulas for measuring it. Mr. Hopkins boldly assumes that the $3,585,000,000 which, he says, represents actual construction value means a net addition of that amount to the Nation's wealth. He makes no allowance, it seems, for roads that lead nowhere, "improvements" for which there is no real need and mistaken enterprises that turn out to be community liabilities instead of assets. On this basis the ruins of Ninevah would greatly swell the national "wealth" of Irak, though they now afford satisfactions only to bats, owls and archeologists.

There are two other dubious items in Mr. Hopkins' index of wealth, designated as increased property values and larger productive capacity. The WPA administrator does not indicate what is meant by the latter, but, however defined, it provides no adequate criterion of national wealth. Excess productive capacity is not a source of economic strength but weakness. And the estimated increase of $1,500,000,000 in land values, said to be due to Government spending, is sheer guesswork. Moreover, it represents no tangible material addition to national income, which is the real measure of national well-being.

Loose economic thinking of this character is of less than no importance as a defense of the wasteful and inefficient policies followed by Federal relief agencies. It is of value only as indication of the growing realization that money spent on useless projects or nonproductive public works constitutes a drain upon the Nation's resources. This drain, of course, finds direct reflection in higher taxes and indirectly reduces the volume of real income of everybody.

Employment Behind The Lines.

It is a comparatively simple matter to find out how many persons are directly employed on a specific Government project, and how much of the outlay on that project is paid out in the form of wages. It is far from easy, however, to obtain a reliable estimate of the number of jobs indirectly created by Government spending. The United States Bureau of Labor Statistics has undertaken to throw much-needed light upon this little-explored subject by studying and analyzing the effect of the PWA program upon particular industries. The bureau recently announced that orders placed by the PWA from August, 1933, to October of the present year provided more than 70,000,000 man-hours of employment in producing and transporting cement, representing outlays of over $130,000,000. These figures are exclusive of the direct work given at the construction sites.

In a preceding study of the effects of PWA outlays on the iron and steel industry the bureau concluded that the employment created in producing and transporting materials was from three to four times the amount of direct employment required to place such products on actual sites. The bureau also notes that the amount of indirect demand for labor resulting from the placement of orders has innumerable ramifications. For example, each of the 62,000,000 barrels of cement ordered by the PWA represented 750 pounds of limestone, clay, coal, and other raw materials.

Obviously, the full extent of the indirect employment created by Government spending cannot be traced through all stages of the productive process, but the Bureau of Labor Statistics has demonstrated the value of a more thorough investigation of the effect of Government spending upon employment. If Secretary Ickes had been better informed as to the effect of PWA outlays upon indirect employment at the inception of his program, the country might have been spared many of the boondoggling activities of the WPA type, whose advocates measure the work-creation value of public spending merely by the number of individuals placed on Government pay rolls.

As a matter of fact, the volume of indirect employment in private industry created by Government outlays provides a much more substantial and lasting stimulus to business activity than that which comes from providing thousands of jobs, of varying degrees of usefulness and uselessness, on Government-financed projects.

The Townsend Party.

American history is copiously punctuated by the rise and fall of third party movements. Periods of unrest or depression have always brought forth minority movements which attempted to clothe themselves with the importance of a political party. That Dr. F. E. Townsend and his colleagues have decided to follow this traditional course is not at all surprising.

The history of these ephemeral parties, from the Populists on, offers no encouragement whatever to Dr. Townsend. On the contrary, such efforts have invariably petered out for lack of principles or lasting appeal to the common sense of the electorate. No doubt this is precisely the reason why the formation of a Townsend party has been so long delayed. But the favorable attitude of two Congressional districts in Michigan has made the California doctor bold. He is no longer content with the slow process of "boring from within" the two major parties, but is planning a frontal attack upon them both.

In view of the Townsendites' insidious appeal to human credulity, the promised isolation of their scheme must be viewed with satisfaction. So long as they seek favorable candidates within the major parties, there is danger that the balance of power will operate in their favor. A Republican candidate supporting the Townsend plan might win through the support of his own party plus the votes of pension seekers and vice versa. Where separate Townsend candidates are on the ticket, however, they can win only by drawing voters away from their customary party affiliations. Thus, the issue will be clearly drawn and the candidates of both major parties will be able to fight this "cruel hoax" upon the aged without creating turmoil within their own ranks. In predicting that the next election will be a showdown between "a sane social security plan" and the Townsend idea Gov. Curley exaggerates the strength of the California doctor's organization. Yet that choice will certainly be one of the important issues confronting the electorate. The Townsend scheme cannot be pressed forward without jeopardizing the carefully-planned security program already worked out by the Roosevelt Administration. That is the most tragic aspect of this ridiculous panacea, with its mirage of enriching every individual over 60 in return for a pledge of idleness and prodigality.

There is no indication that the American people would be willing to trade the reasonable measure of security now in prospect for such a mess of pottage. But they must be made to understand the utterly fantastic nature of the Townsend plan. Insofar as the creation of a Townsend party contributes to that end it is a most salutary development.

More School Burlesque.

The halo encircling the head of Huey Long in the mural at McKinley High School must be marked down as a particularly maladroit attempt at humor. The PWAP artist responsible should be required to remove it with all possible speed and the authorities charged with the supervision of his work might properly give public explanation of the sort of supervision they exercise. When boondoggling reaches this kindergarten stage of buffoonery it is high time to call a halt.

If those who have recently become so concerned over the "teaching" of communism in the schools want something to shout about, let them consider this mural. Expenditure of Government funds to depict Huey Long as a saint in the eyes of Washington school children is very nicely in keeping with the rapidly growing tendency to make a grand burlesque of local education.

That Insane Silver Policy.

Since the end of 1933, the Treasury has acquired approximately 762,000,000 ounces of silver through purchases of newly mined domestic metal, nationalization of domestic stocks, and buying under the silver purchase act. Yet, like the Red Queen, Secretary Morgenthau must keep running at this frantic rate in order to stand still.

Under the terms of the silver purchase act, buying must continue either until silver reaches a market price of $1.29 per ounce or until the monetary value of silver stocks is one-third that of gold holdings. The former goal is too remote to warrant consideration, and the latter is about as far away as it was when the silver-buying program started.

Since passage of the silver purchase act, gold holdings have risen about $2,234,000,000, thus adding some 577,500,000 ounces to the amount of silver required to attain the one-third ratio. Consequently, despite huge additions to silver stocks, it is estimated that the Treasury is still more than 1,000,000,000 ounces short of attaining the ratio set by the law, as compared with the 1,300,000,000 ounces required when the buying program was inaugurated.

Moreover, most of the metal bought is purchased from foreigners who are being enriched at the expense of American taxpayers. The great increase in silver offerings since we forced China off the silver standard is a significant indication of what lies ahead unless the country abandons this insane policy of acquiring a metal that it does not need at prices that bear no relation to its value.

If the Administration must subsidize silver producers, it might at least confine its benefactions to the domestic field and not penalize American citizens in order to enrich speculators all over the world. We cannot undo the damage already done to the monetary systems of silver-using countries. But if there is such a thing as common sense we should suspend buying activities that can no longer be excused on the pretense that we are either helping other countries or aiding any but a selected group of profiteers.

A Flash In Eternity.

Death will always be tragic to those who are immediately touched by it, but the detached philosopher is able to see the Grim Reaper in a wholly beneficent aspect. That point of view was cogently presented last week in an address by Dr. Alexis Carrel, a winner of the Nobel prize in medicine, before the New York Academy of Medicine. His attitude may appear cold and inhumanitarian, but it is nevertheless honest and realistic.

Dr. Carrel scouts the idea that man will ever be able to conquer death, for, he says, "death is an essential characteristic of our self." The average life has been substantially lengthened, and may be further extended. Disease may ultimately be wiped out. Accidents may be reduced. Beyond that, says Dr. Carrel, "death could also be retarded by a rejuvenating operation," which may be within the reach of medicine within the next few centuries. In each case, however, the inexorable forces which destroy the body are merely held in abeyance.

The fear of Dr. Carrel is that the fight against death may "succeed too well." He points out that "the artificial postponement of the death of a large number of individuals would be a far greater calamity than death itself. . . . Death prevents the overcrowding of the earth. If the span of life were suddenly increased to 100 years, civilized countries could not stand the economic weight of populations composed mostly of senescent individuals . . . Death has been the builder of civilization. The weak, the diseased, the fools, were not capable of resisting its attack directly, or of learning how to protect themselves against illness. Through natural selection, the strong and the intelligent persisted, and the great races developed."

It is not necessary to conclude with Dr. Carrel that civilized countries today "are encumbered with those who should be dead." Without carrying his thesis that far, its validity as applied to the continuous emergency and dissolution of human personalities can not easily be challenged. For death is not an "extraneous accident." It is an "indispensable condition of life." To consider it otherwise is none the less self-centered because so natural a reaction.

Dr. Carrel is not optimistic over the possibility of exposing the mysteries of death. His experiments with tissue fragments, which have been kept alive artificially for 24 years, convince him that the cells of which the body is built are "potentially immortal." Whether life terminates with the disintegration of the body or continues in some other state, however, it is but a flash in eternity. And no one who is philosophical enough to view the world as a dynamic and continuing drama would have it otherwise, even if he could.

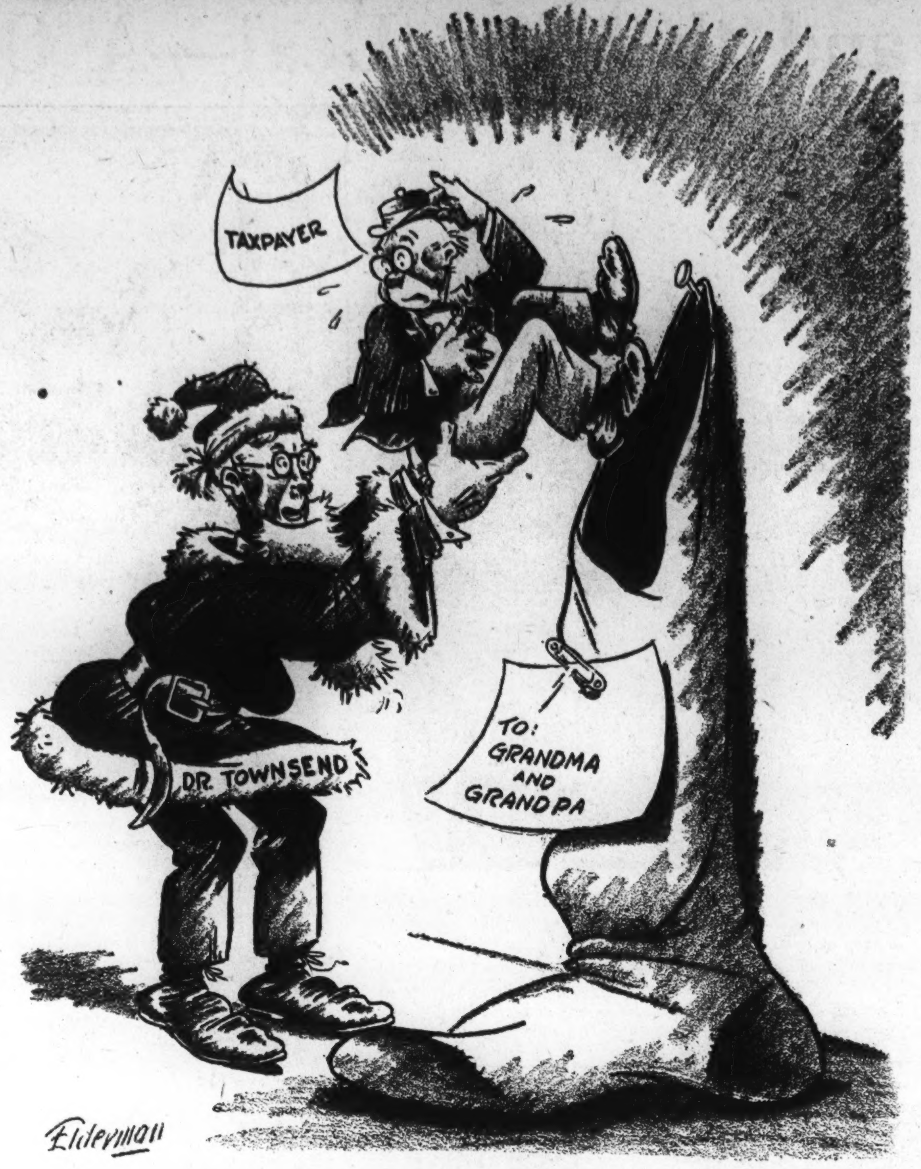
Stereoscope For Scribblers.

As long as there are people in this world, they will be reading books. As long as certain books are being read more than others, there will be people trying to figure out why. And while this question remains as impenetrable as it does now, there will be ample justification for the term "harassed publisher." Looking for the proverbial needle in the haystack is scarcely less fruitful, it seems, than searching for an Open Sesame to the bookbuyer's purse.

Undaunted, nevertheless, Frederick Lewis Allen decided to check over the best-seller lists from 1900 A. D. through 1933 A. A. (Anthony Adverse) up to the present. With tongue in cheek, he presents his findings in last week's issue of The Saturday Review of Literature. If it be true that curiosity is "little more than another name for hope," Mr. Allen must perforce feel that his research yielded little to satisfy either the inquisitive layman or the conscientious writer. At the same time, it would appear that he is unduly modest about his success in whittling a yardstick for measuring literary leanings.

Mr. Allen has discovered, for instance, that for the first five years of this century we were torn between the homely "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" and the more dashing "Alice of Old Vincennes." In 1905 and 1906 we were shaking our heads at the shallowness of the haut monde as portrayed in "The House of Mirth." Quickly tiring of appraising and finding wanting, we passed into a saccharine state. The national tears which flowed for "The Lady of the Decoration" were shamed by the brave philosophy of "Pollyanna." Then came the war books, followed by an interesting preference for history.

After examining Mr. Allen's conclusions, it is easy to understand why he is fearful that actually they connote nothing more than a heterogeneous mass of paradoxes. This is as it should be. Nothing could be more dismal than an arbitrary measuring rod for writers. Lacking this, there is more hope that an author will produce "what he has it in him to produce and can claim very little excuse, except death, for not producing it." And as long as books are conceived in this spirit, there will always be people to read them.



Christmas Gift.

Expatriate

I sorted out the things in my mind that I planned to do, much as a doctor fills his kit with the day's visits in mind. I would need this, and this, and I smiled as the thought occurred to me, and a little whiff of this to make it perfectly painless. I wanted to reassure Marianne the minute I saw her; I wanted her to know by my handclasp that it wasn't going to hurt a bit, not really.

I would be early and pick a table that would keep our faces in the shade. Silly, too, that I didn't want to talk to her, after 10 years, with the bright afternoon sun picking out our thoughts like a spotlight revealing an amateur's nervousness. Silly, too, that I should be here rehearsing what I was going to say to her. I had never bothered much about that when she was the little girl next door. I had plagued her and sent her insulting comic Valentines and let her canary out of its cage. And later . . . but why go over all that again?

It was interesting to speculate on what she would be like now. I could do this as I walked along, admiring in an absent-minded way my reflection as it was given back to me time after time in the absurd shop windows. Thank God, she wouldn't see too much change in me. No paunches, no baldness.

I hoped that I would be able to get some definite idea of what she looked like and what she had on. My wife would ask me that the first thing. "And how was she looking, Alf?" Meaning: Does Marianne in Paris wear berets and hundreds of bangles and smocks? And she might for all I knew. Not just because she was in Paris, but because she wanted to do it. After all she had left Tannertown so that she could have her life to decorate as she chose. At the same time, it was entirely possible that I might be with her for hours and come away with no clear idea of what she wore or how her hair was cut. It was always hard to describe her to those who didn't know her. "She isn't pretty and yet . . . just wait, you'll see what I mean."

* * * *

She was moving rapidly and the low-heeled sandals she wore gave her an odd, childish gait. Her dress was white and all of a piece and she looked like a very young Helen Wills. I thought that if I were an author I would write of Marianne in that manner. And it would probably be pleasing to my readers, but it would irritate my wife in its indefiniteness and it would not be wholly satisfying to me. Perhaps she hadn't really lived in France 10 long years, but had simply ceased to exist from the time I saw her last and now. It seemed impossible that those years had passed for her, moment by moment. It was as if she had simply walked straight from the past to the present and was as untouched by the passage as a pony that jumps from one side of a hoop through to the other side.

I decided at the last minute to wash my hair and dry it carefully and slowly in the sun. That would make me late, I knew, but Alfred could wait. It would give him a man-of-the-world feeling, to be sitting in a sidewalk cafe and waiting for a woman he had not seen since she had chosen to start a new life in an old world. As I dipped my hair into the basin, I had a wild moment of wanting to dye it blue or purple. Then Alfred could tell Tannertown when he went back, and the ladies at the Wednesday Book Review Club could talk about it after they had finished getting the meat out of Gertrude Stein. Also it would make his wife feel very virtuous with her graying locks and reassure her that she was the only woman for Alfred.

I suddenly laughed and the soap ran down in front of my ear like a silver sideburn and into my mouth. Suppose Alfred should expect me to look Frenchy and speak with an accent! "Alfred says he could hardly understand a word she said," the Book Review Club would hear as it cut Hemingway into pieces by a Tannertown pattern. Yet, suppose he told them that I was the same old Marianne. I can see the suspicion mounting all around as if he had told them that the Eiffel Tower looked exactly as it does on postcards. People who go away on long trips are expected to come home with strange tales. Poor Alfred, trying to convince them that Marianne and the Eiffel Tower were doing as well as could be expected.

"Next time," his wife would say to him accusingly, "you've got to take me." Well, at least she wouldn't be with him today and for that I could be thankful. She was one of those women whose conversation was as obvious and useless as a great towel put out especially for company. She would be miserable if she ever met me because she could not actually lift the rug and see the dirt she knew had been swept underneath.

* * * *

He looks older sitting there, and tired. Now he has seen me and is a bit bewildered. I look the way I did when I put up preserves in Tannertown—not dashing and Parisienne as I should. And my hair is wet and curling up and short and he cannot know that I thought of dyeing it purple for him. He feels ill at ease with me because I have not changed. He was sitting there waiting for an expatriate and he was prepared to fence and parry with a female. And I am only Marianne in a white dress. Beyond that he cannot see . . . The Marianne who is an expatriate is entirely lost to him in a childish dress of white . . . He is as embarrassed to be meeting Tannertown in Paris as if he had caught his mother in a short dress . . . I have let him down. He will never be able to reconcile me to his thoughts of me. I'll try not to laugh, Alfred . . .

The Wednesday Book Review Club was breaking up and Thomas Wolfe had been assigned to Mrs. Tuttle for the winter. The ladies put on their hats slowly and hoped that she would leave first so that they could talk over things. It was ridiculous for her to pretend that Alfred had not told her any more than that about Marianne when he returned from Paris. "She looked like the same Marianne. She seemed to be doing fairly well. She asked about all of you and sent you her love. No, she hadn't changed a bit."

Well, maybe Alfred could get by with that at home, but he needn't think he was fooling a soul. Everybody knew that a woman couldn't live in Paris ten years without changing. . . .

She would ask Alfred again at the dinner table about what Marianne had worn. After all, a man's second wife certainly has a right to know all about what happens when her husband runs into his first wife in Paris.

Mexico City.

ON November 20, Mexico celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the beginning of the Revolution against Porfirio Diaz, who had been president (except for a four-year interval, 1880-1884) from 1876 to 1910. Most of the original leaders are dead, among them Francisco and Gustavo Madero, the Vasquez Gomez brothers, Carranza, Zapata, Blanco, and many of those who, like Victoriano Huerta and Felix Diaz, fought against them. Those now in charge of the consummation of the revolution were either very young men at the time or were minor figures in one of the greatest upheavals a western country ever has known. Only time will tell if Mexico has seen the end of revolutions on anywhere near so large a scale as that of 1910.

* * * *

More outstanding than any political holiday is the religious feast of Our Lady of Guadalupe, patron of Mexico, observed by the entire country on December 12. On this date, in 1531, a humble Indian named Juan Diego, beheld an apparition of the Blessed Virgin Mary on the summit of Tepeyac hill, just outside the city. In response to her command, a church was built in her honor and it still stands, although the magnificent new structure at the hill's base now houses the miraculous image of the Virgin, imprinted on Juan Diego's cloak. Thousands upon thousands of Mexicans, rich, poor, young and old, will gather to do honor to the country's patron, when her feast day comes again.

* * * *

Of all the great markets which dot the city of Mexico, Lagunilla is outstanding. Although it does not contain the variety to be found in La Merced and others, there is a hodge-podge attractiveness about it that stirs the collective instinct in anyone who likes to prowl around looking for bargains. Lagunilla features practically every article in which humans are interested, including shoes, magazines, nails, parlor sets, jewelry, stone idols, old coins, objets d'art, etc. A person who knows his business in the collecting lines has marvelous opportunities to pick up real bargains here.

* * * *

In connection with the revolution it is recalled that the lady who is probably its most famous victim is now living in the capital. She is Don Porfirio Diaz's wife, known familiarly in the old days as Dona Carmen. So far as I know, she has given no interviews since her return from Europe, where her husband died in Paris in 1916.

Mexican moments—President Cardenas is reported to have lost about 30 pounds during his recent illness . . . The Second Mexican Congress of History had a successful meeting at Merida, capital of Yucatan . . . Sotries and anecdotes about Pancho Villa still make their appearance in Mexican magazines; scarcely a numer is printed without at least one such article . . . Mexico City is gaining rapidly as a winter resort, with Cuernavaca and other rest spots close at hand . . . Those interested in international trade are watching the effects of the United States-Canada treaty with eager eyes . . . Mexico has many products, particularly in the fruit line, which would be eagerly bought in the United States . . . For example, who wouldn't trade a juicy Manila mango for a luscious Illinois peach?

Ford Farm In Essex

The following dispatch from a special correspondent appeared in the London Observer, issue of November 10, 1935.

THE estate at Great Boreham, near Chelmsford, purchased by Mr. Henry Ford in 1931, and put under crops after careful preparation, has been enlarged of late and now covers more than 2,000 acres. Over 100 workers are in permanent employment, they are paid a higher rate than the minimum of the Wages Board and received a large bonus distribution for last year's work.

The land was brought into good order before it was taken over by "Co-operative Societies," and now this company, which runs the farms pays 4 per cent free of income tax on capital outlay by way of rent. Equipment costs are returnable over a period of 25 years.

The point of special interest to agriculturists is that the estate consisted largely of rough grazing; only after much expensive preliminary work has it become a paying proposition. Quite worthless timber had to be cleared; old hedges were grubbed up, ploughs and harrows worked overtime before the manager, Mr. George Jones, was ready to put his farm-gardening plans into operation.

* * * *

Mr. Jones believes that the salvation of the land lies in the principle of raising crops that demand a minimum of work. He talks of growing work as other men talk of growing crops; he claims that on some fields his costs are 90 per cent wages. Fruit and vegetables grown at Boreham are produced in bulk; there is an intelligence department at work to select best-selling centers; heavy lorry loads make for economical transport.

"London," says Mr. Jones, "has the highest class market in the world; there's still room at the top for almost unlimited vegetables and fruit."

There were twenty-four workers in one field of Brussels sprouts on the morning of my visit, and more would be needed for carting. Asparagus was rising hopefully over a large area, on friendly terms with parsnips. Lettuces as the sands of the seashore for multitude were waiting to be transplanted; there were 1,200 lights in use. Coveys of partridges rose lazily and flew slowly; they dwell in security for game is not molested. Vermin may be kept down, and that is the limit of killing.

"You have to know what land will grow," Mr. Jones remarked; "Great Britain has favored corners for special crops. For example, you cannot match black currants from Norwich, raspberries from Blairgrowrie, parsnips from Devizes, egg plums from Evesham. Among apples you can't beat the Bramley Seedling grown in Hereford, or the Cox's orange pippin raised in Essex. But nobody can tell you why; it's Nature's secret."

I asked Mr. Jones what he thinks land settlement can do in this country.

* * * *

"Properly organized," he said, "and on the principle of growing work, you could employ 150 men on 250 acres of farm garden. Cottage holdings must be near a market if they are to succeed and the family settled on any one of them must follow the lines that apply to the farm garden."

"And if those who establish a settlement don't know how to start?"

"Let them look round the cottage gardens," replied Mr. Jones. "The villager has learned what suits his soil; his father taught him. For large scale settlement you want one fully qualified man for every six newcomers; good pupils will be fit to teach after a year. There's no occasion to stress the need for co-operative buying and selling, or for keeping the land in good heart and not overcropping."

Sir Percival Perry and Sir John Davies, Mr. Ford's representatives in England, can render a good account of their stewardship. Profits for last year, a bad one for market gardening, were well over 2,000 pounds on less than 1,000 acres, nearly £15,000 worth of produce was grown and this sum will be largely exceeded in 1935.

Boiled Dinner.

At a meeting of the Gourmet Society in New York last Sunday the Princess Alexandra Kropotkin stood up and stepped forth to remark that high among the American contributions to the favorite dishes of the world were the New England boiled dinner and the Connecticut clam pie.

The comparison is, of course, to be deplored. To name Connecticut clam pie in the same breath with the New England boiled dinner is like placing the name of the Mayor of Skaneateles beside that of George Washington. For the fame of the pie is strictly circumscribed, local. Even if it is good, Bostonians don't like it. At any rate, it is a stranger to tables of gourmets in these parts. The Rhode Island clambake, on the contrary, is known from one end of New England to the other. In the days of Ward McAllister it was the crowning event of the summer season among the residents of the marble cottages on Bellevue avenue in Newport. That is the one handicap under which the clambake groans—it is a summer confection. The boiled dinner may be enjoyed at all seasons. True, in summer it is a little heating—a dish to be eaten then to an accompaniment of sheer muslins, the gauziest of slacks. But in winter it is a veritable man's provender, hearty, warming, building up resolution to face the worst blizzard of the season.

Library "Excavations" Lead To Rich Finds

Relief Workers Exhume Old Philadelphia Stacks To Retrieve Vast Collection Of Early Americana, Long Forgotten.

By Eugene Pharo.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

Philadelphia.

WHILE expeditions from various American universities have been excavating in Greece and Egypt, a couple of Government alphabetical agencies have been digging under the dust of centuries in the fair, green town of Philadelphia. They have discovered treasures worth, in the aggregate, millions of dollars, that no one knew were there—at least with any exactitude.

The first of them have been discovered in a vast pile of stone on South Broad at Christian street; in a building with huge pillars and vast steps that itself looks like an abandoned Greek or Egyptian monument and that has for years been almost as deserted. Those acquainted with some of the precious, slumbering piles in the Quaker City may recognize it at once as the Ridgway branch of the Library Company of Philadelphia.

The Library Company and its collection of books was started in 1731 by Benjamin Franklin and several other worthies. It served the early Congresses in Philadelphia as their "Congressional Library" loaned books to British officers when they occupied the town during the Revolution, and through the many decades since has been adding to its volumes.

For many years additions, including many now rare and some unique tomes, individually running into thousands of dollars in current collector's evaluations, were put on the shelves in the order in which they were acquired, and without any system of classification.

* * * *

SEVERAL months ago some bright man in Washington, with a strongly developed historical sense, thought of gathering together some unemployed bibliophiles, researchers, cataloguers and typists to see what was in the old institution.

It was assumed that in the stacks of the first subscription library on this continent, located in so historically important a city as Philadelphia, and directed for so long by men who had made much of the city's and country's history, an unusually rich treasure of Americana would be uncovered.

So about nine months ago 25 L. W. D. workers were put on the job, following the consent of the directors. Investigators abstracted all the American items they came across—and they found some that were hidden, or lost, in old covers that gave no outward indication of their identity. These they passed to cataloguers, and when the cataloguers were through with their notations, a corps of typists made five cards for each book—one for the Ridgway branch, one for the Congressional Library (which now and then sends to Philadelphia for some volume it does not itself possess), one for the State Library, one for the main Library Company, and one for a union catalogue of Americana that it is expected to build up through a similar search of all the important libraries in Philadelphia.

* * * *

SOME of the discoveries were described to me recently by John E. Govan, who is actively in charge of the Ridgway branch. The interview was held, however, in the office of the main company building at Locust and Juniper streets, of which he is in charge during the vacation of Austin K. Gray, librarian for the company.

It was difficult at times to pay attention to descriptions of books that were not in sight, because of the antiquity of the furnishings about us. There was, for instance, the grandfather's clock made for William Penn at Chester, and used by him in America. In order to check up one point, Mr. Govan took out of an old safe the original minute book of the company, that contained the records penned there by Francis Hopkinson, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence; by Benjamin Franklin, and by others, to list whose names would be like starting to rewrite colonial history in Philadelphia.

Evidence of this had been run across as he was looking up the exact notations as to the company's providing the first Congressional Library. At last he found it, a motion of August 31, 1774, "that the librarian furnish the gentlemen who are sent to meet in Congress in this city with such books as they may have occasion for during their sitting, taking a receipt for them." Another notation showed extension of the same courtesy in January, 1791, for which thanks were forwarded to the directors by order of President Washington.

But to return to our excavations. It is probable that only learned collectors could appreciate to the full the volumes, published between 1532 and 1700, that have been discovered by the Government workers. (They have not got past 1700 yet.) Author of the first tome listed was Ferdinand Cortes. Further down the list is a very rare work by Gonzao Hernandez de Oviedo. "Historia Natural y General de las Indias Islase e Tierra Firme del May Occeano," printed at Seville in 1535, and sporting one of the only moderately long titles.

Some of the rarer items are Richard Eden's "The Decades of the Newe Worlde," London, 1555; William Strachey's, "For the Colony in Virginea Britannia, Lawes Divine, Morall and Martiall" (in the $30,000 valuation class), printed in London in 1612; George Mourt's "Journals of the beginning and proceedings of the English Plantation at Plimoth, in New England," London, 1622; John Smith's "The Generall Historie of Virginia, New-England and the Summer Isles," London, 1624; Roger Williams, "A Key into the Language of America," London, 1643.

Library Company's First Home.

SKIPPING to later dates, and hitting upon books printed in America, we come upon the first of many works upon which investigation has barely been started. The very earlist listed so far is John Eliot's "Mamvsse Wunneetupanatamwe Up-Biblum God nanesswe Nukkone Testament, kah wonk Wuska Testament," a Bible in the Indian tongue printed at Cambridge, Mass., in 1663. Then there are Nathaniel Morton's "New-England's Memoriall," Cambridge, 1669; Increase Mather's "An Account of the Remarkable Providence in New England," Boston, 1684; D. Leeds, "An Almanack For the Year of Christian Account 1687," Philadelphia, 1686; a unique and very valuable volume by Richard Frame, "A Short Description of Pennsilvania," Philadelphia, 1692, and a variety of others there is no space to mention.

Items No. 285 and 286 in the available list of 294 make an interesting conclusion. One, printed in Philadelphia in 1699, is Jonathan Dickenson's "God's Protecting Providence Man's Surest Help and Defence;" the other, printed in London in the same year, is Alexande Olivier Exquemelin's "The History of the Bucaniers of America."

Among The Magazines

Discovery of two kinds of ice, one of them hotter than boiling water, a number of previously unknown forms of metals and other substances and a change in the properties of soft graphite so that it temporarily becomes diamond-like and capable of scratching glass-hard steel was announced at Harvard University by Percy W. Bridgman, as a result of recent high pressure research.

A recent issue of Science News Letter, a weekly summary of current science, relates that the discoveries were made with the aid of radically new apparatus which enabled Dr. Bridgman to conduct routine experiments at a pressure of 50,000 atmospheres and upon occasion to reach the tremendous pressure of 1,000,000 pounds to the square inch or 70,000 times the ordinary pressure of the atmosphere.

"Formerly routine tests were confined to about 12,000 atmospheres and the absolute maximum was about 40,000 atmospheres," the article continues, "at which point the heavy steel sides of his confinement chamber bulged like lead and made measurements impossible.

"At these terrific new pressures, higher than scientists have ever been able to reach before, Dr. Bridgman has been able to force atoms and molecules of some substances to take up permanently new positions, thus creating new forms of matter previously unknown to science.

"In addition to the new apparatus for these pressures, Dr. Bridgman has also used a new tool for the creation of terrific stresses to 'twist' the various atoms and molecules into their new positions, which has cast new light on the so-called shearing laws of solid matter. These unusual pressing and twisting tools are believed to approximate much more nearly than has been done before the tremendous pressures and strains hundreds of miles below the surface of the earth.

"A new kind of hot ice was described by Prof. Bridgman. 'Previously five kinds of ice were known,' he said. 'One of these may be heated to a temperature too hot to bear the hand if enough pressure is applied to prevent it from melting. The lowest pressure that would suffice to cause this previously known hot ice to appear was about 6,000 atmospheres.

"'It is now found that there is still another variety of "cold ice," and also a new "hot ice." The old hot ice can be forced to change into the new hot ice if a pressure of about 25,000 atmospheres is applied to it. This new ice is hotter than boiling water when it melts, and it may be made to melt at much higher temperatures merely by increasing the pressure.'"

Favors Italy

Correspondent Decries Britain's Influence at Geneva.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In the controversy between Great Britain and Italy, for such it is, because the League is merely a tool of the British government, my sympathies have been with Italy from the beginning. The actions of the League in this matter have been about the greatest opera bouffe that was ever staged.

Why should the nations through the League pick on Italy after sitting by supinely and permitting Japan without protest to violate, contrary to her treaty obligations, the administrative and territorial integrity of China? Japan flouted the League and repudiated the Nine-Power Treaty and the Kellogg-Briand Pact to which she was a signatory when she took over Manchuria and began her policy of absorbing the greater part of northern China. The answer is simple. Great Britain and France, who control the League, didn't dare antagonize Japan for fear they would have a first-class war on their hands at a time when their internal conditions made it prudent to ignore the situation.

The action of Japan and Italy in the instant cases are parallel and are justified, if at all, upon the ground of national necessity, and acquiescence in the one case makes opposition in the other without warrant.

Territorial expansion is just as necessary to Italy as it is to Japan. When England and France were grabbing territory all over the world and taking on the "white man's burden" over the backward races of the earth Italy was without unity and economic and military strength and could, therefore take no part in the land grabbing of that time, which was considered an ethical duty. But the situation is now different. Italy is now a united and powerful nation. She is overpopulated and is without raw materials. Expansion is just as indispensable to her as it is to Japan, and far more so than it ever was to England or France. Ethiopia is the only country in the world open to her, the rest having been preempted by Great Britain, France and some of the lesser powers. It is a country occupied by barbarous and savage tribes, where slavery is practiced, who haven't the means, the intelligence, or the incentive to develop its resources and in consequence this immense territory is of no value to the world and will remain a land of degradation and benightedness forever unless and until it is taken over by a people like the Italians.

Now what are the underlying reasons for the League's opposition to this venture of Italy? A little knowledge of geography and history gives us the answer. It is all inspired by Great Britain, who cares not a tuppence for the Ethiopians per se, but does not relish the prospect of a strong power occupying a country along side of Egypt, and the Suez Canal which is her line of communication with her Far Eastern possessions.

France is being dragged against her will into the support of Britain for fear of Germany and the necessity of British support against Germany in the approaching European war—a war which in my judgment the action of Britain is doing much to promote and hasten. Instead of the League trying to thwart the Ethiopian venture of Mussolini it should be incouraged as being in the interest of humanity and of the economic benefit of the world at large.

It seems to me that our so-called policy of neutrality and of practically joining in sanctions against Italy is the quintessence of stupidity, and is simply playing the game of Great Britain. It involves the abandonment by us of a policy we have heretofore insisted upon and fought for, namely "freedom of the seas." It has already placed us in the position of being engaged in an economic war upon Italy, which may in time develop into actual war with her, or will at least be the means of drawing us into the next European war that now seems unavoidable sooner or later.

In fact, when the League, at the direction of Great Britain, puts into operation its sanctions against Italy, the 52 nations that have voted for sanctions will be at economic war with Italy, and to be consistent we should pursue a policy of strict neutrality toward all of them, thus depriving ourselves of practically all of our foreign trade. It seems to me that it is about time that our State Department should stop being an annex of the British foreign office to help pull British chestnuts out of the fire, and adopt and follow a strictly American policy with due regard for the best interests of our own Nation, and to insist upon our rights regardless of the protests of other nations, whose actions are always based upon their own enlightened self-interest.

The Silver Collapse.

Journal of Commerce (Financial)—"Tremendous amounts of silver have been hoarded in China by individuals and business enterprises over a long period of years. Until 1933, in fact, China was consistently a net importer of silver. Even if the Chinese government decree nationalizing silver stocks is only partially enforced, therefore, a huge supply of the white metal would be available for sale by the government. Having abandoned the silver standard and adopted a managed currency, this metal would be of little use to the Chinese banking authorities, and could be sold without inconvenience to them provided the world market will absorb the offerings. In the meanwhile, the speculative position in silver built up under the encouragement of the American buying program is furnishing another source of heavy liquidation."

Hartford Courant (Republican)—"One reason that has been offered for the Treasury's withdrawal has been its desire to 'shake out' the speculators. But the Treasury is not supposed to be interested in who makes profits from its silver purchases. . . . Another reason that has been suggested is that the Treasury wants to buy silver at a lower price than it is now paying. . . . A third, and more ingenious suggestion is the unwillingness of the Treasury to subsidize the stabilization funds that have been set up to protect the Shanghai and the Hongkong dollars, both of which funds are financed by the sale of silver. But whatever the reason for the withdrawal of the Treasury from the world market, the result of that action indicates how artificial is the world price that has been supported by the Treasury's purchases and at what a cost that part of the silver program that has been completed has been accomplished."

New York Times (Independent Democratic)—"The events of the last few days come as a sharp reminder that the longer the present policy continues, the larger will be our useless stocks of an unneeded metal, the wider will be the spread between its real value and the price the Treasury has paid for it, and the greater will be the risks of widespread unsettlement and confusion when our purchases are discontinued. For these reasons it is high time to repeal the act of 1934 and put an end to the fiasco."

New York Herald-Tribune (Republican)—"We cannot refrain from the belief that what is happening now is a repetition of that perhaps apocryphal, but none the less characteristic, story of the meeting of the New Deal financial authorities at the time of the establishment of the so-called stabilization fund. One of the groups laid great stress on secrecy in respect to the operation of the fund. 'It is very important,' he cautioned, 'that we don't let London know what we are doing.' At this point a member of the conference, who was considerably less than enthusiastic about the enterprise, interjected a rather tart note into the conversation. 'It's a darned sight more important,' he is reported to have observed dryly, 'that we don't let London know that we don't know what we're doing.'"

Richmond Times-Dispatch (Democratic)—"One of the major causes of the depression from which we are now emerging was the competition between nations in the price of money. If another competition of the same sort grows out of the present situation in the silver market, it may bring on an irresistible demand for stabilization. We hope there will be an attempt at stabilization, irrespective of whether a money war develops. In any case, it would seem the part of wisdom for the United States Government to relax its silver purchasing operations, in view of the effects which those operations are having in other countries. It would be neither legal nor wise for it to abandon those purchases abruptly, but a gradual tapering off would seem in order."

Excerpts From Our Letters

Religious Liberty.

The question at issue is whether the government of Mexico is denying religious liberty to its people. Secretary of the Interior Gonzales has recently declared that complete religious freedom is impossible in Mexico. Why impossible? If the Mexican government makes it impossible, is not that religious persecution of some sort?—John J. O'Connor, Washington.

The Patent Pillars.

Mr. Charles Planck offers a very good suggestion as to the future use of the large stone pillars to be removed from the site of the old Patent Office. As he sees it, labor unions (no doubt) would like to honor their special benefactors in that way. Hardly! For as labor sees it, those inventive wizards are mostly responsible for our present social and economic ills. The cotton-picking machine will gradually displace more than 300,000 men and women workers.—F. V., Washington.

Debt of Gratitude.

Every civilized nation on this globe is under a heavy debt of gratitude to the Jews for their marvelous contributions to the uplift of mankind and to the civilization of the earth. Their rights as free citizens in Germany must be restored and adequately safeguarded and protected. — Wallace Kimball, Washington.

"Some Wars Are Holy"

There was a time when we Americans were not afraid to fight the oppressor. Now, in our revolt against war, we condemn all war, forgetting that some wars are holy. Even if England had no interests in Africa, she would still attempt to check Mussolini because he represents fascism, a force more powerful and more deadly than communism. Unless it is checked and broken, now that it has grown to power and wants to spread abroad, it will engulf the world in a greater tragedy than the Middle Ages saw when Islam sought to spread over Europe.—Peter the Hermit, Washington.

Reminder To Mr. Hoover

It will be well for Mr. Hoover to remember that before he signed the Hawley-Smoot tariff bill be was warned by over 1,000 prominent economists in a signed statement that the passage of the iniquitous bill of special privilege would be sure to bring on the business depression which followed and which President Roosevelt has failed to cure in the right way. That Mr. Hoover condemns the partial freedom of trade with Canada indicates that he has learned nothing in the science of political economy since he left the White House.—Henry Ware Allen, Wichita, Kans.

In Morehead City

Surely when the PWA ocean terminal project at Morehead City, N. C., is ready for dedication, it would be a nice compliment to Hitler's Nazi Germany which provides the steel to invite Der Fuehrer to attend the celebration. If the American flag and arms of the State of North Carolina are to be decoratively used in connection with the ceremonies, let us not fail to see to it that the swastika emblem of the Nazis ist uber alles.—Henry D. Baker, Durham, N. C.

Confidence and Business.

It has been said that with confidence there is enough money in the United States to run the world, but that without confidence there is not enough money in the world to keep the country going. To put it another way, probably 75 per cent or more of our business is carried on on the basis of our faith in the demand for goods, reliance on the belief in continued demand and intention of people to buy and pay.—Maury H. Brown, Hyattsville.

Opposition To Bible

Now that Christian churches are celebrating the 400th anniversary of the English Bible, it is interesting to recall that the bishops of England did their utmost to prevent the importation of the New Testament. The world has moved quite a bit during 400 years, and millions of copies of Holy Writ are being circulated yearly by the great Bible societies.—John N. Quinn, Washington.

President's Chagrin

Consistency of Standley Appointment Queried By Veteran.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Very much to the point, like most of The Post's incisive and intelligent comment on questions relating to foreign affairs, is your editorial of December 8 regarding the President's "apology" to the Federal Council of Churches, evoked by that organization's protest, made through the Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Sizoo and Dr. Samuel McCrea Calvert, against Navy Department charges that the churches' stand against augmentation of a costly super-preparedness program is "communistic."

But is not Mr. Roosevelt's reported "chagrin" about these official "communistic" charges against the churches somewhat belated, when the facts upon which their protest apparently was based were fully brought to public attention three months ago by Representative Maury Maverick of Texas? Without any imposition of checks or evidences of Presidential reprobation for the continued platform activities of the ranking officer of the Navy, Admiral W. H. Standley, chief of naval operations, meanwhile has busied himself baiting and bulldozing the churches and other civic organizations and charging that their stand for naval reduction is "communistic" and "subversive."

And what are the Federal Council of Churches and other like-minded civic organizations to infer is the real measure of the President's reported "chagrin" and regret about such proscriptive activities in governmental circles when Admiral Standley, the most conspicuous recent official baiter of those who have presumed to express sentiment for naval reduction is, of all persons, picked by the President to be a leading representative and spokesman for our Government at the London naval conference that is being held ostensibly for the purpose of furthering the cause of naval reduction and limitation?

Here we are, represented at this conference, through the President's choice of negotiators, by the high naval officer who has been going around telling such groups as the Military Order of the World War that they must whip up an active and united opposition to combat the naval reduction sentiment of the churches, the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. as "subversive" and under "control" of "the communist group."

Does distribution from the Navy Department of the text of one of these typical speeches that Admiral Standley delivered at Philadelphia September 17 carrying these charges indicate that the department officially disapproved this sort of malignant aspersion against groups whose good citizenship is irreproachable and whose only apparent offense lies in being unable, considering our present geographic and political situation, to see eye to eye with the professional militarists.? For it is they who have brought about a peacetime super-preparedness program that is costing $1,000,000,000 a year—or a third again as much as the annual military and naval appropriations which Lincoln's Administration required to prosecute from 1861 to 1865, the longest and severest war in which the Nation ever engaged.

Since no administration in our whole peacetime history has shown a fuller disposition to let itself be led by the professional military clique, the fears of professional militarists that the Roosevelt Administration will be influenced by sentiment of the churches or others against the next Congress augmenting the billion-dollar-a-year preparedness program, as seems to be the present prospect, appear idle enough. But official attempts to stifle expression of honest dissent by smearing it as "subversive" and "communistic" savor of hysterical intolerance in a democratic land.

Subsequent to the President's reported expressions of "chagrin" at such demonstrations appears this week the annual report of his Secretary of War with a passage directed against those who fail to see that the R. O. T. C. has a necessarily legitimate place in the general educational program. "Seditious propaganda" is the term Secretary Dern uses in this connection. Whether the attitude of R. O. T. C. critics is misguided or not, imputation that their attitude is "seditious" tends toward a much broadened definition of "sedition" in time of peace, unless the constitutional guarantees of the first amendment have become a dead letter. The last time such peace-time definitions of "sedition" were attempted to be applied, in the administration of President John Adams, the popular reaction was disastrous to the administration and the political party involved.

Politics Will Decide London Naval Issues

Economic Strength Of U. S., Together With Natural Bond With British, Must Calm Japan, France and Italy At Fleet Discussions.

By Livingston Hartley,

Special Correspondence of The Post.

DESPITE talk of tonnage, naval categories and quantitative and qualitative limitation, there is much reason to believe that political rather than technical consideration will ultimately decide the success or failure of the Naval Conference at London.

Italian aggression in Africa, the opening of a new phase in the progressive Japanese domination of China and the darkening cloud which German rearmament casts over the future of Europe, may all be expected to make political solutions of naval problems a more indispensable element in success than in 1922 or 1930.

Since no disarmament conference has ever met at a less auspicious time in post-war history, there is a real possibility that this conference will end in total failure. In order to visualize how this disquieting prospect may push certain powers in the direction of agreement, it is necessary to examine how the different participants would be affected by a complete collapse of the conference.

If the worst should happen, the United States has the financial and economic strength to outbuild any nation on earth. We should be able to maintain parity with the British Empire, no matter how great a tonnage unfavorable developments in the North Sea, the Mediterranean and the Pacific might cause the British Government to lay down. Since our real naval problem lies in the Pacific, we could, if it were desirable, outbuild Japan far beyond the existing ratio of 5-3. Furthermore, the expiration of the Washington Treaty on December 31, 1936, would permit us to fortify our bases west of Hawaii and in the Aleutian Islands, and thereby improve our relative strategic position in the Pacific.

Foreign Office In London.

GREAT Britain is now in the forefront of world recovery, having regained a greater degree of normal prosperity than any other great power. If it were essential to her safety, Great Britain could afford to go full steam ahead in naval expansion. When the Washington Treaty expired, the British would be at liberty to fortify Hongkong and other bases in the Far East. As any good atlas will show, the creation of modern British and American naval bases in the Western Pacific could but adversely affect the strategic position of Japan their offensive value would, in fact, grow greater every year, since Japanese cities are peculiarly vulnerable to modern aerial warfare.

Since the principle of parity between the United States and Great Britain has been accepted for 14 years, and since the Atlantic does not furnish the primary naval problem of either, there seems no reason to expect that expansion of either the American or the British fleet would create mutual friction. Both are "status quo" powers with no wish to expand, and both are linked together by ties of incalculable value, such as common language and traditions, commerce that can be measured in billions, democratic institutions, and the position of Canada. Furthermore, recent event in the Far East have served to indicate that the interests of each are benefited rather than harmed by the naval power of the other.

When we turn to the other great powers, we see that none of them have a comparable capacity to bear the burdens of a race in naval construction. Japan is already spending over 46 per cent of her budget on armaments, and her expansion into Manchuria and China has proved an additional drain on her shaky financial structure. France, near the end of the recovery procession, is maintaining the franc only by the greatest efforts. Italy is being bled white by the burden of an overseas campaign and by financial and economic sanctions. Germany is already lowering her standard of living in an attempt to build and equip her new army. And all these nations are faced with the necessity of maintaining military establishments of half a million men or more in addition to their navies.

* * * *

ALTOGETHER, it seems clear that if the conference should fail completely, the United States and Great Britain could, if they desired, improve their naval positions relative to the other sea powers. It is these other powers; therefore, whose interests most demand sacrifices, either of political aims or tonnage, in order to reach agreement.

The Japanese delegation, for example, is in a very difficult position. Japan now bears the heavy responsibility of denouncing the Washington and London Treaties. Even as the conference meets, Japan is going ahead with her project to control China, and intimating at the same time that the Nine-Power Treaty of Washington is not applicable to modern conditions. Japanese expansion in the Far East is a direct threat to large British investments and trade and a smaller threat to similar interests of the United States; it is also a potential threat to the future of the Anglo-Saxon peoples in the Pacific, ourselves, the Canadians, the Australians and the New Zealanders.

If Japan refuses all compromise, the disappearance of the naval treaties will damage her interests more than those of the United States or the British Empire. She may then in the near future find herself with a smaller naval ratio than she has today, threatened by newly fortified bases in a way that she is not today, and in a position where her military expansion into Asia might be stopped by concerted political and economic action, based on the League of Nations Covenant, the Kellogg Pact or the Nine-Power Treaty.

* * * *

SOME Japanese compromise would appear to be necessary if the above situation is to be avoided. Such a compromise might be found in political guarantees regarding China, a limitation of new naval construction or a combination of both. Our own position on Pacific questions at London is a great deal stronger, requiring primarily that we sit tight and be careful what we sign.

The European situation Great Britain must face is more complex. Germany has been accorded 35 per cent of British naval strength, France wants more than Germany, and Italy wants as much as France. As simple arithmetic shows, it is most unlikely that Great Britain can obtain by agreement a tonnage greater than these three powers together. She might outbuild all three of them under present financial conditions, but these conditions will not endure indefinitely.

British naval aims in Europe are closely parallel to French, both seeking a definite superiority over all potential enemies in the North Sea and the Mediterranean. Due to the present maritime ambitions of Germany and Italy, these parallel aims cannot be attained solely by means of tonnage poker between admiralties. Some political solution of the European naval problem is necessary.

* * * *

THE British public has begun to realize in recent months a fact long apparent to the Foreign Office and the Quai d'Orsay, namely, that geography and the rapidly increasing power of the airplane have made France and Britain mutually dependent in Europe. A defensive agreement between France and Great Britain on naval co-operation, which might be based on the League of Nations Covenant, would afford each nation the mari-

Magnolias In Snow.

Shine faithful in their living green
Waiting the spotless flower.

Outmode.

I have taken my dreams together and stitched them into a pattern—
Not artistically beautiful, perhaps, but rarer than roses, it seems—
Some of the fabrics like rainbow-dust, and others drab and slattern,
But each was woven with the love-deft hands of the weaver of idle dreams.

Then I fashioned a garment, slashed with blood, and adorned it here and there
With pearls of Faith and rubies of Hope and Love, the priceless stone—
O cold before the winds of the world my soul stood stark and bare,
But why do my brethren stare so queerly when I put my garment on?

Modern Architect

Karl Schriftgiesser

HUGH MORRISON'S biography of Louis Sullivan, whom he calls the prophet of modern architecture, is a labor of love written by an intelligent and critically minded young man. Into it has gone an inordinate amount of research, patience, but not much good writing. It tells, straightforwardly, the life story of a great genius, a lonely man who fought in Phillistia for certain ideals, who suffered from his battles, and died neglected and even hated by the world he had tried to make a better place to live in. It is a story of romance and tragedy and sometimes it is bitter, but even to one who knows nothing about Sullivan and almost as little about the meaning of architecture, this biography should make fascinating reading, for it is the story of as great an American as Henry Adams.

Louis Sullivan for years rated scarcely a footnote in the histories of architecture. When he died, 11 years ago, his passing was wept only by a small group of friends. In that interim, thanks mainly to such diverse individuals as Mr. Lewis Mumford, Mr. Claude Bragdon, Mr. Fiske Kimball, and Mr. T. E. Tallmadge (to name only his more understanding critics), the name of Louis Henry Sullivan has become better known. His own "Autobiography of an Idea," still a much-neglected book, has found a wider audience; within a few months his once-famous "Kindergarten Chats" have been republished; and among both laymen and artists his name has become a sort of symbol of "Modernism" in architecture.

* * * *

BUT Louis Sullivan was far more than a modernist. He was one of those extremely rare individuals who conceived of his chosen art as something neither borrowed from the past nor projected into an un-understandable future. Never a classicist nor a humanist, above all, never a copyist, he worked on the only tenable theory for any kind of creative worker. He thought of architecture as something continually growing, as something extremely vital, as a valuable part of the actual world around him. Thus his technical theories are eternally valuable, for they were not "new" but revitalized theories similar, philosophically at least, to those held at any age when architecture was "great."

It is perhaps a little unfortunate that Mr. Morrison happens to be a professor of art and archeology at Dartmouth, for his interests naturally lie mostly with Sullivan's work and his biography woefully neglects several important psychological aspects of Sullivan's life. But in Sullivan's case his life was his work, of course, and for what Mr. Morrison has given us we should be grateful. Practically every one of Sullivan's buildings is represented by a photograph, no mean task on the author's part. There are some technical errors in the book and many of judgment, I think, but none of sufficient importance to be intruded upon a review not intended for students of Sullivan. On the whole his book is a competent record, although, personally, I cannot help feeling that it might have been done better by a more imaginative pen. To one who has made any study of Sullivan's life, as I happen to have done, the sources are obvious and sometimes suspect. The great value of this work is neither its criticism nor its understanding, but a wholly technical attempt to collate Sullivan's works.

SULLIVAN was the son of an Irish dancing master and a Swiss mother. He was born in Boston, attending public school there, and in the nearby country, and at the age of 16 attended the Institute of Technology. He went to Chicago right after the disastrous fire, worked in an architect's office there, and then sought further instruction at the Ecole des Beaux Arts in Paris. In Boston, Chicago and Paris Sullivan was a rebel, who insisted upon going beyond the available instruction, questing alone into the mysteries of architecture, refusing to be bound by staid models.

When he was 24 he was again in Chicago. As partner of Dankmar Adler (for the supplementary sketch of Adler architectural students will be thankful) he designed the famous Chicago Auditorium, which is the largest building ever to be set on floating piles. Mr. Morrison, I think, takes Adler too much for granted; like all previous writers Adler's teaching of Sullivan and his actual part in Sullivan's work is not traced completely. Its building was a problem not alone for the ground on which it was built because of its contents, which include a recital hall, a theater, office and an hotel. In it Sullivan brought his famous theory into play; that form follows, or should follow, function, but it was in St. Louis's famous Wainwright Building that we find Sullivan's great monument.

THIS was built in 1890. It is not the first skyscraper, as some have said, but it surely is the first skyscraper into which imagination and skill had an equal part. It was the first real skyscraper, the first American building, in that it was treated by Sullivan for what it really was: an office building soaring into the sky. In his "Autobiography of an Idea" Sullivan himself has described it best: " . . . every inch a proud and soaring thing, rising in sheer exultation . . . a unit without a single dissenting line." In 1899 Sullivan again achieved greatness with the Carson Pirie Scott department store in Chicago's Loop, this too a proud and soaring thing of beauty.

Sullivan designed more than 100 buildings. Few were failures. All were honest. Each was an effort on Sullivan's part to find the law of architecture which would admit of no exceptions. Most of them were done when he was in partnership with Adler. The rest of his life after the dissolution of the partnership was one of semi-poverty and bitterness, study and writing. Sullivan died just after writing his "Autobiography," which Charles Harris Whitaker, editor then of the American Institute of Architects, published. It is a great book, filled with a real part of America, ecstatic and despairing, and never dull.

While this book by Mr. Morrison has not been designed for popular consumption, it is a book which anyone interested in American culture cannot afford to miss. Better than any other book I know it shows, through Sullivan's life and work, what is good and what is bad about our architecture. Reading it, one can understand fully the atrocities of building which litter Washington, why they are, why they should not be. But Sullivan, or at least what Sullivan stood for, deserves even a better book than Mr. Morrison has given us. It deserves a book from the pen of one willing and able to go beyond Sullivan, into his mind, and back out again through his writings. There is so much about Sullivan that Mr. Morrison thought unimportant and so has neglected, and which ought to be unearthed, in order to make, as his biography should be, a story of American genius in all its glory and tragedy, that it is too bad Mr. Morrison has failed to do this.

Moods of Poetry

Three Collections of Verse Exhibit the Latest Tidings From Pegasus.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

SINCE 1936 marks the centennial celebration of the Lone Star State, one of the most appropriately entitled books recently to come from Texas is "South Wind Calling," a first volume of choice selections by Marie Barton, whose name is known to readers of numerous literary and religious magazines, as well as many newspapers.

In keeping with her title, Miss Barton has sprinkled liberally through her volume poems about Texas—the bluebonnets, Indian paintbrush, the Alamo, Goliad, San Jacinto, the rose window in San Jose Mission in San Antonio.

Recognizing the beauty of the commonplace, she has also written of the kettle's song, grey roofs, a four-leaf clover and the bluebird's wing with as much enthusiasm, as much sincerity as she employs in describing the Sequoias, Milton's influence and the work of "a great teacher." She is at her best in the "bird and flower poems;" at her worst (which is not bad), in subjects centered around historical themes.

Without attempting any of the experimental forms, without essaying subjects or meters that have found favor with many modern poets, she has written a book every poetry lover should read and reread. Her work is characterized by delicate lines and poignant images, by impressive lyric notes that re-echo in the reader's mind long after the book is finished; by an acute imaginative penetration and by descriptive passages that are both vivid and evocative.

Among the selections that particularly pleased this reviewer were: "Cathedrals of Dawn," "Gates," "Dream Under Wind," "Vikings of the Sky," "Pipes of Pan," "Riders of the Sea," (revealing the poet's power of imagery), "Autumn" (showing her sensitivity to nature), and "Bugler," which deserves a wide audience on numerous accounts, and particularly for the reference to a redbird as a "Crimson-crested cavalier."

When two poets—man and wife—have been acclaimed far and wide as the "Brownings of America," a new book from their pens causes verse enthusiasts everywhere to sit up and take notice. That's what readers did, with delight, a few years ago when Lucia Trent and Ralph Cheyney, each a poet and critic in his own right, decided to pool their talents and combine forces in a volume called "Dreamer's House."

Later, when "More Power to Poets," a scintillating book of essays appeared, the "Brownings" increased their already notable number of readers. Their latest book, "Sierra Dreamer's House," should do as much for these poets as anything they have written so far. Dedicated to "You who visit Dreamers' House, whether on mountain trail or printed page," this collection is made up of 65 poems written in a variety of forms, treating a variety of subjects. It will be read and enjoyed by all who know Lucia Trent and Ralph Cheyney, and deserves to attract the attention of every poetry lover.

In Bertha Gerneaux Woods' fourth collection of verse she has included poems that have appeared the past four years in a score of periodicals, most of which are religious. Each selection in "The Little Gate" is a monument to the poet's love and sympathy for nature and man, as well as her deep reverence for the Power above man. The optimistic note in her lines is particularly refreshing at this time when so many poets are prone to look past the hopeful phases of life in their effort to analyze the darker side of living and dying.

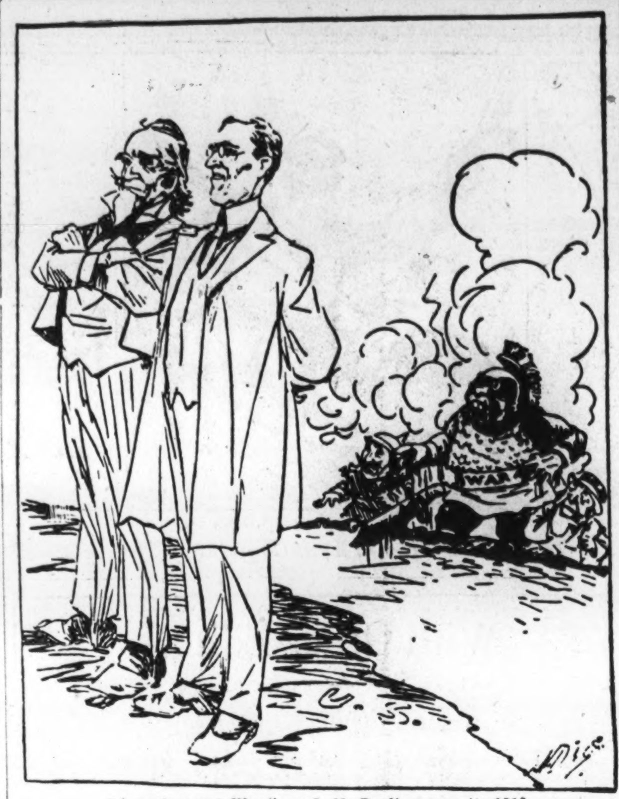
The Blind Alley of Neutrality

Ray Stannard Baker's Biography of Wilson Reaches 1914-1915.

Problems of the Time Closely Parallel the Crisis of Today.

By Felix Morley.



"America and War," as J. N. Darling saw it; 1915.

IT IS hard to imagine a fragment of biography more pertinent to the problems of the day than the fifth volume of Ray Stannard Baker's life of Woodraw Wilson. Covering the period from the outbreak of the World War to the dismissal of Dr. Dumba, the Austrian Ambassador, it tells the story of America's losing struggle for neutrality. This section of the definitive biography of the wartime President closes 16 months before the United States formerly declared belligerency. But by the end of 1915, as Mr. Baker points out, peparations for participation in the war had begun to replace the endeavor to stay out.

At the present moment there is crystallizing a powerful effort to establish a mandatory American neutrality policy by a system of prearranged embargoes, applicable to both or all belligerents in any future war. In essentials this means a fettering of executive freedom by the establishment of rigid rules depriving the President and the Department of State of any real discretion in the conduct of foreign relations during the emergency visualized. So far-reaching a change in traditional policy emphasizes the importance of the record of 1914-1915, which Mr. Baker now discloses in minute detail And close study of that record goes far to answer the question of whether any change of governmental procedure can of itself insure for the future the neutrality which we failed to preserve in the last great war.

So far as the individuals in command were factors, the odds in 1914 were all in favor of successful neutrality. No Secretary of State could be more pacific, more emotionally anxious to keep America out of war, than was William Jennings Bryan. No President could be more objective in his viewpoint, more intellectually competent to resist propaganda forces of every kind, than was Woodrow Wilson. From the pacifist viewpoint Wilson and Bryan were the perfect leaders. We have only to recall that the former said, three days after the sinking of the Lusitania, that "there is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight." We have only to remember that Mr. Bryan resigned, a month later, because he regarded the second—and very moderate—Lusitania note as unfair "to the cause which is nearest my heart, namely, the prevention of war."

Whatever may be said of the pro-British leanings of Ambassador Page, or the distinctly inept meanderings of Col. House—and Mr. Baker is unsparing in his criticisms of both these advisers—the fact remains that the unswerving direction of policy was to keep America at peace—almost at any price. Nor was that ambition in any way affected by the resignation of Mr. Bryan, which did not lessen the effort for strict neutrality, but rather recorded the overwhelming difficulties in its path. Why, then, did that determined effort collapse?

There will be many who will seek the answer in the failure of the Administration to apply embargoes on the sale of war materials as soon as the emergency arose. Advance action in this direction is, of course, what is sought by the neutrality legislation of last August, and the much more comprehensive legislation contemplated for the forthcoming session of Congress.

Already there has been a gain in this field since Lansing informed President Wilson, on December 9, 1914, that: "There is no power in the Executive to prevent the sale of ammunition to the belligerents. Trade in munitions of war has never been restricted by international law or by municipal statute." But now, as then, the deeper question of embargoes on munitions in the broad sense of the word has never been squarely faced. It will be interesting to see how Senators from the cotton States will face it, using that war material as a single illustration, when Congress reconvenes.

* * * *

In view of the furor about the machinations of international bankers there is particular interest in Mr. Baker's record of the neutrality policy with regard to loans to belligerents. The firm of Morgan raised the question with the Department of State as soon as hostilities started. The precedents were all in favor of such loans, which would not have violated our neutrality from any legalistic viewpoint. But Mr. Bryan, supported by Mr. Lansing—then Counselor of the Department of State—decided that "loans by American bankers to any foreign nation which is at war are inconsistent with the true spirit of neutrality." It was over a year before that policy was broken down, largely at the insistence of Secretary McAdoo.

The fundamental reason for the lifting of the financing ban is of the utmost significance. It followed the British declaration of cotton as absolute contraband and was regarded as necessary to prevent, in Mr. Lansing's words, "numerous failures, financial demoralization and general unrest and suffering among the labor classes." Mr. Wilson was won over. A few days later he was describing the "real significance" of the proposed British war loan as designed to maintain "international exchanges whose breakdown would be absolutely disastrous to the United States."

By that time, of course, neutrality was doomed. The interests of the Nation were so tied in with the Allied cause as to make us, in German eyes, already a belligerent. The Berlin government consequently treated us as such and soon we were sending troops as well as munitions to the trenches.

* * * *

In all the details of this gallant but foredoomed effort to preserve neutrality Mr. Baker does not lose sight of the underlying lesson. It was the "utterly baseless legend of American isolation" which prevented us from realizing that "the position of the fence-sitter was not only uncomfortable, it was untenable." There seems no substantial reason for believing that the situation in 1936 or after will be essentially different from what it was in 1914. For isolated peace in an integrated world is a contradiction which no amount of earnest effort can straighten out. We can, undoubtedly, choose our allies in the event of another protracted World War. But it is highly dubious that we can successfully stay out.

This President Wilson clearly realized. For all his ceaseless fight in behalf of neutrality he seems to have known from the start that the cause was hopeless. In the first month of the war, just after returning from the funeral of the first Mrs. Wilson, he told Dr. Axson that "I am afraid something will happen on the high seas that will make it impossible for us to keep out of the war." And it was then that, for the first time, he jotted down his alternative to the blind alley of neutrality:

"There must be an association of nations, all bound together for the protection of the integrity of each, so that any one nation breaking from this bond will bring upon herself war; that is to say, punishment, automatically."

Missions

STRIKINGLY unknown is the fact that an important factor in the Spanish colonization of the southeastern corner of United States was the desire of the Spanish Catholic Church to convert the Indian tribes of that section. Beginning in the 1590's, groups of missionaries came from Spain directly or by way of the Caribbean islands to found mission centers, and begin attempts to civilize the pagans living in large numbers along what is now the coastal regions of north Florida and south Georgia.

John Tate Lanning, distinguished and scholarly historian of the South, has recently completed a study of this movement and the period, called "The Spanish Missions of Georgia." Beautifully printed and illustrated by Willis Physioc with arresting sketches of mission ruins or reconstructed scenes, the book is one every person interested in the history of that section can ill afford to miss. The narrative is highly readable, at times very colorful, and is woven around little-known incidents which shed unusual sidelights on the period and enhance the historical value of the book.

When reading it one instinctively feels keen admiration for these hardy fathers and brothers of the faith who braved such antagonism to bring their conception of rightful living to these strange children of God. J. W. M.

"Seven League Boots" Reports Richard Halliburton's Latest Far Wanderings.

By John W. Maloney.

I CAN well remember the days when romance-starved housewives from one end of America to the other felt their lives empty and pointless until they had either shaken his hand or heard the golden words fall from the lips of that charming young Prince Charming, that greatest of all followers of the romantic life, the daring youth who leaped headfirst into the reflection pool stretching out in front of the Taj Mahal and lived to reassure friends who shyly suggested that the shallowness of the pool was, if nothing else, conducive to a broken neck.

Richard Halliburton is the name.

Perhaps my attitude is incorrect when I critically observe a few observations about a fellow Tennesseean, for no matter how we fight at home, Tennesseans should at least give the appearance of sticking together when they venture out into other worlds. But Richard makes that a little hard, at times, no matter how pacific one's intentions may be. A case in point is that we'll disagree about the Taj for some time to come, for I purposely took a stick, just a few months ago, and wiggled it over the bottom of that mirrored reflection of the world's most beautiful structure. Now, a bag of gold couldn't have persuaded me to plunge into that shallow bowl of warmish water—but on the other hand, I may not be made of the stuff that best-selling travel writers have to be!

But here I want to take up the case of Elisabethe Dalrymple. I think it should be taken up immediately, for lots of book reviewers have been heaping words of praise upon a book in which she is the central character. They have talked a lot about Richard, but little about "Dally," as her friends affectionately think of her.

Dally is a lady. A lady elephant. All her pampered life, until she came to know Richard, she had basked in the love of Parisian thousands who came to the park principally to feed her oodles of peanuts and sweets. But Richard, one day, while delving into some musty history books came across the account of how Hannibal's caravan of elephants had crossed from France into Italy by way of the St. Bernard Pass, frightening the Italians into practically effortless submission (there's a hint to Haile Selassie). Forthwith on this discovery Traveler Halliburton decided he might be outdone in small things, perhaps, but never in feats of such magnitude. Therefore we have "Seven League Boots," the subject of this review.

From the Florida Keys to Haiti to Russia to Siberia to Arabia to Ethiopia to Elysabethe Dalrymple: what are distances to Halliburton when he invariably travels (so a department store salesgirl assured me) on royal roads to romance and glorious adventures, leaving the ground only when he takes to the magic carpet or is in a hurry to conquer new worlds? My criticism is that he carried too many history books along (forgiving him for the Bible), and on this new excursion he makes his readers swallow rehashed history indiscriminately, not counting the popularized version of the visit of the Queen of Sheba to the palace of Solomon. And somewhere between retold accounts of the House of Romanoff are inserted two chapters gory with blood in which the Czar and his family agonizingly die once again, for a morbid public to enjoy as it sips its soda by the fireside.

In all seriousness, I do think it's time for Richard Halliburton to start searching for more interesting worlds to conquer. His "Royal Roads to Romance" did have a ring of freshness about it that was, at the time, enjoyable. Even "New Worlds to Conquer," which followed, was passable. But the strain of writing is evidently creeping up on this weary author, and some have incredulously whispered that the crowds gathering around him in drug-store book departments for his autograph and one smile are getting thinner and thinner. The situation is serious!

There's no denying that Halliburton's style of writing was a relief in the beginning, in that he brought a lightness of subject matter into his books without the assistance of too much personal observation and opinion. That was, I say, in the beginning, for now one unconsciously notices that Halliburton has become an authority, and can not resist the temptation to get up on a soap-box and preach when his pen starts gliding along so glibly. His chapter on Russia's eventual outcome and the summary of his visit to that country is an example of this tendency to forsake travel and digress into economic and philosophical paths.

What with all this bitterness off my chest, let it be said that the book is still capable of being enjoyed provided one is not too curious to see what makes the clock run. But that does recall the candy coming as a reward for downing the castor oil, doesn't it?

Presidents

By Gerald Gross.

BECAUSE it is interesting, if unscientific and often productive of fallacious conclusions, to compare the lengths of sketches in "Who's Who" and other biographical guides, let us make a quantitative analysis of the good Dr. Beard's White House anthology.

Franklin D. Roosevelt is reached at last, being the incumbent, but he stands first in the matter of pages consumed—three and a quarter, with type large and margins wide. Nor is the expression, "New Deal," mentioned even once. Now, three and a quarter pages is scant space in which to describe a President whose Administration is responsible for such epochal developments as compulsory hog slaughter, bank deposit insurance and Rexford Guy Tugwell, but consider George Washington, who must suffice in two and a half pages, and Abraham Lincoln, two and three-quarters.

Zachary Taylor is disposed of in less than a page, and John Tyler, Millard Fillmore, James Garfield and Calvin Coolidge rate only a few lines more, if anyone wants to make anything of it. Average length of all 31 is slightly over one and three-quarters pages, hence, becoming facetious, John Adams, James Madison, Andrew Johnson, U. S. Grant and William Howard Taft were "average" Presidents. Perhaps, after all, this standard of rating is not so facetious.

A modest little handbook by the co-author of "The Rise of American Civilization," "The Presidents in American History" fills a need that is undeniable. With a minimum of bias, the author has produced 31 candid portraits which ring true in spite of—or, maybe, because of—drastic condensation. Shorn of all the fiction and poppycock which is their schoolroom heritage, the executives who have guided America's destinies in the last century and a half stand out as men and human beings. They are weak and strong, rich and poor, short and tall, but all are built of flesh, blood and bone, and nothing less substantial.

Following are some of his more daring observations:

George Washington—"He served in the Virginia Legislature, where he showed stage-fright in making speeches but assurance in reaching decisions."

Thomas Jefferson—* * * "The most highly civilized man ever called to the Presidency."

Woodrow Wilson—"Re-elected by a narrow margin in 1916, when his campaign managers emphasized the fact that he had 'kept us out of war,' and made a special bid for the votes of women in California, President Wilson led the country into the World War in the spring of 1917."

Warren G. Harding — "Had untoward circumstances not intervened, President Harding might have enjoyed a course of normalcy."

Franklin D. Roosevelt — "Never before in American history had the forgotten men, and many others, been remembered so lavishly as the national debt bequeathed by the World War mounted higher and higher."

No End of Authors

By Theodore Hall

WILL you bear with me for a paragraph or two about leather?—especially as it concerns a million dollar libel suit aimed at the head of him who taps out these lines? "If"—I read, tremblingly, in a none-the-less genial letter from George Macy, of the Limited Editions Club, but now in his capacity as director of the new Heritage Press—"if you will send me an affidavit to prove that you have a million dollars in the bank, I will immediately begin an action for libel against you, in an attempt to collect $1,000,000 in damages."

Ah, me!—what had I done! Well, it seems that in reviewing the first batch of books from the Heritage Press, a while back in my every-other-day column, I made a remark to the effect that on the binding of "A Shropshire Lad," which the publishers had called "genuine leather," I had detected a definite repeat pattern of pore-holes and wrinkles, and that therefore "publishers shouldn't fib." Now it is very unkind, not to speak of financially vulnerable, to suggest fibbing on a publisher's part. Yet Mr. Macy, with great forbearance and cordiality, proceeded to point out to me that the binding was real sheepskin, that the tanner had scraped off the outer fuzz, that "then the product didn't look like leather, so, in order to make it look like leather, he embossed it." And that is the flat truth about this binding, as any man can discover. My apologies to the Heritage Press if I had seemed to imply anything less.

* * * *

BUT—I was not objecting to the word "leather"—I was objecting to the use, there, of the word "genuine." For "genuine," as I wrote Mr. Macy, is a good, round word, full of pride and not to be shifted half way down from its perch. It means Simon-pure, unalloyed, unadulterated. And to run leather through the rollers of a press, and to put artificial pore-holes and wrinkles in it, does seem to this brash respecter of language a species of adulteration. Now, Mr. Macy—we've kept the mail trains running on this matter—tells me that "many unnatural manufacturing processes" must be gone through in the making of leather. And so they must.

Yet it is the matter of parlance which puzzles me. If you can put fancy pore-holes and wrinkles on real leather and still call it "genuine," what term have you got left to call leather which retains the pore-holes and wrinkles God gave it? We've got to leave some word at the top of the ladder, I should think.

And if I seem to quibble, it is, I pray, with a pure heart. For when we depart from a true regard for such words as "genuine," then we leave a chink through which rush all the ballyhooers and polite puffers, the blurb writers with their circus adjectives and the molasses-mouther reviewers, shouting the infinite meaninglessness of their inflated jargon. Someone, it would seem, has got to keep an eye open. The Heritage Press, whose bindings are indeed real leather, merely suggested this text on which I thus moralize. If I've seemed overly tart toward them, I'm very, very sorry.

LITTLE Homily on the Perils of Reading Christopher Morley's "Parnassus on Wheels." Red-headed Jack O'Donnell perused the book, was mightily struck with its notion of a library on wheels, and suddenly thought of a new angle. He bought a power cruiser, named it Parnassus, stocked it with 4,000 books, and started off with his wife for Alaska to run a sea-going circulating library. They had got as far as Alert Bay when the cruiser, most unkindly, blew up. Jack O'Donnell is still in the hospital, and he still thinks it a good idea. Once up and out, he'll try it again. . . . The Pleasures of Publishing, Columbia University Press's house organ, adds my suggestion of the Cooperstown, N. Y., Glimmerglass to its list of newspaper names, and reports a new one—the Birmingham (Mich.), Eccentric.

Now to a prize contest, for enthusiasts of such. J. B. Lippincott Co., Washington Square, Philadelphia, offers $50 for the blue ribbon, $25 each for the red and yellow ribbons, in return for letters (not over 500 words) on "what you think would have happened if Huey Long had become President, and what you think will now happen under the present Administration." They advise you first to read Carleton Beals' "The Story of Huey P. Long." . . . One guess as to the publisher of that book.

The Howells Medal, awarded every fifth year by the American Academy of Arts and Letters to the most distinguished work of American fiction issued during that period, has been given to Pearl Buck for her novel, "The Good Earth." It won the Pulitzer in 1931. . . . Her reply to Robert Grant, at the presentation ceremony, is extremely interesting. Among other gracious remarks, she said: "I feel grateful to my country because I find here, surely more than in any other country in the world, opportunity for a writer, unknown and obscure, with no influence of any kind, without money or particular friends, to come into recognition, to find generous praise and welcome and many friends. I am constained by my own experience to believe that only complete lack of any merit prevents a writer from generous, often too generous, recognition here. And I am further persuaded to this belief because I now see for myself the eagerness with which all young talent is searched for, encouraged and developed." . . . All of which is gospel, though bitter medicine when your manuscripts keep coming back. When people ask me if they should write or not, and they pose that question continually, all I can reply is that they should keep trying. Aside from work of the most obvious stupidity, there is no other answer this side of the grave.

Rackets Rampant

Martin Mooney Takes the Lid Off Rackets in "Crime, Incorporated."

By Macon Reed, Jr.

RACKETS, violent and non-violent, are the subjects respectively of the pair of books that were our lot this week.

By far the more impressive is Martin Mooney's "Crime, Incorporated." In fact, if this book is true, it surpasses anything in the way of revelations that we ever came across. Without question, the isolated facts of "Crime, Incorporated" are true, but it would not necessarily follow that picture of organized crime presented therein as a whole is true. However, even if the picture assayed no more than 50 per cent truth it would still be as grave and as astounding as anything that ever came to our eye.

Martin Mooney is the New York American's crime reporter who was sentenced for contempt of court last spring when he wrote more about New York rackets in ten days than New York's special racket probing grand jury could ever learn and then refused to reveal to the grand jury the sources of his information. He was right in his refusal, because he had agreed to treat the sources as confidential and he could no more ethically breach professional confidences than could your family doctor.

The picture he draws is of a nation in which each city is ruled by a crime corporation, with all the corporations linked in a smoothly organized "crime chamber of commerce." This could be dismissed as dime pulp thriller if the writer hadn't gone into so much circumstance, so much "corroborative detail to lend an aspect of verisimilitude," as the Lord High Executioner would say. He says he once saw the New York crime combine directors in session, and describes the personal appearance and business professions of each of them. Now manifestly he is either teched in de haid or really has something.

The dilemma is heightened by a letter of commendation, from none other than J. Edgar Hoover, which is printed on the back cover. It appears doubtful from the letter whether Hoover read the book he indorsed. Another factor for incredibility is a sensationalism of writing that Mooney has along with most others of Mr. Hearst's emissaries.

A striking characteristic of Mr. Mooney's big business crimesters, be they real or imaginary, is that they are prominent politically and civically but are never branded as criminals. The inference is that a so-called big-shot like Dutch Schultz would be no more than a glorified cat's-paw for the man higher up.

He says the biggest racket in the country is the pin-ball game, that harmless pastime of putting marbles in high numbered holes on a glass covered board. A racket because the machines (he says) are controlled by a single combine in each city—if not by a national combine—which enforces its monopoly by intimidation. That is, if any shop owner buys or rents a machine other than from the combine, strong arm boys smash his windows, etc. This seems to be a type of the American racket. He describes many of them in full detail, including hot ice, races, loans, vice, produce and abortions.

He calls crime the biggest business in the country and cites Department of Justice estimates of a $15,000,000,000 annual take. That's some twice what the Government spends in a year.

By the way, he says Huey Long was killed by gang orders and he hints at a link between the Senator and the combine.

And we may add that whether written by nut or prophet the book is fascinating reading.

The other of the pair, "The Run for Your Money," is highly amusing and deals with fancy and garden varieties of gyps. It appears to be gotten out largely by the Better Business Bureaus, and most of the dope has been run in a regular department in Reader's Digest. It might be called a manual for suckers and describes a thousand and one ways in which a variety of sharpers have undoubtedly taken your money and will undoubtedly do it again.

U. S. Health Service Counts 16 Martyrs

And Many More, Who Have Not Actually Lost Their Lives, Have Suffered Grave Illnesses and Pain, That Others Might Live.

By Wilson Hurley.

That we are a nation of Philistines is the jeremiad sung these days by a group of critics of the current American scene. We, they lament, possess an essentially pragmatic attitude toward progress and while we have managed to garner dollars we remain intellectually barren. Our contributions to the arts and sciences are of relatively minor importance and generally are of an ephemeral nature.

To these and their ilk a visit to the United States Public Health Service would prove not only refreshing but revealing. This is one American citadel not tainted with the germ of politics or ruled by "the mighty dollar." It is one of the many of our institutions where an abundance of cerebral matter and not influence is the sole ticket of admission. A knowledge of these men and women, their work and their inestimable contributions to the welfare of mankind would explode forever the much-touted cry that we are a people lashed by the whip of Mammon.

Here, in the words of the poet, the American taxpayer has built "a monument more lasting than gold." No record of the first three decades of Twentieth-Century America would be complete without a chronicle of the achievements of the Armstrongs and the Dyers in the public health service.

Efficiency Minus Press Agentry.

Efficiently, without benefit of press agents, and without the blatancy usually associated with the facta mirabilia of other Governmental agencies, this vast army of men and women doggedly pursues the tortuous paths of science in its perennial battle against man's greatest enemy—the invisible microbe.

Many of these scientists—16 of them to be exact—have laid down their lives that their fellow man might live a happier and healthier existence. Many of them today carry the scars received in their skirmishes with the unknown enemy.

Additional chapters in medical history are being written in Washington by this army of scientists and their assistants. No longer does man fear the deadly germ of the Rocky Mountain spotted fever, that vicious malady which puzzled scientists for generations. Epidemics, the scourge of Europe in the medieval ages, have been reduced to a minimum. The deadly bacteria of Malta fever has been isolated, thanks to the achievement of a woman employed in the Government service. We are making astounding headway with scarlet fever, once the greatest fear of every parent. So much work has been done by our Government on the dreaded and baffling disease of tularaemia—a disease carried by rabbits and other animals—that it is referred to as the "All-American" disease.

To know the details of some of these discoveries and to be acquainted with the actors in this medical drama is to know a great portion of contemporary medical history in the United States. These men and women are American scientists in every sense of the word. They started at scratch on the diagnosis, bacteria isolation and cure of diseases that are indigenous to this country, although traces of them since have been found in other parts of the globe.

Taxpayers Paying $15,000,000 a Year.

Upkeep of this farflung organization which was authorized by Congress in 1798, costs the taxpayers only $11,000,000 a year. This is a mere bagatelle in these days of Government expenditures when the personnel expenses of some of the departments run into the millions of dollars. Funds earmarked for the Health Service seem to be a definite answer to the hue and cry made against the growing tentacles of bureaucracy. The American believes that every dollar spent for the prevention of disease and the discovery of a new virus is a dollar "well spent."

The Health Service as we know it today is of recent development. Such an important appendange as the National Institute of Health—only one of the many branches of this organization—came into existence as late as 1901 when it was known as the Hygienic Laboratory. Only five years ago Congress authorized an appropriation of $750,000 for additional buildings to the National Institute of Health, so that today it is recognized as one of the foremost research units in the world.

It is quite possible you have bumped into Dr. Edward Francis going to the movies some night. After tularaemia the cinema is one of Dr. Francis' greatest delights. He sees a motion picture almost every day, following a walk around the Speedway every afternoon.

It was back in 1919 that Dr. Francis began the task of determining the nature of the microbe that was taking a heavy toll annually among all classes of animals and gradually was passed on to man. His patience was rewarded. Science today, through the efforts of Dr. Francis, is to put its finger on the microbe. In some parts of the world they refer to the disease as "Francis Disease."

Dr. Francis while in line of duty in Washington has at various times been infected with dengue, tularaemia, undulant fever and parrot fever. At 63 he is hale and hearty. For many years our people were dying from a strange fever. The insidious microbe which caused the fever was a scientific puzzle. Then came Miss Alice C. Evans, a bacteriologist in the service, with one of the most important contributions to modern medical science. Miss Evans discovered that men were being infected with a disease found in sheep, hogs and cows. It is called undulant fever, but frequently it is referred to as Malta Fever from the belief that the disease was brought to this country in a shipment of goats from the island of Malta many years ago.

Since the nexus between the animal ailment and the human fever was discovered great headway has been made in the treatment of the disease.

Miss Evans herself was stricken by the very bacteria she set out to discover. She lay dangerously ill for many months and even today, she says, she feels the aftereffects of the infection. Her name already has been indelibly inscribed in the annals of American medical history.

Children Toll Still Excessive.

Scarlet fever continues to take its annual toll among children in this country, although the percentage of infection in recent years has been considerably reduced. But today a ray of hope shoots through the mystifying vapor that has surrounded the nature of this virus. Our country's scientists believe they are on the track that ultimately will lead to success in the great battle that has been waged against this malady.

They have Dr. M. V. Veldee to thank for the recent headway along this front. For the past six years Dr. Veldee has concentrated on diphtheria and scarlet fever. Recently he developed a scarlet fever toxoid which, while it is still in the experimental stages, is believed by many scientists to be what the medical world has been looking for. Thousands of children have been inoculated with the Veldee toxoid, and it has proven satisfactory.

One of the most important functions of the Public Health Service—a function not generally known to the public—is the supervision of biological products and chemicals prescribed by physicians for patients.

In this connection Dr. R. E. Dyer has done important work since he came to the service in the fall of 1916. For many years he was engaged in the inspection of serums, toxins, anti-toxins and biologic products. Through his efforts the public health has been safeguarded and thousands of dollars saved in useless expenditures for medicines that were worthless.

Dr. Dyer, however, is probably better known for his research work in typhus fever, which he contracted in the course of his inquiry. Through Dr. Dyer's work much of the mystery of typhus has been swept aside and physicians today are better prepared to prosecute intelligently their efforts to halt its march.

Infantile paralysis, which last summer crept through Virginia, is gradually becoming better known to modern medical science through the research efforts of Dr. James Payton Leake. He is by far one of the most outstanding authorities on epidemics of all kinds in the United States today.

Dr. Armstrong Highly Praised.

To write of the achievements of Dr. Charles Armstrong would require a book. His associates call him "The Human Guinea Pig." While in the Government service, Dr. Armstrong has been infected at various times with dengue, parrot fever and encephalitis. Five years ago a serum made from his blood saved the life of the wife of Senator William E. Borah, who was dangerously ill from parrot fever. Dr. Armstrong is renowned for his work on parrot fever and sleeping sickness.

No chronicle of the great medical drama being enacted in Washington these days would be complete without mention of Dr. George W. McCoy, director of the research laboratory, or of Dr. Hugh S. Cumming, director of the Public Health Service. Each of these men is world renowned for his contributions to the progress of medicine in the last 30 years. Dr. McCoy is perhaps this country's most outstanding authority on leprosy today. His varied career, checkered with exciting battles with microbes, includes extensive work in plagues, cholera and parrot fever. In addition to this he is in charge of the laboratory which must give the stamp of approval to new medicines for public use. The Public Health Service during the regime of Dr. Cumming, has blossomed forth into one of the most important, albeit unknown, branches in the Government today.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—
Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food doesn't digest. It just decays in the bowels. Gas bloats up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get these two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up". Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Ask for Carter's Little Liver Pills by name. Stubbornly refuse anything else. 25c.

Ancient Street Cries Make Paris Melodious

By Andre Vulliet.

Special Correspondent of The Post.

Paris.

Gasping for breath, a grandfather of a car comes puffing up the avenue. Louder than the irregular thumps of its heartbeats, a shrill, nasal voice rends the air: "Habits, chiffons, ferraille a vendre?" ("Have you old clothes, old rags, scrap iron to sell?") To tourists huddled together in the center of Paris or living in fashionable districts, these street cries are unknown. Yet they exist today and have always existed in the poorer sections of the town. Big business houses may come and go, but the itinerant street vendors and tradesmen continue to cry their wares in the same manner as did their hawker ancestors centuries ago.

The goat's milk vendor is possibly the most interesting specimen of the trade extant. In this enlightened age when milk is supposed to be pasteurized and delivered in sealed, sterilized bottles, he continues to make his rounds every morning followed by a number of goats all a-tinkling with bells. No need for him to talk. The rustic notes from his reed pipe announce to one and all that warm goat's milk is theirs for the asking. If a pitcher is handed him, he immediately sets to work milking a goat while the other animals lie around and chew wisps of grass under the watchful eye of a shepherd dog. The vessel filled, the herd gets up and the piper merrily pipes his way around the corner in quest of new business.

Dog-and-Cat Barber.

Paris could not do without the earthenware mender. Armed with a large box and collapsible stool, he goes through the streets coaxing tunes out of a sort of kazoo. After years of blowing, he has mastered the intricacies of his instrument and knows the whole Sousa repertoire. No piece of chinaware has ever been so broken that he could not set it together again. If a job comes his way, he first goes to the closest "bistro" for a glass of white wine to steady his nerves, and then gets down to business. Astride his stool he drills little holes in the broken pieces, passes invisible wires through these, and then glues the whole together. "Voila, Madame, it's four francs, and as good as new." His money pocketed, he goes back to the "bistro" for another drink before tackling another delicate operation.

An artist now being slowly driven to the wall is the dog-and-cat barber. His work consists in relieving over-hirsute dogs of a part of their coats when such is necessary. The veterinarian now having gone in for animal beauty parlors, his less fortunate brother hasn't a chance, being too poor to buy up-to-date equipment. However, in districts bordering the Seine, his cry can still be heard: "Tonds les chiens, coupe les chats!" Along he goes brandishing a huge pair of wooden scissors, symbol of his trade. When he has succeeded in convincing a housewife that her dog needs a wash and shampoo, he takes the reluctant toutou to the river bank and gives him a cleaning and haircut that makes him the envy of all the other dogs in the neighborhood.

To the chairmender falls the task of keeping the seats and backs of Paris chairs in good repair. He is quite an artist. One wonders how he manages to fit all the strands of cane together so as to form a perfect pattern. He usually works away on the sidewalk, quite unconcerned about the life going on about him. His work done, he walks up the stairs to the owner's apartment and screws the chair back together again. He has never been known to use the elevator or to remove his cap when entering a private home. He despises both the newfangled invention and etiquette. He is a chairmender and master of his trade. As he goes down the lane blowing his trumpet, one cannot help but he impressed with the importance of Paris chairmenders.

For some unknown reason native Savoyards centuries ago left the fastness of their mountain homes and overran France all in the interest of putting window panes where window panes were needed. They have delved in every nook and cranny to such an extent that one seldom finds a sash in need of glass. This does not stop them from trudging along from morning till night in every "quartier" loaded down with panes of glass. "O'tri! O'tri!" they call in mournful voices. Their call resembles the plaintive wailing of the wind through windowless sashes. If Junior has thrown his miniature Citroen automobile at nurse and missed his mark, now is the time to call the glass man. In another moment he will have disappeared, leaving only a faint "O'tri! O'tri!" floating in the air.

Scissors Mender Plies His Trade.

"Ciseaux, couteaux affu-u-u-utes!" This drawn out call is followed by the ringing of a bell. If you look outside, you will see a gray-haired old fellow pushing a wheeled contraption all fitted out to sharpen everything but wits. He is the remouleur, a person the housewife curses when his racket wakes up baby and whom she awaits eagerly when kitchen utensils have gone blunt. The remouleur is an indispensable Parision tradesman and he takes great pride in his work. Many a hair he has plucked from his head, halved with the newly sharpened instrument, and let fall to the pavement with the expression: "ah! parfait."

A most voluble person is the "marchande des quatres saisons." Harnessed to a two-wheel cart, she pulls and tugs at the creaky vehicle, all the while enumerating the wide variety and quality of her produce. "Voyez les belles carottes, Mesdames, ah! les beaux radis! Vingt sous, Mesdames, c'est pour rien." As her name indicates, she deals in the garden produce of the four seasons. To hear her one would think that hers are the biggest, best, and juiciest of all vegetables.

Women do most of the fishmongering in France. Here again a cart is used and madame may admire the silver and red seafood from her window. The cries seldom vary "Hareng qui glace, hareng nouveau, tout plein, laite, en x'la du beau!" ("Herring on ice, nice fresh, fleshy herring.")

Such are some of the cries of Paris, cries of old now often absorbed by the din and noise of a large modern city.

World Politics Will Determine Naval Issues

Britain and United States Seen as Holding Trump Cards.

time security desired in these two seas.

Such an agreement, as effective if the conference fails as if it succeeds, would place Italy and Germany in an unfavorable position analogous to that of Japan, forcing them to accept either political or technical sacrifices to avoid a naval situation which would be to their own disadvantage. If the conference poker game becomes political rather than technical, Italy's imperialist aims and the size of the German army and air force may be among the blue chips on the table.

The prospects at London are far from bright, but they need not be considered hopeless, since it is in reality the three powers with expansionist aims who have most to lose by failure and whose national interest must, for this reason, force them towards compromise.

United States In Good Position.

The United States holds a powerful position at London, ready to accept progressive limitation on the basis of actual treaties, but best able to improve her relative strategic position if these treaties are not extended. The United States has, moreover, already made an important political contribution towards the success of the conference.

Prior to 1935, our historic doctrine of "Freedom of the Seas," which held that our citizens had a legal right to trade with belligerents and which had already led us into two European wars, implied that the American Navy might be utilized to uphold these rights during a war in Europe. Our replacement of this dangerous doctrine by our present neutrality policy, which discourages instead of protects American trade with belligerents, has made the size of the American battle fleet a lesser consideration in the naval policy of the European sea powers.

Costs Are Carefully Concealed in Budgets

There Are No Real Military Secrets Today, for the Science of Spying Is So Swift and Sure It Lays Everything Bare.

By Harry Goldsmith.

All the forces of science and nature are resorted to by the 10,000 or so secret agents—spies—said by one authority to be carrying on an intense warfare between mutually suspicious European nations. Except for an item buried away here or there in foreign dispatches one hears little of the goings-on of this vast army of secret agents, whose wiles, dodges, tricks and stratagems are fascinating and ingenious indeed.

Nations' budgets cleverly conceal money for espionage midst other inconspicuous items; but craft, intrigue and spies, military history tells us, have been an activity in every nation and in every age. There are no such things as military secrets. Spies make that impossible.

Now and then in peace times there is a Switz case to remind us that spies are ever with us; or a strange incident like that which occurred but a few days ago, when an auto, carrying authorities of a French-German border town chugged to the middle of a bridge joining the two lands at that point. From the German side another auto headed in the opposite direction. Meeting in the middle of the bridge, the autos stopped and out stepped the officials of the two cars.

Strange Antics At the Border.

There was an exchange of official looking papers. Then three men from the German auto stepped into the French auto and two men from the French auto stepped into the German auto. The two autos made a U-turn and headed back whence they came.

Thus Germany and France exchanged prisoner spies, just a few of that army of 10,000 who had unluckily been caught. In a period of 22 months some 600 of these spies were caught, states one authority. Over half of these were tried and sentenced. Many got life sentences; a few the firing squad. In peace times spies generally are not executed.

This outburst of espionage is amazing. There has been nothing like it before in peace times. And there are some who believe that it itself may be the spark which may set off the tinder of another World War.

Modern spies bring to bear all the ingenuity at their command in putting nature and science to work in their schemes. Many are the scientific developments that have come out of research laboratories, utilized by the modern spy. There is the photo-electric cell ("electric eye"), the extremely short radio waves, "talking light beam," new secret inks, cameras that take pictures in the dark—the possibilities all of which for espionage purposes are undoubtedly being thoroughly studied in the special laboratories connected with espionage systems.

Recently it was discovered that some secret agents were sending messages by means of hard-boiled eggs. Midst the case of fresh eggs which ostensibly were headed for market were placed the message-carrying hard-boiled ones. The eggs all looked alike, but when the shells of the hard-boiled ones were removed there on the hard "white," in dark brown lettering, was the code message. Some clever chemist who knew his "eggs" had discovered that a solution of alum and sugar made an excellent writing fluid which would penetrate through the shell leaving no outward trace thereon. Reaching the "white," the solution would react with the albumen of the egg and the message would be fixed therein in brown colored symbols.

Speaking of invisible writing fluids, innumerable and various indeed are the types that have been used by spies. Everything from onion or lemon juice, saliva and urine were used by the German spies during the war. But when the French counterspies found that they could easily read the secret messages of the Germans by merely treating the paper on which they were written with iodine vapor, the Germans called in their chemists to develop some real "invisible" inks.

Organic Silver Substance Used.

They hit upon the use of metallic or organic salts protected by certain chemicals which made it impossible to show up the writing by the usual methods. Organic silver compounds were used, but the equally ingenious French chemists discovered how they could "develop" these inks by using another silver salt.

So the German spies cut out carrying vials or anything looking like an ink container. Contents of perfume bottles formerly containing secret inks cleverly doctored to simulate perfumes, now contained real perfumes. The clever German chemists had developed invisible inks which could be "worn," so to speak, in socks, neckties, scarfs, dresses, handkerchiefs and in any other piece of clothing.

The ink was impregnated in these pieces of clothing without in any way discoloring them. When the spy wanted to write a secret message he would pull off his necktie, soak it in a glass of distilled water. Enough of the rare ink would dissolve out to provide him with sufficient fluid for writing his message. Then he could hang up the tie to dry and use it all over again in the same way to get more ink.

"An aspirin tablet dissolved in water provides one of the most distinctly up-to-date 'invisible' writing fluids," states Richard William Rowan in his book "Spies and the Next War." "When used it leaves no perceptible trace but expose it beneath 'black light'—an ultra violet lamp—and the unseen writing becomes flourescent, begins to glow."

Ultra-violet light is a powerful tool that is used by counterspies, The invisible light rays reveal forgeries—many of the passports for spies are forged—but overwriting and masking can be revealed by the ultra-violet light.

Another type of light—infra-red rays—has been used by spies particularly for signalling purposes and taking photographs in the dark. A hot stove gives off infra-red rays. They are akin to heat waves and are invisible in daylight and night.

Special Lamps Give Infra-Red.

There are special lamps which give off infra-red rays. These lamps may be used to send signals many miles in broad daylight. Only by wearing glasses with special screens do these invisible rays become detectable so that the winking code flashes of the lamp may be interpreted.

Planes flying high overhead can be signalled directions by flashes of infra-red light sent up a chimney from the home of a resident spy. During the war one spy had such a lamp concealed in a pot which hung in the fireplace. The innocent looking pot, however, to the plane pilots was as effective a message conveyor as wireless code.

In recent times photographic films have been made which can take pictures in pitch darkness by means of infra-red light. Objects show up clearly, as in broad daylight. In fact these rays even penetrate fog. And a few large ocean-going steamers use an infra-red ray camera with which to get their bearings in heavy fogs. The camera can penetrate the fog far ahead and the photographs which can be developed in a moment or two reveal to the captain what is ahead.

One spy devised a special inner bowl for his pipe in which he could carry his messages written on spy paper. He would tamp the document into the bowl and on top of this the tobacco. Turning the inner bowl in a certain manner permitted him to nonchalantly smoke his pipe without burning the message. In case of imminent capture all he had to do was to casually turn the bowl. This would bring the message in contact with the burning tobacco and thus the condemning evidence would go up in smoke.

Explorers Plunge Into Idaho's Wilds

104 men and 20 Indian scouts who were sent out to capture them.

Lieut. Henry Catley and his men were defeated in a surprise attack from ambushed Indians. They lost the greater portion of their baggage and 23 pack mules. They retreated with their wounded into an impassable gulch, which the Indians promptly set on fire. Serg. Sullivan's quick action saved them. He backfired a small space—a trick still practiced today in fighting fires in the timber.

After the Indians were captured and taken to reservations, the primitive area became the hangout of desperadoes from all over the West. Desperadoes also went into the Jackson Hole country to the west of Yellowstone Park. From there they could make foraging expedition on stage coaches and mail trains. The primitive area was too remote from traffic for these, so it drew murderers with blacker reputations than even those in the Jackson Hole country. The inaccessibility of the region gave them some protection from the hangman's noose.

Many Capital Society Members Will Be Present.

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

The most brilliant White House function of the season will take place Tuesday when the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give a reception in honor of the members of the Diplomatic Corps. All formal entertaining in the Executive Mansion is colorful, but at the reception in honor of the foreign envoys and their assistants, added to the usual handsome gowns of the ladies, the magnificent flowers used to decorate the east room, and the state drawing rooms, are the uniforms of the diplomats. Scarlet, white, French blue, olive drab, and black uniforms, all heavily braided, predominate, and even those who wear the conventional black and white of full dress have brilliantly jeweled decorations and ambassadorial orders.

The ranking guests will be the dean of the corps, Sir Ronald Lindsay, Ambassador of Great Britain, and Lady Lindsay. The Ambassador, tall and handsome, wears a uniform of great brilliance, and Lady Lindsay, always splendidly gowned, will wear black, as will all the ladies of the embassy staff, for Great Britain is observing a period of court mourning for the sister of King George, Princess Victoria, and members of the British Diplomatic Corps will appear for the next few weeks only at official gatherings.

Gowns Ordered Far in Advance.

Most of the diplomatic ladies order their gowns for this occasion far in advance, most of them bringing their frocks from Europe, where famous couturiers make special designs for them. Ladies of the Italian Embassy will wear gowns designed by Italian dressmakers, and pretty blonde Frau Scholz, wife of the First Secretary of the German Embassy, will wear one of the interesting models fashioned by a new school of design in Germany. Several of the Near Eastern envoys appear in uniforms heavily braided in gold, with the crimson fez as a headdress, the only hat which men wear indoors. The Danish Minister, Mr. Otto Wadsted, who is exceedingly handsome, is quite dazzling in his dress uniform, which consists of a scarlet coat and trousers of white, with braided stripes of gold. Others are less outstanding, but the ensemble is well worth seeing.

Besides members of the Diplomatic Corps, a large number of members of Capital society, former envoys, and former members of the foreign service are invited. Several of the season's debutantes are always included, and these young people feel that their first diplomatic reception in the White House is akin to being presented at court. Long white gloves worn by many women, tiaras, dog collars, and even feathered fans add a note of distinct formality to the occasion, while long trains, which make an appearance, are left to trail across the crimson carpets of the mansion, instead of being held high for dancing as at less formal parties.

Assemble in East Room.

Each chief of mission with his staff is received by the President and First Lady in order of precedence, the Chief of Mission presenting his staff to the hosts. Guests assemble in the east room, and pass through the green room, to the middle room, the famous blue room, where the hosts stand against a screen of smilax, palms and ferns. Then the procession moves on to the red room, and thence into the state dining room, where a buffet is arranged. After all the guests have been received, the President and Mrs. Roosevelt, to the strains of the Marine Band, retire to their private apartments, and many of the guests linger for dancing in the east room.

Capital hostesses make no attempt to entertain at dinners on the evening of a diplomatic reception, for the early hour, 9 o'clock, makes it impossible to dine formally. However, numerous supper parties are given after the reception. Miss Mabel Boardman and her sister, Mrs. Frederic A. Keep, will entertain a large group of friends at a buffet at the Sulgrave Club.

Members of the Cabinet are present at all State receptions. Also members of the Foreign Affairs committees of the Senate and the House are invited to the diplomatic reception. Foreigners look forward to their first reception with great anticipation, and the occasion of deep official mourning which pre-

Many Weddings of Interest to Washington and Other Cities Take Place in Capital

Eliza Harrell Is Bride of Ralph L. Ibry

Carolina Couple Married at St. John's Episcopal Church.

To Reside in Winston-Salem After Florida Wedding Trip.

Miss Eliza Harrell, daughter of Mrs. Newton Lewis Harrell, of Darlington, S. C., became the bride of Mr. Ralph Leigh Irby, of Winston-Salem, N. C., formerly of South Boston, Va., yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock, in St. John's Episcopal Church. The Rev. Oliver J. Hart, D. D., officiated. The church was effectively decorated with white flowers, ferns, palms and tall lighted tapers.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her twin brother, Mr. Wesley Harrell, of Darlington, wore a gown of amethyst velvet, made on long lines with a short train, long full sleeves and a standing Queen Anne collar. With this she wore a small velvet hat to match with a tiny nose veil and she carried a shower bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Sister Is Only Attendant.

Miss Mary Louise Harrell, of Washington, sister of the bride, was the maid of honor and only attendant. She wore a gown of electric blue velvet made on long lines and a small hat to match, and carried an arm bouquet of talisman roses. Mr. Paschall Irby, of South Boston, brother of the bridegroom, was the best man.

A reception was held at the Shoreham Hotel. The young couple were assisted in receiving by the mother of the bride, who wore a gown of dark blue lace, with a smart hat and accessories to match and a corsage of pink rosebuds, and by Mrs. Archie Edmunson, sister of the bridegroom, who wore a gown of green crystal velvet with a hat to match and a corsage of gardenias. Later Mr. Irby and his bride left by motor for Florida and then to Cuba. Mrs. Irby wore for traveling a hunter's green ensemble with a small brown hat and brown accessories. After their return they will make their home in Winston-Salem.

Out-of-Town Guests Attend.

Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. John Howle, of Darlington, cousin of the bride; Mr. and Mrs. Archie Edmunson, brother-in-law and sister of the bridegroom; Mr. and Mrs. E. T. Crosland, of Bennettsville, S. C.; Mrs. Margaret Perkins, Miss Frances Garner and Miss Martha Garner, Mr. Ralph Price, Mr. Edward Holt, Mr. Holt Knight, Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Calhoun, all of Greensboro, N. C.; Mr. and Mrs. Merrill Russell, of Baltimore; Mr. Thomas Sharpe, of Jacksonville, Fla., and Mr. Henry Cannon, of Richmond.

Craighill—Haile.

Announcement is made by Mrs. Benjamin Haile, of Columbia, S. C., of the marriage of her daughter, Miss Mary Hamilton Haile, to Mr. Alexander Lee Craighill, which took place December 7 with the Rev. D. Phillips and the Rev. Francis Craighill officiating. Mr. Craighill is the son of Mrs. Ellen Lee Craighill, of Washington and Columbia.

Lilies, smilax and palms decorated the church, which was lighted by cathedral tapers in tall candelabra. The bride, who was given in marriage by her brother, Mr. Edward E. Haile, wore a frock of ivory satin fashioned on princess lines with a cowl neckline which was fastened with pearl clips. With it she wore a veil of ivory tulle and lace, caught at each side with orange blossoms. She carried a bouquet of calla lilies.

Mrs. G. T. McCutcheon was matron of honor and wore a gown of aureole satin with a small matching turban. Her flowers were talisman roses.

The other attendants, Miss Elizabeth Wingfield, of Columbia, and Miss Ellen Lee Craighill, of Washington, wore empire frocks of rust slipper satin with matching turbans. They carried bouquets of yellow roses and snapdragons.

Mr. Craighill had as his best man, his brother, Mr. James R. Craighill, jr., of Washington, and the ushers included Mr. John M. Woodside, of Washington; Mr. Emmett Wingfield, of Columbia; Mr. Marion Evans and Dr. George T. McCutcheon.

Following a reception at the home of the bride's mother, Mr. and Mrs. Craighill left for a short wedding trip. The bride wore as a traveling costume a suit of blue tweed, the lynx trim and accessories of blue.

University Club Begins Yuletide Events Shortly

First of Series for Holiday Season Will Be Party Thursday Night.

The University Club of Washington will inaugurate its Christmas festivities Thursday evening when it again observes "ladies' night." Following the series of dinner parties arranged to take place in the dining rooms, the club's entertainment committee will present a program in the lounge.

The feature of the evening will be the Tuesday Evening Music Club, under the direction of Miss Florence Howard, in a program of Christmas music which it will present in the colorful costumes of Christmas carolers of "Merrie England," against a background of Christmas trees. Miss Marjorie Davis will again be accompanist and Miss Evelyn Scott violinist. Incidental solos in the carols will be sung by Mrs. Elizabeth Jackson Everett, Miss Myrtle Barnes, Miss Florence Booker, Miss Alice Sherrer, Miss Ina Holtzscheiter, Mrs. Lillian Llewellyn Zuck and Miss Mary Elizabeth Pack.

The choruses, drawn from the vocal literature of many countries, will include both the classic and the modern. Folk songs of Spain, France, Holland, Germany and South Africa will form the bases of some numbers. A new feature of the program is the use of an echo chorus.

Dr. and Mrs. Marvin A. Custis will act as hosts on behalf of the club at a buffet supper following the program, to which Mrs. Howard and the entire ensemble have been invited as guests of honor.

Americans on the Continent

By Andre Vulliet.
Special Correspondent of The Post.

Paris.

Hundreds of Royalists were marching by. "Nom d'un petit chien," exclaimed an artist friend at our side. "Look! Look! at that!" After much eliminative pointing we espied the "that." It was none other than a young lady from Nashville, Tenn. To find a rosy-cheeked, 18-year-old maiden from Nashville in the midst of king wishers is something one reads about but seldom sees, especially if the maiden be American.

We felt very apprehensive for her safety. It is sometimes dangerous sport to march with the Camelots du Roi. Not all Frenchmen are duc-de-Guise conscious and we have heard sticks go thud, thud on Royalist heads during these turbulent manifestations.

However, we found out a few things about Miss Dixie Watkins. She is an artist and is now represented at the Autumn Salon at the Grand Palais with a portrait of Jacqueline Horner, the tennis star. The number is 1521. Her favorite artists are Van Dongen, Utrillo, Cezanne and Gauguin. She loathes cubism. Why she became a Royalist? "I came to France with mother," she said, "and I saw right away France ought to have a king. So I joined the Royalists."

Miss Watkins felt the urge in 1930. After cutting out Valentine hearts in America for a while, she said, she became disgusted and came back to France. She was only 13, then, so too young to be admitted to Beaux Arts. She just waited around and daubed and daubed until her sixteenth year, when she was admitted.

We have just found that one of the reasons why Americans leave home is Ibiza, in the Balearic Islands. American Ibizians who live on the island had managed to keep the world ignorant about the advantages of their isle until some benevolent colonist got soft-hearted and decided to let others in on it. The outcome is that you and a lot of other people will want to go there and play golf and gamble at the Casino. Then Ibiza is no place for you.

There is no course, no tennis, and people wash in the sea. The visitors have a grand time spending their money just to see the number of things they can get for a $5 bill. It is almost impossible to spend more than $1.50 a day for room and board. If you want to start housekeeping, here are some prices: Servant, $3.50 per month; sole, 15 cents a pound; big oranges, 4 cents a dozen; fillet of beef, 20 cents a pound.

It is too bad the crutches hanging in the grotto at Lourdes cannot talk. If they could, they would probably settle the age-old controversy newly rekindled by Dr. Alexis Carrel, of New York. Dr. Carrel has been a frequent visitor at Lourdes these last 30 years and has devoted much time to the study of miracles. At the present time he is connected with the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. He won the Nobel Prize in 1912. Dr. Carrel startled the medical profession some time ago by stating that he was convinced miracles were a reality. Sceptical doctors booed him from everywhere. On the other hand he was widely acclaimed by the good townspeople of Lourdes who make a living looking after the numerous pilgrims that flock to the town every year.

Considering prayer as a mystical elevation, the doctor claimed that such activity could be accompanied by anatomical and functional changes in the tissues and organs. Admitting that miraculous cures were rare, he insisted that despite their small number, they proved the existence of organic and mental processes that we do not understand and that show that certain mystical states have very definite effects.

Dr. Carrel revealed, incidentally, that the medicine and religion committee of the New York Academy of Medicine had commissioned one of its members to go to Lourdes to study the facts observed there.

Siegfried to Speak At Gathering Here

French Educator to Address Alliance Francaise.

Andre Siegfried, professor at the College de France, and internationally known author, will speak at a meeting of the Alliance Francaise, at the Carlton Hotel Thursday afternoon. His topic will be "La Contribution de la France, de l'Angleterre et des Etas-Unis a la Civilisation Occidentale."

The Ambassador of France, Mr. Andre de Laboulaye, is the honorary president of the Federation of the Alliance Francaise in the United States and Canada. Mme. de Laboulaye is the honorary president of the Alliance Francaise in Washington.

The Washington Scene

By the Poe Sisters.

One of life's most embarrassing moments fell to the lot of Mrs. Lawrence Robert, jr., wife of the Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, who is a recent bride, when she went to call on Mrs. Henry G. Morgenthau, jr., whose husband is Assistant Secretary Robert's "big chief," so to speak.

Mrs. Robert was a picture of blonde pulchritude when she appeared on the Morgenthau doorstep, cards in hand, and holding a Spitz dog by a leash.

The Morgenthau butler, silver card tray in hand, correctly attired and formal, opened the door. With one bound the Spitz dog jerked himself from the restraining hand of his mistress and fell upon the butler in what might be termed a "vigorous manner."

When the dog had been subdued the butler had to retire from the scene "for repairs."

Mrs. Robert thus joins the ranks of official ladies of the Capital whose pet dogs have forgotten the "p's" and "q's" of official etiquette here. This list is headed by Mrs. Roosevelt, whose Scottie, "Meggie," bit a newspaperwoman. Another White House pet dog, "Major," in this Administration bit Mrs. Hattie Caraway, United States Senator from Arkansas, at the first of the gridiron widows' parties at the White House.

White House dogs that have set tongues wagging because of their tendencies to put their teeth into visitors at the White House include no less a canine personage than the famous "Pete," the bulldog belonging to Theodore Roosevelt, who "chased" the French Ambassador, M. Jusserand, up a tree in the White House grounds when that energetic Frenchman was simply crossing the lawn to meet the President for a game on the White House tennis courts.

The story of President Coolidge's electric horse got out. But the news was carefully suppressed when the steward in charge of the two White House collies, Rob Roy and Prudence Prim, grasped Rob Roy's collar just in time to keep it from biting a lady visitor who was too free with her pats. But Rob Roy was forgiven and has been handed down to posterity, prancing about Mrs. Coolidge in the picture for the White House painted of her by Howard Chandler Christy.

Laddie Boy, the airedale of Mr. and Mrs. Warren G. Harding, has a clean record in White House history, as he was probably the friendliest dog that ever lived there. Laddie Boy was interestd in people and often met the tourists at the door and escorted them through the White House rooms open to the public. Jack and Jill, the frisky red Irish setters of President Roosevelt, who bear their responsibilities of being the current first dogs of the Nation, also have clear records and are as friendly as friendly can be, although they are very curious as to who goes in and out of the White House grounds.

The Glastonbury thorn in Washington Cathedral Close Blossomed Society early for Christmas this year. The warm weather of early November brought the historic tree into bloom. Several times the Glastonbury thorn at the cathedral, a scion of the original Glastonbury thorn at the Glastonbury Abbey in England, said to have been planted there by Joseph of Arimathea, and which Tennyson said "blossoms at Christmas mindful of our Lord" as well as at the ordinary summer flowering, has bloomed at Christmas time, carrying out the ancient tradition.

It is said that, in medieval times, whenever English royalty visited Glastonbury, a bit of the bloom was plucked, placed in a silver box and presented to the member of the royal family making the visit. In 1919 the Prince of Wales visited Washington Cathedral. Although it was the month of November, the tree shot forth two or three blossoms. They were plucked, placed in a silver box and presented to him by the late Right Rev. Alfred Harding, then Bishop of Washington, on the day of his visit. The Prince planted an oak tree near the Peace Cross in the Cathedral Close that same day, which is marked by a bronze tablet.

Lieut. Arthur Sinclair, uncle of Mrs. George Barnett, widow of the World War commandant of the United States Marine Corps, visited Washington frequently before his death a few years ago. He was fond of telling how as a young Confederate naval cadet he stayed in London for some months and was a close friend of the then Prince of Wales, afterwards Edward the Seventh of England.

One day the Prince took the young American boy to see his mother, Queen Victoria at Buckingham Palace.

The trappings of royalty dazzled the eyes of the young Virginian. When they had an audience with the Queen, however, she was so sweet faced, so motherly a figure that he felt at ease when he looked into her eyes, which shone with maternal solicitude for the slim lad in the middy uniform so far from his home.

The Queen motioned Sinclair to a seat beside her. "When did you hear last from your mother? "she inquired. Without warning, Sinclair burst into tears. "There, there, lad," the queen murmured, patting his arm gently as she spoke. "I know boys, even brave ones, miss their mothers. Whenever you miss her too much come up to the palace and see me."

Tears were in the nonogenarian eyes as he told again the story of a great queen's kindness to a lonely boy far from a loving mother.

"Washington is a city of great excavations," wrote the small boy in his composition after a tour of the National Capital and viewing the deep holes from which will arise noble buildings.

Diplomatic Reception Tuesday Will Be a Brilliant Function

vents their attendance is most regrettable to them. This year members of the Belgian Embassy staff will be absent as they are still in mourning for their queen.

World Prestige Modern.

More than a century of slowly changing official etiquette has preserved the dignity, decorum and fine formality in the state drawing rooms. Yet the world prestige of this country is decidely a modern development. Not until the second Administration of Grover Cleveland, the season of 1893-94, did this country rate any ambassadors from abroad, boasting until that time only ministers. That year's diplomatic list gave four Ambassadors, those from Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany, with 26 ministers, all with small staffs. Now the list includes 14 ambassadors and 41 ministers.

Before the Civil War the White House mistress, with good advice from the State Department, could conduct her own social activities. Indeed Mrs. Abraham Lincoln is quoted as saying: "If I give three large receptions, the state dinners can be scratched from the program."

One authority says that in Cleveland's time, the White House itself invited only Senators and Representatives, and numbers of them were invited to all the receptions of the season, including the one in which they were honored jointly with the Supreme Court. Diplomats received their invitations to the White House through the State Department; Army officers through the Secretary of War, and Naval officers through the Secretary of the Navy.

Ladies Omitted By Error.

At a diplomatic reception during the Harrison administration, by some error, ladies were omitted in the invitations to the Ministers and their wives, and only four learned of the mistake in time to appear. So closer and closer cooperation centering about those vastly important words, "protocol" and "precedence" grew up between the White House and the State Department on the subject of formal functions.

Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt started a happy plan, which still continues, of holding in the White House regular meetings of all the wives of the Cabinet to talk over and agree upon the details so important to hostesses in making parties run smoothly. Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt holds "Cabinet Ladies" luncheons.

The Protocol Division of the State Department, created seven years ago, now settles all questions, plans the parties, acts as liaison between the White House and the official scene. And so things run as smoothly as is possible in a Capital where practically every country of the world has diplomatic representatives that must be pleased.

Bridge Club of Warrenton Invited to Card Party in Stately Dwelling of Mrs. E. H. Belt

Mrs. McDonnell Hostess For Bi-Weekly Function

"The Virginians" Make Preparations to Leave City After Christmas to Spend Winter at Their Stables at Camden.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., Dec. 14.—Mrs. Austin McDonnell will entertain the bridge club, which meets every two weeks, on Tuesday, at the home of her mother, Mrs. E. H. Belt. This is one of the first entertainments Mrs. McDonnell has given in the old house, which has been remodeled, and now is among the most charming places in town. Courtney Somerville Welton, of Richmond, was the architect.

The old house was built in the early life of Warrenton by Thaddeus Norris, prominent citizen and land owner, for one of his daughters. It was constructed of old brick and undoubtedly the entrance was on the side, very much like the houses of Charleston, S. C. Remodeled along truly colonial lines, the place is outstanding on Culpeper street.

Two porch lights are said to have been originally bought in England. A basement offers attractive rooms for cards and ample quarters for the guests of Miss Austin McDonnell and her younger brother, Chilton McDonnell. Mrs. McDonnell was Miss Kitty Belt, niece of the late Afred B. Horner, of Washington and Warrenton.

Mrs. Douglas H. Lees entertained the club at its last meeting.

"Virginians" Going South.

Mr. J. North Fletcher, Mr. Tom Waller, of Warrenton, and Mr. Randolph Duffy, of Middleburg, calling themselves "The Virginians," will leave the day after Christmas for Camden, S. C., where they have stables and will spend the winter. Later in the season "The Virginians" feature a horse show.

Miss Viola Winmill entertained at dinner for ten on Tuesday evening at Clovelly for Mrs. Algernon Goodwin, who is en route to Aiken, S. C.

Miss Landon Mortimer Hicks and Mrs. Isham Keith entertained at tea on Tuesday afternoon for Miss Kate Ogelbay, of New York, and Mrs. Anne Floweree Cloud, of Vicksburg, Miss., who are at the Warren Green for several days.

Mrs. Edwin Burruss King entertained at tea at Stuyvesant on Wednesday afternoon for Mrs. Algernon Goodwin, the guest of Mrs. Robert C. Winmill.

Mr. and Mrs. DeForrest Willard Morton have issued invitations to a tea dance on December 25 at the Jefferson Hotel, Richmond, presenting their daughter, Miss Marjorie Morton, to society. Mr. and Mrs. Morton, of Warrenton, have taken an apartment at Monroe Terrace, Richmond, for the winter.

A number from Warrenton will attend the dance to be given by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander B. Hagner, of Broadview, Warrenton, December 31 at the Sulgrave Club, Washington.

Mr. and Mrs. John N. Camden, of Lexington, Ky., are the guests of Mrs. Baldwin Day Spilman, sr., at Elway Hall, Warrenton.

Duers Have Party.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Duer entertained at an eggnogg party at their home on Springs road on Saturday afternoon, inaugurating the holiday entertaining in Warrenton and vicinity.

Meet of the Warrenton Hunt for Saturday was at The Retreat, home of Radcliffe Hordern, in the Casanova Hunt country, and was set for 11 o'clock. Gray skies with now and then a flurry of snow, and a biting wind, were not heeded and 75 riders were out.

Amory S. Carhart, master fox hounds, Warrenton Hunt, and J. Chauncy Williams, of the Casanova Hunt, who is joint master with Mr. Carhart when the hounds are hunting in the Casanova territory, were leading the field.

The hounds were cast in Hordern's woods, near Mill run, and drew towards Baldwin's ridge on a cold trail. The fox—a big red—was viewed crossing the old polo field. Hounds were lifted, laid on, picked up a hot trail, and went across Hordern's bottom land, through McNeir's woods, with every tongue giving music, but Sir Reynard made his earth.

Another handsome red, with black rings around his brush, was started on the Hordern estate. The hounds again picked up the scent immediately and were close on his heels when last viewed along the bank of a stream on the Hordern farm. The chase led through Tompkins and Williams farms and gave the large field a morning of good sport.

Among those riding were the M. F. H. and Mrs. Amory S. Carhart, Acting Joint M. F. H. J. Chauncy Williams (Casanova Hunt), Andrew Bartenstein, Tom Waller, Mrs. Herman Boker, William H. Emory, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander B. Hagner, J. North Fletcher, Miss Wilhemenia Kirby (Bedford Hills, N. J.), Frances T. Greene, R. J. Kirkpatrick, Howard Fair, Miss Harriett Turnbull, Miss Dorothy Montgomery, Trigg Bennett, Jack Price, Mrs. Baldwin Day Spilman, jr., Miss Anne Shaffer, Alex Calvert, Miss Virginia Howard Bowman, James Rector, jr., Mrs. John Kellogg and Mrs. Orton Prime (of Lake Forest, Ill.), W. H. Pool, Paul Pryibil, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, Ralph McKee, Mr. and Mrs. E. Kenneth Jenkins, Miss Mildred Gaines, Miss Lucie Duer, Mr. and Mrs. George Cutting, Mrs. Ruth Lester Buchanan (Washington, D. C.), Miss Emily North King, Roland Hoguet (New York), Russell Henman (Canada), Miss Anne Gordon Stone, McPherson Kennedy (of Meadowbrook Drag, New York), W. B. Streett, Mrs. William Talmadge, Miss Humphreys, Dave Wagstaff, Dave Batchelder, Robert Blichle, Cliff Zeiger, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Friendly, Miss Edith Soames, Mr. J. D. Voss and a number of guests, Huntsman Jim Miller and Whips Bywaters and Conroy.

Among those out to see the riders were Mrs. L. Victor Froment, Mr. and Mrs. E. W. Winmill, Miss Polly Buchanan, Miss Virginia Calvert, Mrs. Alan L. Day, Mrs. Scott Nesbit, Miss Betty L. Nesbit, Mr. Frazier Jelke, of New York; Mrs. F. A. B. Portman, Mr. and Mrs. Ray Larcombe, Miss Brittle, John Drake, Mrs. Frances Thornton Greene, Mrs. D. H. Lees, Mrs. Harry C. Groome.

One of Best Runs.

Meeting at Waterloo Monday morning at 11 o'clock, 30 members of the Warrenton Hunt had one of the best runs of the season.

The hounds were cast in Armstrong's woods, and soon after started a fox in the pines along the Rappahannock River. After an hour's run, in which the riders circled several times, Sir Reynard was put to ground on the Canterbury estate of Col. Albert E. Peirce.

Among those riding were the M. F. H. and Mrs. Armory S. Carhart, Mr. and Mrs. Melville Bearns, Mrs. Peggy Keith Hamilton, Howard Fair (riding as whip), Mrs. Herman Boker, Mrs. William Talmage, Miss Humphreys, Dave Wagstaff, Gould Shaw, Col. W. W. Torr (British Embassy, Washington), Miss Mildred Gaines, William H. Emory, Miss Joan Emory, Mrs. Edward Friendly, Mr. and Mrs. Robert C. Winmill, Mrs. Choat Perkins, Miss Dorothy Neyhart, Alex. Calvert, Tom Waller, Mrs. Alexander Hagner and several guests.

TODAY'S GREAT ACHIEVEMENT in PERMANENT WAVING

Rilling Permanent Waves

We have just added the Rilling Permanent Waving Process to our service. We believe it is the most remarkable development in the history of permanent waving . . . so advanced in every detail that we can guarantee you a longer-lasting, more strikingly beautiful permanent.

The Rilling Process positively eliminates "hair pulls." Burns are impossible. Actual tests prove there is no cooler wave.

Before you get your new Permanent . . . come in and talk to us about the new Rilling process —let us show you what a Rilling Wave will do for you—in hair beauty—in comfort—in safety.

Magic-Like Make-Up Advances to Stage of Perfection Where Personality Can Be Changed

NATURE and a Hollywood make-up artist conspired in creating the piquant, heart-shaped face of Eleanor Whitney, screen actress, pictured above.

Much of Credit Is Given To Artists of Hollywood

Their Painstaking Technique Determines the Fate on Silver Screen of Budding Stars and Even the Notables.

By Gertrude Hummer.

WOMEN TODAY MAY CHANGE personalities with their make-up and hair dress. Thanks to the achievements of motion picture make-up artists, based on careful study and patient experimentation, women have learned how effective and simple it really is.

Few realize the important role a Hollywood make-up man plays in the life of a motion picture actress. Her success or failure depends entirely upon him. He has it in his power to make or mar the career of a budding or even full-blown picture star.

Before a dab of make-up is applied, the actress' features are thoroughly studied. A chart similar to an architect's drawing is then made of her face. Each section of the face is marked with a number that represents the type of make-up best suited for her.

Coiffure Sculptured.

Starting at the top, the make-up man cleverly sculptures a coiffure so that the actress puts her best face forward. Craftily, with art and artifice he brings the beauty of her face into sharper focus while he minimizes or conceals its structural defects.

If the hair line is too low, he immediately reshapes it on the chart with a note calling attention to the change. He then decides on the proper eyeshadow. He shapes the brows and darkens the lashes to make them appear thicker and longer.

The nose, next in line for consideration, is carefully studied. If it is too long, he applies cosmetics so artfully that it appears shorter. A light touch of reddish-brown rouge at the end of the nose will have a tendency to make it look shorter. If he desires to make the nose look a bit retrousse he lifts it with a fine flesh-colored line. Should an actress possess an irregular or too-high bridge nose, straight lines are drawn on either side of the bridge and blended in to the shadow on each side.

Shade Study Extensive.

After much experimentation with eye make-up, the shade most becoming to the actresses' eyes is determined. A great deal of time is spent in working out the proper shade, for the wrong shade of eye shadow or eye pencil will throw the eyes back into the head and almost blot them out. With proper treatment, deep-set eyes can be brought out and given brilliance.

The brows change the expression of the face more than any other one thing, according to a widely-known beauty expert for a movie studio. They must be very carefully placed, to get a real effect of "personality," and must be molded, not in a rigid half circle, but according to the shape of the skull.

If the face is thin and long, it is given fullness by placing rouge not too near the nose, but a little away from it. On the contrary to make a round face thinner, the rouge is placed further in.

Each Problem Separate.

The problem of every particular feature in an actress' face is attacked separately. If her mouth droops at the corners lipstick is applied in such a way that the corners are raised. Sometimes it is necessary for the make-up man to completely change an actress' mouth. With a few deft touches it is made over. Even the chin is shaded and made up to suit her personality.

When an actress is cast in a siren role she is "vampified" with 14-carat gold makeup invented by Jack Dawn, expert make-up man for one of the leading Hollywood studios. This "gold lacquer" highlights and brightens the features more than any other make-up. Gold leaf fillings are ground into ordinary grease, then prepared by a special secret process. The first stage is covering the naked face with the "gold lacquer."

Smoothed Like Paint.

It is then smoothed down exactly as paint would be. Siren eyebrows are applied with blue shadings mixed with gold underneath. Powder is then applied liberally and carefully polishd off. Lipstick is applied and the lashes darkened. Now the siren is ready for the camera.

Just like the make-up men of Hollywood enhance the beauty of the screen stars so can you brighten yours. Take a few tips from these experts and study your face and complexion thoroughly before deciding on the make-up best suited to your type. Then shop around and experiment until you get just the right shade. It may take a little time, but it will be worth it in the long run.

Many Causes Can Be Blamed For Dizziness

Field of Diagnosis Should Be Carefully Explored Before Conclusion.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

SOME months ago mention was made in this column of a peculiar type of vertigo [dizziness] which accompanied the condition known as Meniere's disease. There are, of course, numerous states of the body in which dizziness will be a prominent symptom. Not infrequently the principal complaint of certain individuals will be vertigo and on careful examination some toxin will be found to be responsible.

• • • •

Just what controls the balance of the body? From our studies of physiology we have learned about the vestibular apparatus—so-called—which lies within the bones of the skull and which forms a part of the hearing mechanism. Therein are found tiny canals which contain fluid. They assist in conveying sensations of sound to the brain. Whenever we move the head the fluid within the canals will flow and stimulate certain fine hairlike nerves. For example, if we whirl rapidly the fact will be conveyed to the brain through the position assumed by this fluid.

Toxic dizziness may be due to stimulants such as alcohol and tobacco, to drugs such as quinine, or to infection following influenza, septic sore throat, etc. Vertigo may occur at any period during an illness. It may appear suddenly, perhaps even while the patient is lying quietly in bed. As a rule, however, the symptoms will follow a change of position such as sitting up in bed or turning the head.

If dizziness is severe, although consciousness is maintained, nausea and vomiting frequently ensue. In addition to vertigo, eye symptoms are sometimes observed and the eyeball will be seen to move back and forth on a horizontal plane. This phenomenon is called nystagmus. The condition must be observed by a second person, as it cannot be detected by the sufferer even when looking into a mirror. Along with dizziness there is often a high pitched ringing in the ears. The attacks are ordinarily of short duration, but they may recur when the position of the head is again changed suddenly.

• • • •

Treatment of the toxic varieties of diziness consists of eliminating infections, particularly of the throat and ears, in reducing the number of contracts with poisons, in providing adequate elimination from the intestinal tract, and in correcting errors of diet. High blood pressure itself may exist on a toxic basis and as such should receive attention and study.

Parent Warned Against Sulking Before Children

Case Studied of Father Who Felt Hurt When Girl Rejected Invitation.

By Alice Clarissa Richmond.

MR. JONES invited his daughter Margaret to go walking with him. The two were very congenial and ordinarily Margaret would have been delighted to go. But this time she had planned to attend a movie with some friends and so excused herself. Mr. Jones was hurt and said so, and set out alone, looking miserable and dejected, trying by his manner to rouse the child's sympathy and remorse.

Margaret went to the movies, but her enjoyment of the afternoon was spoiled by the memory of her father's lonely look as he left the house. Before the afternoon was over, she felt, oddly enough, not remorse but resentment.

On the Other Hand.

Had Margaret asked her father to go out with her he would not have hesitated to decline if there were anything else that he wanted to do and would have been very much surprised and annoyed if she had insisted on his company or had sulked or looked hurt because he would not go. He would have called her behavior childish and selfish—and rightly so.

It never occurred to him that he was behaving in just the same way. Yet Margaret was quite as much within her rights when she refused his invitation as he would have been to refuse hers.

There is no obligation on a child to go wherever and whenever it is asked by a grown-up. As soon as it is old enough to be asked and not told to do things, the implication of a request is that the choice is hers.

Child's Rights Real.

Having given the child the choice, the parent has no right to feel slighted or to express a sense of injury if it does not agree with his wishes.

The parent who does is not playing fair and is more than likely to be turned down again the next time because of his unreasonable behavior.

Caution Required In Buying of Dog As Christmas Gift

THE PROBLEM of choosing a dog as a Christmas present is not nearly so complicated as in the past, according to Henry Richmond Ilsley, writing in House Beautiful. There are many things to be considered, however.

Most important is the consent of the parents if the dog is to go to a child. After all, theirs is the responsibility and, generally, the hard work in the upbringing of the new member of the household. Secondly, the future master should be consulted. It may be he has acquired a mental picture of his ideal dog.

Whatever you do, give a good dog—the best you can afford. Let the new master know why he is a fine dog, all about his breeding, the history of his race and why he is registered and what makes a thoroughbred.

It must be remembered, too, he warns, that the winter season, especially in the northern half of the country, is the most difficult time of the year in which to bring up a very young puppy.

THE CHRISTMAS gift-giver can't go wrong who remembers the hostesses in his life with some useful and decorative gadget such as a buffet accessory or a gleaming white table cloth, as pictured above. Or, if he prefers, an especially nice pitcher in silver, pewter, brass or glass along the lines illustrated at the left. Fruit bowls, trays and goblets are unerring selections, too.

This BUSINESS of LIVING

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: In your column of December 5 a correspondent signing himself (or herself) "Manassas Reader" asked your help in finding a nurse-companion for his (or her) invalid mother. It strikes me this person wants quite a lot for just a very little. To my mind he is taking advantage of those in a position where they may have to grab at any straw in the way of employment. I have no idea what a nurse-companion is usually paid, but I think it should be more than $20 a month, since that must be one of the most exacting of domestic tasks. Even a children's nursemaid should be paid more than that. I've taken care of children myself and it must be a pleasant occupation compared to the job of handling and fussing with an elderly, "demanding and impatient" invalid. "Manassas Reader" himself (or herself) says even he wouldn't choose to sit up with her "until the wee hours when she has her occasional attack of the 'jitters.'" And she is his own mother . . . What he wants is a slave. DOMESTIC.

"It's an Ill Wind——"

DEAR DOMESTIC: It's an ill wind that blows nobody good. While the job offered by "Manassas Reader" may be, and indeed sounds, arduous and confining, the duties required should be perceptibly less wearing and tearing on nerves and physique than hunger and homelessness. At any rate, five women have applied to this column for "Manassas Reader's" name and address, declaring themselves qualified for and eager to have the position on the terms so uncompromisingly stated.

Don't suppose, however, that I approve or condone any human being's ruthlessly taking advantage of any situation to reduce a fellow being to serfdom. But there seems to be some extenuating circumstances in "Manassas Reader's" case. For instance, the nurse-companion's duties are clearly defined; she is exempt from cooking and general housework; she has a room of her own and, as you probably know, the description of any responsible task usually makes it sound more formidable than it's actual performance proves to be to one who is physically able, industrious, adaptable and not afraid of actual work as too many persons seem to be nowadays.

"Manassas Reader's" avowed reluctance to sit up all night with an invalid mother should be readily understandable to anyone who has ever served his time in the business world, where there is no daytime opportunity for cat-napping and relaxation. The office worker who is carrying a heavy load of mental, physical and financial responsibility must have his nights free for rest, relaxation and diversion if he expects to continue to carry his load successfully.

No fair-minded person would deny the fact that "Manassas Reader" should pay the utmost he can afford for the services of a nurse-companion for his invalid mother; but I believe it is safe to assume the $20 a month offered represents just that. If he (or she) were in a position to pay more, I think it highly probable the appeal you challenge would never have appeared in this column. M. H.

Gift for Holiday Hostess Easy Shopping Errand

Field of Selection Is Wide and Items Are Readily Purchased With Comforting Prospect of Satisfaction for the Recipient.

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin.

THE HOSTESS IN YOUR LIFE may be anybody from a giver of nice parties to a lady fair who invites you to share the Christmas turkey. Either way she has a gift coming to her, and you have not the usual gift shopping headache to anticipate, because hostess gifts are the easiest and most fun of all to find. And by the way, the pleasantest to write about, too! Here are the fruits of our searchings for things to give ladies who give parties:

For the Hostess With a Big Hearty Family: A lazy Susan which is one of those revolving trays for the center of the table to hold the things everybody is always wanting . . . Another service saver is a condiment set that includes containers for vinegar, oil, salt, pepper and mustard . . . Old-time tureens are back in style and delightful for soup, stews, chili con carne, gumbo and such dishes . . . A glass fruit dessert set including a bowl for passing fruit, individual plates and small fruit knives . . . A pepper mill for the table that grinds the pepper fresh as it is used . . . a family-size gravy boat.

For an Informal Hostess: An hors d'ouvre tray with space for sandwiches and canapes around the edge and in the center places to stick tooth picks that can hold little sausages, olives and other delectable tidbits . . . A vacuum bucket for keeping supplies of ice cubes ahead for a big crowd or for keeping ice cream hard till time to serve . . . An ice cube crusher . . . A set of small, bright trays for serving buffet suppers cafeteria style . . . Linen coasters made to slip over the bases of stemware and protect good furniture . . . A wooden salad bowl with a cheese board to match.

For a Hostess Who Goes in for Evening Parties: A ping pong table that folds up and out of the way between times . . . an electric chafing dish . . . Individual fitted trays for serving bridge refreshments right at the bridge table with a minimum of work and confusion . . . A many-compartment relish dish for passing around lots of things at the same time . . . Skewers are coming into the party picture for broiled delicacies for occasions when the gang cooks for itself . . . Intricate bridge scoring contraptions . . . A good bridge-table lamp . . . A popcorn popper and bowls for the corn, a pitcher for melted butter and a big salt cellar.

For the Hostess Who Entertains With Sunday Breakfast: Brightly decorate orange and tomato juice glasses . . . Brilliant kitchen towels in plaids or stripes . . . A glass percolator—the kind that fascinates the guests and makes the hostess feel very proud of what a good cook she is . . . Something extra special in an orange juicer that runs through lots of oranges in no time at all . . . A whole set of low hassocks for seating more guests than there are chairs and sofas . . . A sectional dish for marmalade, preserves and jelly.

For the Hostess Who Wears Trailing Gowns: Demi-tasse cups of china, each in a different color and design—on a pretty little tray . . . Square modern service plates . . . A crystal centerpiece with crystal fruit and a pair of crystal candlesticks . . . Tiny bright beverage napkins for on-the-knee service . . . Emerald green stemware . . . A brass samovar . . . A service of individual salt and peppers.

For a Week-End Hostess: Individual ovenproof bowls with covers for making and serving simple menus like onion soup or casserole dishes . . . A silver chest that protects silver from tarnish and saves work when there's lots of company . . . A dainty desk set in china or leather for sending out invitations from . . . A luncheon set of plaid linen . . . A dozen peasant pottery plates . . . A cake dish with a cake server to match.

And then—because the members of the family who trim the tree have the best time of all, we recommend that everybody have a finger in the pie. So we offer this week a bulletin on "How To Trim the Christmas Tree" with ornaments that can be made at home. It will be sent to you on receipt of a stamped self-addressed envelope.

Substitute Given For Dressing Table

Tall Mirror on Door Helps Solve Space Problem.

THE room that does not have space for a dressing table can have the problem solved easily by utilizing a full-length mirror on the front of a closet door. Two small candlestick tables on either side would be large enough to hold the toilet requisites.

If there is not a closet door on which a mirror can be hung conveniently it may be hung from the wall with the small tables placed on either side or in front. The ability to create a guest powder room from so little space makes it possible frequently to utilize a closet or other small place for this purpose when modernizing a home.

Most Intriguing Desserts Made Inexpensively

Fruit-Flavored Gelatin in Molds Is Recommended for Economy.

By Dorothea Duncan.

THE most intriguing desserts are not always the ones made from rich expensive ingredients. Even a simple dessert can be very effective if properly flavored and attractively served.

It is ingenuity then rather than an unlimited number of ingredients that will spell charm for your desserts. Take the simple fruit flavored gelatin mixture illustrated as an example. Molded effectively as it is and surrounded by a border of fresh fruit in season it has become an intriguing dessert.

You will find that by using a touch of originality you can make any number of devastating desserts from as simple a basis as fruit-flavored gelatin. Plain gelatin, too, which has been flavored with the juice from canned fruits or fresh fruit juices also lends itself to many unusual and charming desserts.

The whipped cream that is thought such a necessary accompaniment for the gelatin dessert need not be used as a mask if the dessert itself is served in a slightly unusual fashion. A thin chilled cooked custard is an ideal and much less expensive accompaniment for the gelatin dessert. You will find it especially well suited to the whipped gelatin mixtures.

Gelatin mixtures, if properly whipped, will have the consistency and appearance of delicately tinted whipped cream.

Whipping of Gelatin.

Whip gelatin in the following manner: When the mixture has become cold and sirupy, but not congealed, place the bowl in which it has been chilled into a large bowl in which cracked ice has been placed. Whip the gelatin mixture with a rotary egg beater until thick and of the consistency of whipped cream. Pour into a mold to set or into tall parfait glasses to chill until firm.

Whipped gelatin and plain gelatin molded in layers make a very attractive dessert. A layer of the plain mixture is allowed to set until firm in a mold. Then a layer of the whipped gelatin is placed on top of the hardened mixture until it becomes firm. The mold may be topped off with another layer of plain gelatin, or it may be simply a mold of two layers.

The thin cooked custard suggested as a gelatin garnish may be prepared by the following recipe. Before serving it with the gelatin dessert be sure to chill it thoroughly.

Soft Custard.

2 cups milk
2 whole eggs or
4 egg yolks
⅛ teaspoon salt
4 tablespoons sugar
½ teaspoon vanilla

Scald the milk in the top of a double boiler. Beat together slightly the eggs, sugar and salt. Add the hot milk to the egg mixture slowly, mix throughly and return to the top of the double boiler. Cook over hot water, stirring constantly until the egg coats the spoon.

Do not overcook, as the custard may curdle and will not be attractive. Add the vanilla after the custard has been removed from the stove.

The Gentle Sex

Christmas Shoppers Soliloquy.

"DID ANYONE EVER SEE so many dumb people . . . who don't know where they're going . . . or what they want . . . walking around with their mouths open . . . honestly, if I didn't have any more decision of character——

"What on earth shall I give Grace Chumley? A compact might do—if I could find one for $1—that didn't look it. I expect though I'd better stick to bath salts . . . say, did I give her bath salts last year? . . . or was it a compact? No, I remember now, she gave me a compact because I sent it on to Cousin Sadie after she sent me that jar of peach pickles.

"I wish to heavens someone would invent a decent Christmas present for $1. They're always $1.75 . . . or $1.39. There ought to be a law against grown-ups giving presents . . . but once you get started—.

"If I ever give anybody a present again, it'll be on February 29—well of all the nerve! Nobody but a woman would have shoved in that way.

"There ought be an I. Q. test for Christmas shoppers . . . and deny licenses to everybody weighing over 200 pounds . . . and everybody who carries bundles . . . or umbrellas . . . or waddles when they walk . . . and all those affectionate people who walk arm in arm . . . and the gabby ones that stop to talk . . . and the ones that call 'Wait a minute' just as elevators are starting.

"Well, one thing certain if I ever get out of here alive—Heavens, is that Mayme Huggins? . . . if only she doesn't see me . . . and ask me what's the big rush . . . she's such a fiend for contact . . . there, thank Heaven, she's gone. But something tells me somebody's going to clap me on the shoulder . . . and say 'I bet you don't know who this is.'

"One of those ties would be nice for George . . . they're bright and Christmasy . . . and men simply adore red! Still women always give men ties . . . and he might feel that he'd have to wear it. I guess I'll get him a book . . . still he might feel he'd have to read it—

"I must get some more Christmas cards . . . so I can be ready if some come in I'm not expecting. If only I could find some for ten cents—or even five—that weren't so ordinary . . . some a little distinctive . . . as though they might have been specially ordered.

"I wonder why it is that just as soon as you find a good-looking card it's sure to have a 'Merry Xmas' some place on it . . . and why they don't ever make any decent Christmas cards without verses about dear old Saint Nick . . . and Yuletide love . . . still, I suppose Christmas verse writers have to live . . . but they might at least show a little restraint.

"After all, I suppose I might write notes to the people . . . still, what a headache! . . . Heavens, is that Beulah Flitter? She would catch me at the 5-cent card counter—I'll get the cards tomorrow. Still, I can't go home without anything. I simply must get something for Grace today . . . and George . . . and Uncle Elmer . . . and Cousin May's children. If I could only get that many off my list! . . . Wish I had the nerve to mail 'em $1 apiece.

"Then there's the Blythe baby . . . which was it, a boy or a girl? . . . well, maybe I can find something about the house for it—

"The whole thing is you ought to have a list . . . you just ought to sit down and make a list and then buy whatevee's on it . . . no matter what it looks like. If I ever live through this that's what I'll do next year . . . I'll have a list if it kills me. And another thing, I'll start June 1 . . . so I can be one of those maddening people who say 'I had all my gifts wrapped by the Fourth of July' . . . so I can be ready to enjoy the music . . . and the lights . . . and the mistletoe . . . and the turkey. You know Christmas would be sort of nice if it wasn't for the presents."

HAT'S OFF to the Juliet caps (see the one pictured left) that are lending their charm to sundry heads this season. Headdress Is Welcome Mode of Current Season

By Frances Mangum.

THE WOMAN WHO WISHES TO ACCENT her costume with glamor turns this season to headdresses. There are sparkling tiaras, demure Juliet and Page caps, ingenuous flower wreaths, dashing feather curlicues and sophisticated plumes. An infinite variety!

It is no small wonder that these interesting bits of femininity have received such a whole-hearted welcome. They have proved themselves fully capable of lending a finishing — and flattering — touch. They do more. They heighten the effect of your costume.

• • • •

If you have chosen a girlish taffeta formal frock, curled your hair in devastating ringlets, you've only to don a bandeau of flowers to complete your picture. Or, maybe a Juliet cap woven from strings of pearls. Suppose, though, you're a bit tomboyish in a tailored, metallic gown. Then it's the Page cap that will lend its magic charm.

And so, with glossy coq plumes. They can double your air of sophistication and give you the dash and verve and flare of a fashion plate.

It has to be admitted—these headdresses do things! They lift you completely out of the mundane. They softly and subtly flatter, and spell chic to your costume.

• • • •

The woman who wears a regal gown of brocade can heighten her queenly look with a tiara. It's a simple matter to find one to suit her costume—and her type. There are many scintillating with rhinestones, others colorfully set with bright stones, and some of plain, cut metal.

Contrasting with these are the feather bandeaux. There's something frivolous and fantastic about them. Something quite fascinating. They come in a variety of designs ranging from giddy curlicues to towering, sweeping plumes.

• • • •

Women who are short in stature have been quick to realize that many of these headdresses give them height. The tall woman, however, finds it easy to choose one that does nothing of the sort. Also many women use them to great advantage for hiding defects. If the forehead is too high, or too low, if the cheek bones are too prominent, they can, with a skillfully designed coiffure and a suitable headpiece, do much for the appearance.

• • • •

They have another happy faculty, too. They enhance your coloring. If you're a brunette, a headdress in some vivid color, or in sparkling rhinestones, will accentuate your dark hair. Or, if you're blonde or titian, you can just as successfully find one to do its bit for you.

• • • •

As fascinating as the bejeweled and feathered headpieces are the tulle "dance hats." These are truly feminine in character, and the epitome of youthfulness.

Formal Calling Card Gives Way To the Colorful Holiday Mode

By Margaret Wallace.

THE HOLIDAY GREETING CARD usurps the place of the calling card just now in social interest. The correct usage of greeting cards in Washington is very important. More latitude is given, of course, in the forms of these cards than in the calling card, as their chief attractions are individuality and artistic design.

Custom has stamped approval on the Christmas card with the name of the sender and even the greeting engraved. Formal visiting cards with the Christmas greeting added either in hand writing or engraved are good form. There is, however, more of a Christmas spirit evident in more ornate cards than the ordinary visiting card.

Those who wish to have special Christmas greeting cards bearing their first names for family and close friends will be wise to provide themselves with cards of a more formal character for casual friends and business acquaintances. Even the most formal engraved cards may have extra Christmas greeting written on them in long hand.

Some of the prettiest and most costly cards used in Washington are signed by the sender.

The envelopes of greeting cards should always be addressed in ink and any notations made on the cards should be in ink also. One Washington social leader writes on her cards and the envelope in red ink. It is considered good form to inclose the Christmas card in a plain envelope and again in an addressed envelope. The use of Christmas postal cards is permissible, but, of course they lack the elegance of a card inclosed in an envelope. It is not considered good form to write too personal messages on cards even at holiday time.

Since there is no secret about Christmas cards it is a practical modern custom to send cards in unsealed envelopes, so that they can travel through the mail at third-class postal rates. Greetings such as "Merry Christmas," Happy New Year, and Sincerely Yours, may be written on these cards without increased postage. It is proper to write the name and address of the sender on the flap of the envelope.

Cards to business acquaintances may be sent to the place of business if the person to whom they are addressed is unmarried. Otherwise they are sent to the home address to both husband and wife. It is more of a compliment to send all greeting cards even to business acquaintances to the home address.

While strict etiquette demands that each greeting card be individually addresed, common usage has made it proper to include names of a number of members of one family on the envelope.

Furs of Foxes Ruling Favorite For Santa's Bag of Choice Gifts

By Pattie Ellicott.

CHRISTMAS SHOPPERS and luxurious furs go hand in hand these days. There is no doubt that silver and other fox furs will be in many Christmas packages, for the long-haired, soft belts are the fashionable furs of the moment and Santa Claus keeps up to the mark in fashion trends.

The shoppers, who already possess handsome furs, are wearing them and the aisles of our shops are veritable fur fashion shows. While astrakan and short-haired furs trim coats, the furs worn with suits are all of the fox variety. The popularity of the double scarfs and capes is also much in evidence.

The capes of fur of silver fox, mink and other handsome pelts are worn with street length or long dresses at many of the fashionable teas.

Fortunate indeed is the debutante who can number among her possessions for wear in evening one of the new white broadtail capes. They are very durable and do not soil easily and they are as becoming as ermine or other white furs.

One of the prettiest of the New York debutantes wore at a recent evening party a dress of white velvet with a white, broadtail coat with a huge scarf of the broadtail tied at the side front. In case she wanted to wear it, there is a Russian-like turban of white broadtail to be worn with this suit.

Miss Anne Archbold is wearing one of the handsomest ensemble costumes seen this winter. It is lustrous black cloth and has a cape-effect wrap made of silver fox. With this she wears a chic, black, brushed felt hat.

Miss Caroline Thompson had on at tea a dress of green crepe de chine made with a scarf collar. With this she wore a brown felt hat and a brown beaver coat.

Mrs. Duncan Phillips looked very smart at a recent afternoon function in a dress of flowered metal cloth made with a high neckline and long sleeves. With this she wore a brown felt hat.

Mrs. MacWhite, wife of the Minister of the Irish Free State, is wearing a black dress with a border design of white beads. With this she wears a black broadtail coat with a lynx collar and a small black turban off the face.

Mrs. Davies Cheeseborough is wearing an ensemble costume of black wool with a gold thread in it. With this she wears a very small hat with a visor-like brim. She wears a double silver fox scarf. At a dinner party Mrs. Cheeseborough wore a dress of black and silver brocade made with a very full skirt and a tightly fitted bodice with drop shoulder effect. On one shoulder she wore a huge bouquet of velvet and silk flowers shading from blue to deepest purple. She wore purple slippers.

Fur of Safari Brown Favorite With Star

JOSEPHINE HUTCHINSON, Hollywood star, finds sealskin in safari brown a perfect complement to her delicate titian coloring. Her favorite coat is made of this fur in the new swagger length.

Norma Shearer, now preparing for her role in "Romeo and Juliet," has a new 42-inch swagger coat of the same lush fur, with full sleeves, ripple line back and fitted wrist details.

Sally Eilers also has a swagger coat of safari brown Alaska sealskin and Kathleen Howard, fashion authority turned screen actress, appeared at a recent social function in a full length Venetian cape fashioned of double beige satin with a yoke and ripple collar of the same fur.

Another Home In Glenbrook Colony Is Sold

Newbold Announces Deal for House Put on View Last Week.

The preference evidenced by home seekers for the ideals of Newbold's Glenbrook Knoll, "A Suburban Home Community Worthy of the Nation's Capital," and for Newbold's "Thriftee-Step" homes was impressively demonstrated last week, when this newspaper carried the announcement of a first showing of a home and today announces its sale to Mr. and Mrs. Fred B. Reynolds.

The home in question, 106 Northbrook lane, is a tribute to skillful planning and designing, so typical of all "Thriftee-Step" homes. Readers are urged to visit the remaining home at 105 Northbrook lane, which is completely furnished by Hutchison, Inc. This home is detached and boasts a large lot.

Glenbrook Knoll, 25 minutes' drive from F street shopping district, has the best in suburban and offers every metropolitan convenience. Water, gas, electricity, sewers, concerete pavements on which assessments are paid, police and fire protection are among its many advantages. Glenbrook Knoll is within short walking distance of schools, churches, stores, markets, and within 5 to 15 minutes drive to 12 golf and country clubs. Rapid, comfortable, safe transportation by streetcar and bus lines takes one to practically any desired point in downtown Washington.

Home seekers will be interested in knowing that this latest "Thriftee-Step" home has been inspected and approved during its construction by the architectural section of the Federal Housing Administration and is eligible for loans under the FHA plan.

Glenbrook Knoll is reached by driving out Wisconsin avenue, or over the East-West Highway to the Bank of Bethesda, Md., turning left and proceeding one-half mile down Old Georgetown road.

Dormer Windows Help Sun-Seekers

Three-Sided Effect Urged as Best Type.

A dormer window with three sides of glass is indeed a boon for the sun worshiper. A maximum of light enters the room and the glass takes on the color of the roof, making the window less conspicuous from the outside.

Rooms with dormer windows may have three sides of glass installed through the use of the modernization credit plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

Private financial institutions which hold contracts of insurance with the Housing Administration extend the funds and are insured against loss up to 20 per cent of the entire amount loaned by them for modernization purposes.

Across the Threshold

By Margaret Tyler.

A rainy day for house hunting but what fun. It is always fun to look for houses in any weather—especially nice, sunny weather. You will love it. Right now there are almost every kind of houses offered for sale and it is a delight to look through some of these beautiful homes.

I saw four homes Friday afternoon and was thrilled with all of them. The house at 1501 Kalmia street is all brick. Over the threshold into a beautiful and livable home. There is a center hall opening into a living room generous in size and beautifully laid out. It has two exposures, plenty of windows brightened with Venetian blinds and it has a fireplace.

Adjoining the living room is a library paneled in knotty pine. The library has a two-way exposure and there is an adjoining lavatory. The "electric health kitchen" is amply equipped with closets and storage space. No one could ask for a lighter, brighter dining room than is shown in this house. The basement is huge and white and clean with laundry room and lavatory.

On the second floor there is a two-exposure master bedroom with green tile bath adjoining. A small arched alcove in this room incloses a window and a window seat. There are also two smaller bedrooms, each with a double-exposure and a second tiled bath. The prize of this second floor is the large, screened-sleeping porch.

The attic is large and unfinished and may be made into any sort of

Dunigan, Inc., Offers a Group Of Seven Homes

Exhibit Dwelling Is Open Daily; Two Houses Already Sold.

D. J. Dunigan, Inc., is presenting today a new group of seven all-brick homes, two of which were sold before completion. They are featured by an exhibit home at 128 Jefferson street northwest, completely furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon.

The exhibit dwelling is an "electric kitchen health home" and will be open for inspection today and daily until 9 p. m. The houses are priced at $8,950 to $9,150 and may be secured on terms if desired.

Representatives of the Dunigan Corporation say more than 26 years' building experience and responsibility have been incorporated into these offerings built on one of the highest sections of the city.

They contain seven large rooms and a recreation room, which is heated and paneled; detached garage, cedar-lined closets, oak floors, hardwood trim, colonial type brass fixtures and large cellar.

Their equipment and appointments include full screening, double laundry tray, servant's toilet, coat closet with full length mirror, wrought iron rail on stairs, new type radiators of narrow design to save space, two and three-colored tile bathrooms with shower and many electric outlets. A choice of several floor plans is offered the buyer. The houses are located on deep lots extending to paved alley.

Painting With Enamel Requires Great Care

In painting with enamel, take up an ample, but not excessive, amount on the brush and flow it on with broad, sweeping strokes. Go over the coating again if necessary, but do not brush it back and forth as you would with paint. The first two coats may be flat paint—that is, non-glossy.

New American Home Will Stay On Exhibition

Second Corner Dwelling Placed on Display in Rollingwood.

Responsive to the continued interest shown by an unabated stream of visitors to the "New American" home in Rollingwood, the builders, Waverly Taylor, Inc., announce that this home will be on display for an additional period of time. In addition, another corner home is being opened today, different in plan but containing the same type of air conditioning used in the General Electric home.

This home, in addition to a spacious living room and dining room on either side of a center entrance hall, has an unusually efficient kitchen and paneled first floor study. On the second floor are three sunny bedrooms and two baths and a basement lounge, paneled in knotty pine, a maid's room and bath and two-car built-in garage and laundry.

The entire decorating scheme of this house is in new and colorful designs, each room being treated as an entity, with walls, ceiling and woodwork harmonizing and the entire house in complete color harmony. The exterior brick is painted a deep cream and the cypress half timbering stained black, in striking contrast.

The house is situated on a commanding elevation, overlooking the broad valley of Rock Creek Park and is surrounded by towering oaks, birches and evergreens. The approach, by a walk and easy steps of flagstone with planting of ewes, dogwoods and other woods trees, make this Norman style house unusually distinctive.

Facing this home is the "New American Home," sponsored by the General Electric Co. and furnished by Woodward & Lothrop. Seldom has any home opened for public inspection in Washington occasioned so much enthusiasm and favorable comment. In design, plan and equipment, it has set a new standard of excellence in residences.

Fundamentally, two basic ideas

Exhibit House Lures Crowds To Greenwich

Hampden Lane Dwelling Is Located on Broad, Landscaped Lot.

Day by day the attractiveness of Greenwich Forest is being revealed to many visitors. They go there to inspect the exhibit dwelling now featuring this sylvan community.

This house now directs attention to the beautiful and restricted development of the Cafritz Construction Co., in nearby Maryland. Located at 7117 Hampden lane, it is on a broad, landscaped lot, with a frontage of 172 feet and a depth of 134 feet. The view of the surrounding country is beautiful. It affords a vista of gently rolling hills, covered with trees and in the immediate scene the broad roadways traversing Greenwich Forest are lined with the distinguished residential structures characterizing that neighborhood.

The adjoining surroundings are no less attractive. The large site is full of tall and stately trees, the dense foilage of one, in particular, covering the house like a great leafy umbrella in summer. A 6-foot concrete driveway leading to a two-car garage enters the lot from the rear.

Dutch Colonial Type.

Of the charming Dutch colonial type of architecture, the model house is sturdily built of red brick and roofed with sea green Vermont slate. The daintiness of the home's outlines surprise the visitors when they see the large space of its rooms. Every structural discovery making for the improvement of home building has been introduced.

Its complete seasonal insulation is insured by 4 inches of rock wool and three dead-air spaces in its exterior brick walls which are imbedded in waterproof mortar, backed with parging and thoroughly waterproofed. All interior walls are of sheet rock lath. All flashings, guttering and downspouting are of the finest grade of copper. The superstructure walls are 9 inches thick and those of the basebent 13 inches thick, the latter being parged with Ironite, making them doubly moisture proof. A complete program of subsoil drainage has been effected. Complete screening, Chamberlain weather-stripping and thorough caulking of all exterior openings result in a house well protected against the weather.

Approaching the exhibit dwelling over a terraced brick wall, the visitor enters through an arched doorway to an inviting reception foyer with convenient cloak closet. The latter is but the first of a series of handy closets, some with independent drawers, all well located and illuminated with individual lights and switches.

Rooms Are Spacious.

The spaciousness of the rooms is noted in the comfortable living room, which has a large open fireplace, and measures 13½ by 22½ feet. The dining room is likewise characterized by ample wall and serving space and the well-lighted kitchen in the rear is noted for its roominess.

The finishing of the walls of the kitchen, which is of the "all-electric health" type, is in Keene cement of the same sanitary kind used in hospitals and absolutely dust and dirt proof. All the work space is compactly arranged at one side of the room and the complete cooking equipment in a similar manner at the other. The latter includes General Electric refrigeration, Crawford Graybar range and General Electric ventilating fan. There is a complete Oxford cabinet unit and the work space is brightened by an independent light.

Back of the living room is an unusually pleasing room with a view over the rear yard and the wooded richness of the countryside. This room is readily adaptable for use as a den, study, library or first-floor bedroom.

The large and amply lighted basement is divided into utility space, separated from the splendid recreation room. The latter is finished in modernistic style from a color scheme of red, white, black and silver. In the utility section there are the laundry and heating units, the latter featuring a General Electric oil burner. Just one of the many examples reflecting the stability of the home's construction is its steel-hung floor joists.

Bedrooms Cross Ventilated.

The second-floor bathrooms are outfitted with the modern neoangle tubs and showers and convenient towel and linen closets. The walls are in Mambleite. Standard plumbing fixtures are used throughout the house and the electric fixtures are of brass, colonial type. Yale hardware is employed on all the doors.

The bedrooms are all large sized and cross ventilated. The third floor is fashioned into a room that would serve a variety of purposes. It can be used as a billiard room, extra bedroom, nursery or children's playroom, sewing room or for storage. The house has hardwood floors throughout; paneling finished in Dulux and concealed copper fin radiation.

The home is open for inspection daily until 9 p. m. It is furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. The landscaping of the homes in this community, where the natural contours of the land are retained, where no fences are permitted and where the settings of each dwelling harmonize with the others, is by John H. Small & Sons.

The home and Greenwich Forest may be seen by driving out Connecticut or Wisconsin avenues to Bethesda, Md., and following old Georgetown road to Wilson lane at the Women's Farm Market, then turning left on Wilson lane to the entrance of the development at Hampden lane.

Shutters Over Louvres Help Keep House Warm

Louvres at the gable ends of the house are excellent for ventilating the attic spaces and keeping the house cool in summer. But when winter comes they cost a lot in heat losses. So get a ladder—if you can't get at them from inside—and put shutters over them, tightly fitted. And then don't forget to take them down next spring.

Guilford Home Colony Draws Many Visitors

Residences in Restricted Community Occupy Large Lots.

Many homeseekers are journeying to Guilford, Va., these days, where 100 homes are planned by the Guilford Land Co. Each will be on a site not less than 100 by 200 feet and the community will be rigidly restricted. Great care in selecting substantial families is necessary to protect the values in the community, the developer feels.

Numerous houses are ready for inspection and several have already been sold. Announcing that Guilford has been developed to fill the need of families who want fine homes at small cost, representatives of the company state: "It is seldom that a new idea in home development has had the response that has greeted the Guilford plan.

"Those responsible for this new development have based their plan upon these fundamental principles:

"First, deep in the heart of every person is the desire to have his home just a little different from any other home, either in the matter of construction or in its natural surroundings.

"Second, it is the ambition of every person that ultimately he will own a home with grounds large enough so that he may have a flower or vegetable garden, fruit trees, rock gardens, etc.

"Third, the present demand is for a home so priced that the buyer may be sure that he will be able to pay for it at no additional expense other than the rent he is now paying.

"Fourth, since the advent of the automobile, persons are willing to spend an extra five minutes in driving if they can obtain these privileges."

Garage Conveniences.

Running water and additional electric lights in the garage are a great convenience, especially for the man who enjoys tinkering with his car.

Paint Makers Supply Many Other Industries

An almost inexhaustible list of great industries which the paint manufacturers supply with paint and finishes can be drawn up. Included in the list are barrel, box and steel drum makers, the textile trades, boiler makers, collieries, furniture manufacturers, fiber board and leather cloth makers, the wallpaper and printing trades, rubber ball and flooring manufacturers, toy manufacturers and wood finishers.

Height Effect Given.

In a low-ceilinged dining room that is formal in atmosphere, vertical stripes can be painted on the wall to resemble pilasters. These will give an effect of increased height to the room.

Rumpus Room.

A very elegant rumpus room in a richly furnished home at Rye, N. Y., has white-painted walls and a white-beamed ceiling. The floor is black linoleum. Couches are upholstered in chartreuse. Red and white chintz curtains at the windows. Red and yellow leather chairs around the game table.

It's true. We cut the price on this NEW STEEL CONSTRUCTION, air-conditioned home from $4750 to $4490. WHY?

Hundreds of Washington people saw it last week. Saw it and LIKED it so well that the demand is now certain to be even GREATER than we expected. So, we have dropped our price to the lowest possible figure to get the greatest possible amount of business. That's the plan that made Ford. It's good enough for us.

This house is built like a fine car. The parts are made at the factory and sent to the site ready to erect in the most efficient manner. That's what makes the price so low. SEE IT TODAY. See the delightful panelling in the living and dining rooms—something "different." A kitchen to attract any woman. Large bedrooms. A bath room fitted with Briggs Beautyware. This really is an unusually attractive home. In fact, you have to SEE IT to believe it.

For $3,190 on Easy Terms

we offer you an appealing small home of living room, kitchen, two bedrooms, bath and basement. But whatever size or plan you want, whatever design, let us save you from $500 to $2000 on your new home.

Home Finance Stability Aim Of New Agency

Savings and Loan Advisory Council Starts Functioning Tomorrow.

What is considered a major step toward increasing the usefulness of several Federal agencies touching the home mortgage field will begin tomorrow with the initial meeting of the Congressionally authorized Federal Savings and Loan Advisory Council. I. Friedlander, past president of the United States Building and Loan League and member of the newly created council, holds out particular hope that through co-ordinated efforts of savings, building and loan executives and the Federal Home Loan Bank Board by way of this group, policies to avert the major booms and depressions in the home mortgage field may be worked out.

There are 18 members of the council, six of them appointed by the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the others chosen by the regional Federal Home Loan Bank directorates, one for each district. They are empowered in the home financing legislation passed last spring to confer with the Federal Home Loan Bank Board on general business conditions and on special conditions affecting the Home Loan Banks and their member institutions and the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation. They were also given authority to request information and to make recommendations with respect to matters within the jurisdiction of the board. They must meet at least twice a year.

Members of the council chosen by the regional Federal Home Loan Banks include representatives of the savings, building and loan industry and bank directors appointed by the Federal board. They are: For Boston area, Bernard J. Rothwell, Boston; New York area; Francis V. D. Lloyd, Hackensack, N. J.; Pittsburgh area, Ernest T. Trigg, Philadelphia; Winston-Salem area, E. C. Baltz, Washington, second vice president of the United States Building and Loan League; Cincinnati area, H. F. Cellarius, Cincinnati, secretary-treasurer of the United States Building and Loan League; Indianapolis area, F. S. Cannon, Indianapolis; Chicago area, Morton Bodfish, Chicago, executive vice president of the United States Building and Loan League; Des Moines area, H. R. Hanger, Dubuque, Iowa; Little Rock area, I. Friedlander, Houston, Tex.; Topeka area, Lieut. Gov. Charles W. Thompson, Topeka; Portland area, F. S. McWilliams, Spokane, Wash; for the Los Angeles area, C. Howard Wade, Los Angeles.

Appointees of the Federal Board to the council include Ralph H. Cake, Portland, Oreg.; Col. Charles B. Robbins, Cedar Rapids, Iowa; Henry G. Zander, Chicago; Ivan Allen, Atlanta; H. S. Kissell, Springfield, Ohio; and Eustace Seligman, New York City. The council will choose its own chairman, vice chairman and secretary and adopt procedure methods.

Adlai Mann Opens Own Office Here

Adlai Mann, prominent in social and club circles and well known in the real estate field for more than 20 years, has opened his own office in the Woodward Building. About 12 years ago he became a business properties executive and has long been regarded as an outstanding salesman.

For the last three and a half years Mr. Mann has been employed as general manager of the Federal Security & Mortgage Co., and in that capacity broadened his clientele in financial circles. He came to Washington from Wilkes-Barre, Pa., engaged in Government service and attended night classes at George Washington University. He enlisted in the Navy during the World War, after which he returned to this city and was appointed assistant chief supervisor of supercargoes for the United States Shipping Board.

Mr. Mann, whose hobby is theatricals, is regarded as one of the city's mosts popular toastmaster and raconteurs. He has written and staged about 20 amateur productions for local charities in as many years. He is a member of the board of governors of Woodmont Country Club and chairman of its entertaainment committee; a member of Washington Board of Trade, a past senior vice commander of a local post of war veterans, a member of Chevy Chase Masonic Lodge and several civic and fraternal organizations.

Mr. Mann reports an active real estate market and predicts that 1936 will be a banner year for business in Washington, possibly a boom year for real estate.

Luggage Storage Presents Problem

Cellar Trunk-Room Is Held Solution for Housewife.

Keeping trunks and bags away from dust and dirt but in a convenient place is always a problem. When a trip looms unexpectedly, how proud is the housewife who, with a minimum of effort, can produce the required baggage.

A trunk room in the cellar solves the problem. A small dry space is all that is necessary. It should be completely enclosed to prevent dust and ashes from settling in the bags. Shelves may built to hold small bags and a platform raised from the floor for trunks and large pieces.

The modernization plan of the Federal Housing Administration makes it possible for may improvements of this kind to be made around the home. Funds for such work may be obtained from private financial institutions which are insured by the Housing Administration against loss up to 20 per cent of the entire amount they lend. Repayment of the loan must be made in equal monthly installments.

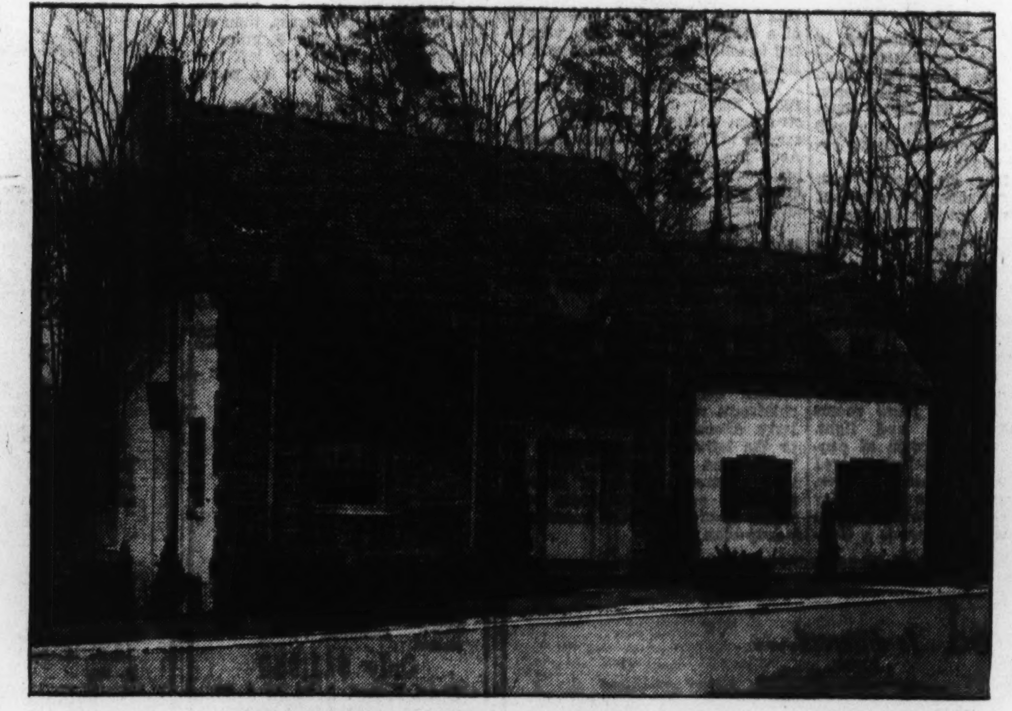
First Showing—Another Model Home

By the Barnaby Woods Development Co.

Louis R. Moss, Architect



6609 Barnaby St.

The simple charm and quaintness of this Pennsylvania farm house are happily accentuated by its sylvan setting here in Barnaby Woods. In sharp contrast to the usual cramped lot, you will find this ample 80-ft. frontage something to enthuse over. A shaded outdoor living room and a planting plan embracing 275 shrubs carefully selected by an expert landscape architect complete a picture you will appreciate as decidedly different from the "run of mine" new house.

The arrangement of the house itself is far from ordinary. The entrance hall is particularly inviting and blends with the mural treatment of the spacious living and dining rooms. A first-floor laundry and toilet adjacent to the thoroughly modern kitchen will save many unnecessary steps. Each of the bedrooms is above average size, allowing ample space for twin beds. The large room over the garage wing with its beamed ceiling, quaint wallpaper and built-in cabinet affords a perfect spot to while-away idle moments in the charm of a true Early American room. We are glad to have you thoroughly investigate the construction.

We do not believe you can find another house offering as much at the price. We invite your comparison. In Barnaby Woods you have all the advantages of a District of Columbia location and the charm of a wooded setting. Large lots avoid crowding and combine with attractive Early American houses to create the environment you are seeking. Over a quarter of a million dollars' worth of houses have been built and sold here since Spring—make your inspection today.

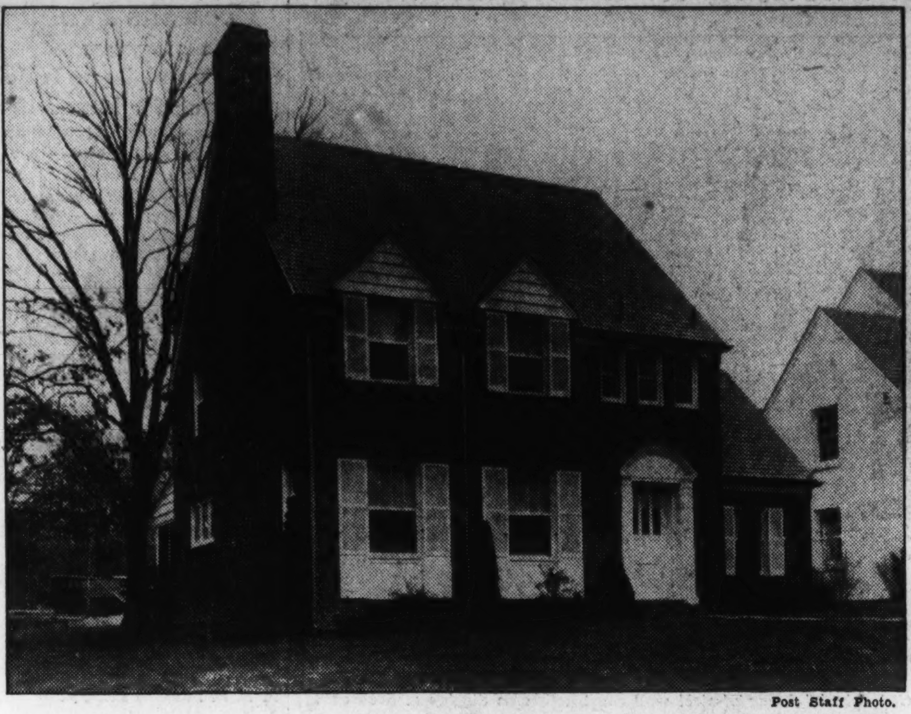
House Built by G. F. Mikkelson & Son Is Sold



Post Staff Photo.

Home purchased by Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Boyd at 3357 Rittenhouse street northwest. This detached, colonial type house contains six rooms, two baths and attached garage. It was built by G. F. Mikkelson & Son. Mr. Boyd is connected with the Department of Agriculture.

Marietta Park Home Designs Are 'Different'

Group, Featured by Exhibit House, Will Go on View Today.

A first showing of new "different" homes is announced by Baker Realty Co., Inc. They are located in the 5800 block of Third place northwest, in Marietta Park. These houses are described by representatives of the presenting corporation as different in design and features from any homes offered here in their price class.

There is an exhibit dwelling in the group furnished by Hutchison, Inc., and draped by John F. Ligon. It will be open today and daily until 9 p. m. To see the houses, constructed by Better Built Homes, Inc., drive out Fifth or any northbound street to Nicholson street northwest; turn righ on Nicholson street to Third place.

The homes are semi-detached, of brick and stone construction, on lots 30 feet wide, admitting a flood of light and air in the entire open side of the house. The living room is unusually large, with windows on two sides, including front octagon bay window.

There is a large dining room with buffet nook, entrance hall with coat closet, and the kitchen has latest equipment, tiled wall and newest cabinet units. There is a real breakfast room. The concrete entrance porch of the house has ornamental iron rails and trellis column, the front door having leaded glass window.

Upstairs are two master bedrooms. The second master bedroom and bath may be used as a separate apartment. Both of these rooms are unusually large and light. There is a third bedroom of generous proportions and two colored tile baths, with colored fixtures. In the basement is a light, airy recreation room with windows and knotty pine walls There is a General Electric gas-heating plant, separate laundry room and built-in garage with sliding, overhead doors.

The homes are scientifically planned, through carefully thought-out structural innovations, for a minimum of upkeep and a maximum of light and cross-ventilation. They are insulated, caulked and have furred walls, assuring year-round comfort and permanence of structural soundness. They are screened and weather-stripped.

The front yards are beautifully landscaped, with real boxwood flanking the walk. The location, overlooking wooded Fort Slocum Park, one short square from a car line, near a new school and stores, is a select section where semi-detached homes predominate.

Advertising Drive Speeds Building

Minnesota Bank Officials Report Campaign Result.

Mora, Minn.—A sustained advertising program in connection with the Federal Housing Administration's plan has been the direct cause of a building impetus here, according to officials of the Kanabec State Bank.

While the community has enough ready money to provide for construction without making it necessary to utilize the National Housing Act's provisions, the bank officials believe that their advertising program stimulated new building to a large extent.

Bank officials have also addressed several gatherings on the subject of the Federal Housing Administration's program, including a group of high school students.

Painted Floors Liked.

Painted floors, appropriate for every room in the house, are becoming exceedingly popular. In children's rooms they are particularly effective. Nursery rhymes, or the letters of the alphabet are being used as borders. Children love a circus parade of animals marching around the room or a border of cream-colored bunnies on a deep-blue floor.

Throngs Visit Seabrook, Md., 'Dream Home'

Steel-Walled Dwelling Is Priced at $4,750 on Easy-Term Plan.

The "dream home" of the Biltwell Homes Corporation, which had its first showing at Seabrook, Md., last Sunday, was the center of interest for many visitors on its opening day and throughout the past week. This artistic dwelling is presented by Donegan & Co., exclusive agents for the corporation.

The exhibit house is an attractive Cape Cod colonial structure, opposite the Pennsylvania Railroad station on the Lanham-Severn concrete highway. It is located on a 50 by 350-foot lot and only 20 minutes from downtown Washington. To visit it, drive out to the Bladensburg Memorial Cross, then out the Defense highway 5 miles to Lanham. Here, take the left fork and proceed a mile to the model home.

The house noted for its steel wall construction, is priced at $4,750 and may be acquired on easy terms. Furnished by Hutchison, Inc., it will be open today and daily until 9 p. m. The house, air-conditioned by Superflex, is fireproof, lightning safe, weather sealed, of extra strength and perfect insulation.

For those who require houses of different size or design and specifications, the corporation has a wide variety of plans from which buyers can choose, or it will build them homes from their own plans. For example, for those who want to start with a small house on which payments are only $25 a month, the corporation has a very nice house of living room, two bedrooms, kitchen, bath and basement for only $3,250.

The model house is thoroughly modern from floor to roof. It has unusually large rooms. The living room is spacious and the dining room exceptionally large. The kitchen is exceedingly well equipped. The two bedrooms are also spacious.

The heating is by an automatic oil burner and this, combined with the Superfex air conditioning, gives the buyer a choice of climate at approximately $50 a year.

Plan to Make New Fireplace Old Told

Mix Lampblack, Kerosene and Spray Brick.

If the rough brickwork and mortar of your fireplace is brazen in its newness—or if only part of the brickwork is blackened with smoke and you'd like to have it all dark —here's what you can do:

Mix lamp black with kerosene and spray it onto the bricks with a small spray gun—such as you use for murdering mosquitoes. Be careful to stand a sufficient distance from the brick so that the spray doesn't land in splotches.

"Drift" the solution on so that it has the appearance of smoke-blackening. Afterwards go over the surface with a stiff bristle brush—such as a scrub brush. This will remove any loosely adhering particles of black.

Black-White Paint.

It is reported that an English chemist has perfected a paint which is so affected by the sun's ray that it appears black in the daytime and white at night.

Simmons Motor Co. Reopens Show Room

Kenwood is different....

A DIFFERENCE that is readily discernible to those who inspect this delightful community.

To those who enjoy golf and other club facilities as a recreation the development is immediately interesting because every resident of Kenwood is a member of the Kenwood Golf and Country Club.

To those who enjoy spacious grounds around a home, Kenwood is most appealing because all houses are built on lots having a minimum frontage of 100 feet.

To those who can discern between land values and prices Kenwood is outstanding, and rigid restrictions protect your investment.

Inspect Kenwood this week-end and resolve to build your home in Washington's Finest Residential Community.

are stressed by the sponsors and builders; first, that the floor plan should be efficient and livable as a major consideration instead of being made to fit a preconceived exterior design, and, second, that in addition to providing shelter, a home should provide the many advantages of air conditioning.

From the opening day, officials of the Federal Housing Administration, architects, builders, realtors and others have given their approval to the plan of the "New American Home," taking into consideration the important elements of distribution of space, room proportions, wall space, light, ventilation and convenience for living. Around this plan a charming exterior of modified Normandy architecture has been designed.

Air Conditioning Benefits.

The many benefits of the General Electric air conditioning system, not generally understood, are well demonstrated in this house. There are no radiators, warm air being pulled through small grilles in the walls near the ceiling and exhausted through other grilles near the floor. The system is designed to provide six changes of air per hour, all the air so circulated being first filtered to remove every particle of dust, then warmed by passing over steam coils and finally humidified to any desired percentage. The temperature is automatically controlled by an electric clock thermostat in the dining room and the humidity controlled by a humidistat at the same location.

Through a fresh air intake with adjustable damper, sufficient air is drawn in from the outside to constantly replenish the inside air. The benefits of this system are numerous. From the personal standpoint, it has been found that the filtration and humidification of air greatly reduces the number and severity of respiratory diseases and affords relief to hay fever and asthma sufferers. Cleaner air naturally reduces housework and humidification eliminates the drying out and shrinkage of woodwork and furniture.

The visitor to this home is at once impressed by the beauty of the surroundings. In addition to the General Electric home, there are five others of similar architecture, all air conditioned, on a hillside overlooking the broad valley of Rock Creek Park extended into Maryland. The winding streets, beautiful trees and rolling terrain give a feeling of natural charm that blends perfectly with the painted brick, handadzed half timbering and rugged roofs of the homes.

Modern Decorations.

On the first floor are four rooms, the large living room, dining room, kitchen and paneled study. All have been decorated with a modern feeling, to serve a fitting background for the beautiful and harmonious rugs and furniture.

The kitchen is electrical throughout, including the monitor-top refrigerator, table top range with "thrift cooker" and electric clock timer, electric dishwasher, kitchen waste unit and exhaust fan. The cabinets, built-in on all walls, are of metal and the working tops covered with heavy gauge black linoleum, trimmed with chromium.

All the windows are heavy steel casements, fitted with bronze hardware and metal frame bronze screens. Residential Venetian blinds have been used on all first and second story windows. Specially designed cornices have been built at the head of each window to conceal drapery rods.

On the second floor there are three bedrooms and two beautifully appointed baths. There are numerous closets, all lined with cedar and fitted with shoe racks and extra shelves. There is a disappearing stairway to the attic.

The basement has been utilized to the fullest extent. There is a very large lounge, paneled in knotty pine and having a fireplace with wide colonial mantel. Next to it is the heater room, with all the air conditioning apparatus. There is a maid's room and bath, large laundry and storage closet. The two-car garage is on the first floor level and forms a wing extension on the west side of the house.

New Home Near Army-Navy Country Club

Wall Humidifiers Safeguard Health

Atomized Spray Cares for 5 or 6 Rooms.

In Winter the air in most houses where no humidifying systems are installed is much too dry.

It dries out all the membranes of the head and makes them just right for the settlement of germ colonies. If your heating plant is not built to include a humidifier, separate wall humidifiers may be installed and connected with the water system, throwing an atomized spray into the air.

Such a cabinet will supply sufficient moisture for a five or six-room house.

Hundreds See Stately Beauties Of Model Home

Historic Motif Exemplified in Kane Development at Colonial Park.

Hundreds of persons have visited The Washington Post's model home in Colonial Park, Va., during the period it has been on exhibition. This house is offered by R. L. Kane, Inc., realtors, builders and exclusive agents and completely furnished by Hilda Miller.

A distinguished colonial home of authentic Jeffersonian adaptation, this dwelling represents architecturally the true colonial motif in a most faithful manner. Structurally, it is a masterpiece that sets new standards of excellence in homes built to sell at moderate prices, being offered at $14,500.

Spaciousness, an air of hospitality and beauty of finish are keynotes to the charm and appeal of this home. It will be open today and daily until 9 p. m. and may be seen by the following route: Drive out the Upper Ridge Alexandria road; turn right on Russell road at the Y, continue on to Colonial Park entrance on right and follow The Washington Post signs to the property.

Brick Construction.

The model dwelling is of all-brick construction with slate roof. It contains a spacious living room with large colonial fireplace and built-in bookshelves. There is a wide center hall, large dining room, breakfast room and immense kitchen with built-in pantry. The house has a living porch opening to a flagstone terrace. There are five bedrooms and three baths.

The display house is noted for its abundance of large closets. There is a two-car built-in garage with connecting covered patio. Other features of the home include concealed radiation, copper water pipes, colonial lighting fixtures, screening and weather-stripping. The house is insulated. It is located on a large landscaped lot, 100 by 150 fet.

This residence is situated among some of the most handsome colonial homes in nearby Virginia and is one of the most interesting homes of its type ever shown. It is a value that will not remain long unsold. Colonial Park is located on a high elevation close to Washington and overlooking the Potomac.

Setting in Harmony.

Colonial Park consists of magnificent homes of authentic colonial adaptation. It is a delightful area of wooded countryside, providing a setting in harmony with the architectural motif of the homes. The builders, specialists in colonial adaptation, have achieved the height of architectural charm and structural excellence in its homes.

The subdivision consists of the remaining portion of the Lloyd estate, the old mansion of which has been a landmark in nearby Virginia for 150 years.

It was opened about three years ago and the building sites face on Mansion drive, a newly built macadam street 50 feet wide, having concrete curbs, gutters and sidewalks and running from Russell road on the east to Virginia avenue in Jefferson Park on the west. It is described as the highest lying development between the Washington Monument and the George Washington Memorial in Alexandria.

Grove of Old Trees.

It is to be found in a grove of the oldest and stateliest oak trees anywhere in this section. The owner, in subdividing, laid off large building sites of sufficient size to permit the construction of handsome homes and to produce in true scale, the early Virginia homestead. The average lot in the park contains more than one-third of an acre.

All improvements have been installed, including a sewer, which is a part of the Alexandria sewerage system; gas, electricity and city water.

The attractions of Colonial Park are many. It is within 4½ miles of downtown Washington, with a choice of several good highways to the city. The subdivision itself lies on both sides of a meandering drive, having a wide roadway which has been improved with macadam. While near all of the main highways, it is just off the main line of travel, thereby insuring quietness and freedom from disadvantages of heavy traffic.

The building restrictions are such as to insure an exclusive, select class of residents. It is proposed that no dwelling be erected in Colonial Park that does not bear some true relation to early colonial architecture.

Lounge in New American Home in Rollingwood

Interesting detail of the basement lounge in the "New American" home, in Rollingwood, furnished by Woodward & Lothrop and sponsored by the General Electric Co. This home, open from 9:30 a. m. to 9:30 p. m., may be reached by driving out Sixteenth street to Sherrill drive (opposite Walter Reed Hospital), thence to Beach drive and turning right for two miles to the "New American Home" sign at Leland street, or by driving out Connecticut avenue to East Woodbine street, turning right to Brookeville road, left to Leland street and right about one-half mile to sign.

Waterproof Cracks.

When you're making a new bathroom out of your old one with your Federal housing loan, remember that painted wood bathroom floors may be made waterproof by carefully puttying up all cracks—especially the space between the baseboard and the floor. This should be done after the first coat of paint has been applied. Two more coats of good floor enamel should follow.

No. 516 Minnesota avenue northeast has been leased for F. Levy to M. Baturin, to be used as a 5 and 10-cent store, for a possible term of six years. No. 631 G street northwest has been leased for John Linder to Joseph Taylor, to be used as a cigar store. No. 1227 New York avenue northwest has been leased to Miss Louise France for three years as a restaurant. The lease was for the owners, Charles M. Smoot and Blanch P. Edwards.

Colonial Home With 7 Rooms Is Exhibited

Horning Co. Presents Residence on Fifth Street Northwest.

Horning Realty Co. is presenting what it describes as a great Washington new-home value, containing seven rooms and two baths and located at 6115 Fifth street northwest.

It is a beautiful, large brick colonial home. Its rooms are large and its baths tiled. There also are two fireplaces, a large recreation room, and a finished attic.

Its modern electric kitchen places it in the "electric kitchen health home" classification. The residence is located on a large, landscaped lot, 50 by 125 feet in dimensions.

This dwelling, which has a brick detached garage, is open for inspection today and daily. It may be viewed by driving out Fifth street northwest direct to the presentation.

Whitewash in Cellar Renders Use Pleasure

Now that the furnace calls you down into the cellar several times a day, make it a pleasant place to visit. A coat or two of whitewash applied to the ceiling and walls will brighten it up wonderfully and, incidentally, be very unhealthy for any bugs that may have decided to do their wintering there.

Action of Snow, Frost Cause of Roof Defects

Roofs suffer during the winter from the action of snow and frost, so make yours as tight as possible before it has to withstand their attacks. Examine the roof carefully and replace any broken or cracked slates or tiles or shingles you may find. If your roof is covered with paper or felt shingles in long strips, fasten down with a little roofing cement any gaps that may have appeared.

Gray Color Schemes.

Gray, in all its variations of tone, is excellent as a background color for a room or for painted furniture. It calls for a decoration or accent in a warm color, however to keep it from being too cold. Other equally good colors to use for furniture are shades of ivory, gray-green or gray-blue.

Funds Allotted, Realty Survey To Be Finished

Data on D. C. Property Expected to Be Available Before June.

With release by Comptroller General J. R. McCarl of $17,439 for completion of a real property inventory of Washington, it would appear that after more than a year real estate men and those of other businesses and professions are to have the benefits of such a valuable survey.

In 1933 the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce of the United States Department of Commerce began a survey of housing in 61 cities. The purpose was to obtain basic facts in wide demand regarding real property, extent of use, vacancy and overcrowding, financial phases and other data. It also covered the density of housing, the relation of values and rents to family income; gave data on mortgaged property, occupancy with regard to types of dwellings and other important information.

Washington was not included in the list of cities in which the survey was made because at that time James Ring, as special assistant to the Public Utilities Commission, was preparing a similar census for the District through the means of funds and personnel allotted by the Civil Works Administration. Approximately 500 persons were employed here gathering data. Every residential unit was covered and home owners and tenants contacted, but through lack of funds all of the information obtained was not tabulated.

Release of the funds will permit assembly of the data by a Works Progress Administration unit in Philadelphia and information should be available before June.

While Ring's survey was developed independently of the real property inventory, he was asked to coordinate with the latter and consequently used its schedules. All of his field work in Washington was completed in January, 1934. He has made several efforts to get a complete tabulation of his work and turned over all his schedules to the Central Statistical Board, a Governmental agency, several months ago. The tabulation of statistics in his survey by the Philadelphia unit will be under the direction of Raymond J. Schwartz, who was the original director of the local survey.

So far as real estate men, architects, engineers, contractors, labor, loan institutions, manufacturers and distributors are concerned, the principal value of the real property inventory lies in the detailed information obtained, tabulated and distributed, and which may be used as a safe and sane guide in new building and repair work.

Information will pertain to the structures and family units. The canvass was designed to obtain such physical data concerning the structure, as type, materials of construction, number of stories, number of rooms, age, number of elevators, capacity of private garages, and in a general way, the condition of the structure.

A number of items concerning the equipment and accommodations of the buildings also will be included. This information should be of particular value as marketing data to those concerns manufacturing and handling such items. These probably will include types of heating apparatus and fuel used; mechanical refrigeration, plumbing equipment for running water, baths and separate showers, gas and electricity.

Heat Engineers Hears Analysis Of Air Cooling

Paper Is Read at Meeting of Washington Chapter of Society.

In a paper presented at the monthly meeting of the local chapter of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers by L. Ourusoff, a detailed description and discussion were given of the novel, economical and effective way of summer air conditioning by gas-fired independent dehumidifiers.

The paper which was accompanied by lantern slides, contained a rational analysis of various existing types of air conditioning and a detailed description of the installation and operation of the new Bryant Silica Gel System during the past summer in the office building of the Washington Gas Light Co.

Of particular interest to the large audience was the completeness of the data presented, covering installation and operating costs and including detailed records of effective comfort experienced inside the building during severe summer heat. The outstanding characteristics of this system, Ourusoff pointed out, are simplicity, economy, flexibility and negligible maintenance and depreciation of the equipment. The air is kept dry, but only slightly cool, without ever being chilly, and any desired measure of comfort is obtained by individual fingertip control of humidity or temperature.

This description was followed by an illustration of equipment now being designed for residential year-around air conditioning, consisting of a compact, self-contained combination of beater, humidifier, dehumidifier and cooler.

Upon conclusion of this presentation the chairman, Col. Danielson, opened a discussion in which several out-of-town and local members of the society participated, and which brought out the manifest interest and appreciation of engineers for this novel and simple method of air conditioning. The meeting was followed by an inspection of the offices and the air-conditioning equipment.

Four Choice Capital Homes Are Described

Kolmia Street House Has Modern Features, Old-Fashioned Comfort.

room desired. This attic is cool in the summer and warm in the winter for it is insulated with rock wool—another name for insulation consisting of fine spun glass—one of the best insulators known. Home hunters will breathe a sigh of relief when they find this house for it incorporates the most modern features of home building with old-fashioned comfort and livable arrangements.

On to 5802 Third place northwest. This is one of the nicest semi-detached homes I have seen. It is placed a considerable distance from the closest house insuring plenty of sunlight and ventilation. The hall leads to the living room with its ample space, English furniture and its grand piano.

The adjoining dining room is exceptionally large and light. It has a buffet nook, removing the buffet from the main floor space and giving extra space in the room. There is a breakfast room that is a real breakfast room—much larger than the usual small nook. It is finished in light, brgiht paper and has a demure little curtains at the windows. It is large enough that it may be used as a bedroom, sewing room or study.

The tiled kitchen boasts an 8.2 cubic feet electric refrigerator, one of the finest refrigerators and the floor has a most attractive linoleum flooring of a blended coloring with contrasting border and design.

Bedroom With Foyer Effect.

A swelled stairway leads from the living room to the second floor. The advantage of this stairway is that is may be approched easily from the side or the front saving those extra steps and making more convenient the mounting of the stairs.

On the second floor there is a spacious master bedroom with foyer effect leading from the hall. This main bedroom is completely set off from the rest of the house by this arrangement. There are two generous closets and an adjoining lavatory with colored fixtures and shower room.

There is another spacious bedroom with two exposures, large windows and closet space, and a third smaller bedroom. The main bath is tiled and equipped with colored fixtures.

The waterproof basement is a special feature. It has a double flooring, consisting of heavy cement and, above this, asphalt floor tiling in rust and green. This basement recreation room is paneled and stained a peacock blue—the effect is delightful. It is furnished in authentic walnut reproductions of early American furniture and has windows furnishing light and ventilation.

Next to the new offering of the Barnaby Woods Development Co., presented by the Thomas J. Fisher Co. and located at 6609 Barnaby street. This home constructed along the lines of a Pennsylvania farm house has a brown rustic stone exterior tapering to the north end in a creamy white brick. The natural setting of woodland splendor lends to this abode an appeal that will instantly charm the visiting homeseeker.

Floral Designed Wall Paper.

Across the threshold to find that the living room floor is of modern deep stained hardwood, and the floral designed wall paper is in a pastel shade. Everything blends to lend a soothing, restful effect to the quiet home, aided by a quaint lantern chandelier and an intriguing red brick fireplace within a frame and mantel of white.

The porch adjoining the living room is something that one must see in order to appreciate its livability. The half turn stairway at the front door presents to the right a well proportioned bedroom with a large closet and and built-in chiffonier. The middle room is superb, presenting possibilities that will thrill and delight any mother. The wall paper is pastel blue and directly across the hall is a tile bath.

To the left and parallel to the stairs, bath and middle room is the master bedroom. This room contains an abundance of closet space and has a connecting private bath and shower in a beautiful blend of yellow and orange tile.

The kitchen is equipped with every modern convenience. There is automatic gas heat and the garage is built in.

Take a ride through the park on the Rock Creek Ford road. Continue north until it converges with Utah avenue, then continue until you reach Barnaby street. You then turn right for two blocks. Enjoy the stimulating effect of this beautiful 20-minute drive from town and the restful atmosphere of the home.

All-Brick Corner House.

The fourth and last house I visited was the distinguished home at 6901 Glendale road. It is an all-brick corner home on a beautifully landscaped lot. The entire arrangement of the house is distinctive and different. The living room is accented by windows extending nearly from ceiling to floor and, like the living room door leading to the side porch, they are shuttered by Venetian blinds.

The dining room, too, has many distinctive features. There is an enormous three-way bay window with its comfortable window seat. There is a group of three smaller windows arranged in a like manner. All these windows are accented by Venetian blinds with little white knob blind pulls. The neat chandelier is of gilt and dark wood. The kitchen is remarkable with its composition drain board and abundance of built-in cabinets.

Three-Exposure Library.

On the second floor is a three-exposure library finished in knotty pine. A spacious built-in closet is almost unnoticeable for its paneled door of knotty pine blends with the wall paneling, making it almost a "hidden doorway." There are plenty of built-in bookcases, convenient wall plugs and other features making a home more livable.

The master bedroom adjoins its bath by a foyer-like arrangement and a closet flanks either side of this little "hallway." There are two other spacious bedrooms on this floor and a lavatory with shower-room.

The finished attic with cedar closet may be used in any way the new owners will see fit. The new occupants will appreciate the huge basement equipped with fireplace and complete bath.

All in all the houses viewed were remarkable in their distinctive features and their new owners will certainly be lucky people.

69 Vocations In Borrowers Of FHA Loans

So Says Bank in Chicago; List Includes Doctors, Truck Drivers.

Sixty-nine different professions, trades and crafts are represented in the roster of borrowers of Federal Housing Administration modernization credit loans, according to the record of one large Chicago bank.

The list includes doctors, ministers, corporation officials, domestic servants, truck drivers and housewives, among others in a typical American group of bank customers. Their incomes range from under $1,500 to more than $7,000 annually, averaging a little more than $4,000 per year.

The largest individual group of borrowers are corporation officials, with housewives the second largest and clerks the third largest. The next group is made up of city employes. Salesmen, teachers and "retired" borrowers also are well represented in the list.

The list of borrowers also includes a reporter, a sports editor, an attorney, a missionary and an entertainer. The largest group of borrowers earn between $3,000 and $4,000 per year.

Of the 250 borrowers on the roster, only 80 had been regular customers of the bank. One hundred and eleven had no previous dealings with the bank. Contractors accounted for 31 of the loans and 23 had been directed to the bank by Better Housing committees. The remaining five had been sent from branch banks.

Balancing of Colors Makes Room Restful

In selecting a color for a room, it is well to remember that too much bright color over a large area makes a room restless. Blues, greens and grays are soft, cool, restful and receding and are good for light rooms. Too much blue alone is depressing, while overuse of lavender and purple causes irritability. Generally speaking, the excessive use of any strong color will ruin any pleasing effect. Flat paint is advisable for the walls of living rooms, dining rooms, bedrooms or hallways, while a gloss or semi-gloss coating is best for kitchens and bathrooms.

Real Estate Personalities

President F. Eliot Middleton, of the Washington Real Estate Board has informed active and associate members of the board and salesmen that the realtors' Christmas luncheon party will be held in the Chinese room of the Mayflower Hotel, December 23, beginning at 12:30 p. m. Chairman Fred A. Smith, of the program committee announces that "already Santa Claus has agreed to be with us to help in the fun and laughter." A well attended party is expected, as one office alone has requested 35 reservations.

Joseph Murphy, formerly with the sales force of Thomas J. Fisher & Co., Inc., is now connected with the Census Bureau with headquarters at Philadelphia.

The meeting of Washington Chapter of the American Society of Heating and Ventilating Engineers on January 8 will be addressed by Dr. C. A. Mills, professor of experimental medicine of the University of Cincinnati, who has made an intensive and original scientific study in many countries on the effect of various climates on various races and the physiological and beneficial effects of air conditioning on the human being. His talk will be of interest to the medical profession as well as the engineering, and Washington doctors will be invited to attend the meeting. It also may be possible to invite anyone who may be interested in this aspect of air conditioning.

Mr. and Mrs. Larry Steele, of the Shannon & Luchs Co., will visit in Florida.

Samuel P. Marcus has been appointed purchasing agent for the Cafritz organization and the Ambassador Hotel.

Seizo Sugiura, secretary of Nippon Fudosam Kaisha, Ltd., Tokyo real estate organization, is in this country collecting information preparatory to the formation of a Japanese real estate association. Locally, he was assisted in his quest by A. C. Houghton, past president of the Washington Real Estate Board and a member of the governing council of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers. Mr. Sugiura is now in Philadelphia and will resume his study in Washington later.

New officers of the Society of Residential Appraisers, professional group of 900 home appraisers and home loan executives, are George W. West, Atlanta, president; H. O. Walther, Chicago, first vice president, and F. S. Cannon, Indianapolis, Ind., second vice president. The society added 85 members during October and November, the new official body reports.

A board of 15 governors has been chosen to guide broad policies on the collection and dissemination of data about current trends in home values. Representing 13 different States, this group includes appraisers for savings, building and loan associations, members of State supervisory departments, appraisers for State FHA offices, and consulting appraising engineers.

The governors are: G. H. Fallin, Peoria, Ill.; Edmund J. McCormick, New York City; E. M. Einstein, Fresno, Calif. (retiring president of the society); Harry Copeland, Houston, Tex.; Thomas Sands, Bay City, Mich.; Kirk Reynolds, Portland, Oreg.; George T. Wheldon, Indianapolis; C. Harry Minners, New York City; Duncan Edes, Brockton, Mass.; David T. Rowlands, Philadelphia; Frederick M. Babcock, Washington; Joseph S. Shaw, Atlanta; Paul Hathaway, Denver; A. E. Albright, Akron, and Louis Ardouin, Los Angeles.

Linoleum Kept Shiny By Varnish Spreader

Keeping linoleum floors bright and fresh with regular coats of varnish is now made less laborious by a new device. This is a varnish spreader which operates like a mop. A small quantity of varnish is poured on the floor that has been thoroughly cleaned. Then it is smoothed out by the long-handled spreader. Varnishing much-used linoleum about twice a year preserves the colors and prevents the grinding in of dirt.

Prepare Surfaces.

Varnished and shellacked surfaces to be painted, enameled or lacquered require sandpapering; or washing with a very weak solution of sal-soda water will sometimes suffice to remove the gloss. Light sandpapering is advisable if the wood is to be revarnished.

New Designs Widen Use of Linoleum

Decoration Has Free Rein in Laying Out Floors.

The use of linoleum as floor covering is becoming more and more popular since the linoleum manufacturers have brought out new designs suitable for the drawing room and bedroom, as well as for the kitchen and bath.

Especially with the modern trend in decorations is linoleum appropriate, as the rich plain colors can be used most effectively in decorative schemes, and the infinite variety of design that is made possible by the inlay method allows the decorator free rein in laying out the floors.

Not only are its decorative qualities appealing, but the ease with which it can be taken care of and its long life and freedom from wear at points of excessive traffic make it attractive to the housewife and the servants. Wax can be applied just as it is to a wood floor, and the spots in front of the door or under the desk, where shoe leather mars the finish, can be brought back to a high luster without going over the whole floor.

Nautical Bar in Hall New Housing Wrinkle

If you have a fairly sizable hallway and the master of the house has been crying his desire for a taproom, why not make the hall into a nautical bar? One has a boat deck floor and along one wall is a real ship rail. Behind the rail is a seascape "with curling waves and white gulls flying." The other walls are covered with painted canvas. The bar itself, when it is closed, looks very innocent with its gleaming white paint and portholes.

GOING HOME CHRISTMAS?

Then Go In A Good Used Car!

¶Surely you're going home this Christmas. That is, if you live within five or six hundred miles of Washington. Now—during the Pay-Day Sale of Used Cars on the page opposite the comics in The Post—you can pick up a good Used Car for a song.

¶Or, if you're driving some old rattle-trap, trade it in for a winterized used car. Then you'll be safe and comfortable while driving this winter. Many dealers will arrange your payments so that you won't have to make an actual cash payment until after the holidays. Your present car is the down payment. And the balance, of course, can be made up of small payments, if you wish.

¶Sure, drive a late model used car—

D. C. Gas Range Drive to Close At End of Week

Favorable Reaction to Advances in Scientific Research Seen.

The co-operative modern gas range campaign participated in by a number of Washington's department and household appliance stores is rapidly drawing to a close and definite announcement has been made that it will end Saturday. Hundreds of Washington women have availed themselves of this unusual opportunity to purchase modern gas ranges at real savings, with an allowance up to $20 for any old stove regardless of its age or condition—depending only on the value of the new range selected.

In every way this movement has been declared a success—both from the educational standpoint of acquainting housewives with the modern cooking equipment, easy and good ways for preparation of varied menus and from a practical standpoint in saving time and labor. All of this means good meals in the home and leisure for the home executive to enjoy the opportunity for social contacts atnd other duties in her daily routine.

As the Christmas season approaches, many practical women are giving serious consideration to the purchase of a modern gas range as a gift for the family—the gift that keeps on giving, year 'round satisfaction with its many new features, including full insulation, oven-heat control, full porcelain enamel and automatic top burner lighting. These features mean much in modern cooking, and courteous demonstrators at the attractive store displays are answering daily many questions regarding these innovations.

Stores co-operating in this compaign include Woodward & Lothrop, the Palais Royal, the Hecht Co., Lansburgh & Brother, Kann's, Goldenberg's, Thompson Furniture Co., Hub Furniture Co., National Furniture Co., Daly-Hopper Co., Julius Lansburg Furniture Co., Sun Radio, George's Radio Co., R. G. Dunn & Co., Edgar Morris Sales Co., E. A. Coe, Call Radio Co., Hechinger Co., Capital Range & Heating Co., Rudolph & West, F. S. Harris & Co., and the Washington Gas Light Co. Each stove purchased bears the seal of approval of the American Gas Association.

Every purchaser of a modern gas range during this campaign will receive a visit from a member of the home service department of the Washington Gas Light Co., to explain in detail the operation of this range and give information on recipes, marketing and other home economics problems.

The success of the campaign is held an indication of the public reaction to late developments of scientific research in this field.

Honolulu Business Is Aided by FHA

Mill Reports Its Sales as Doubled in Last Year.

Honolulu, T. H.—Reports to the Federal Housing Administration's territorial office from a mill here indicate progress of the program in this section.

"We are glad to report," J. S. Gordon, auditor of the City Mill Co., Ltd., stated, "that our sales for the 10 months ended October 31, 1935, showed an increase of 48.38 per cent over the corresponding period of 1934. There can be no question that the national housing act has stimulated the building business in the Territory to a very large extent, and, although operations in this line usually fall off at this time of year, we are glad to say that every contractor connected with this company is busy."

Use Varnish, Shellac.

It is customary to finish stained surfaces with varnish or shellac. Two or more coats are generally applied. the number depending upon the finish desired and the wear to which the surface will be subjected.

Military Hills Is Announced By W. S. Hoge, Jr

First Group of Homes Near Completion in New Development.

The opening of Military Hills, which adjoins the golf course of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps Country Club, is announced by W. S. Hoge, jr., realtor. This development, Mr. Hoge's newest, is convenient to the city as well as the club, being about 15 minutes by motor from the downtown section of the city. Most of the sites command an ideal view toward the river.

The first group of three brick houses in this new development is now nearing completion. One of theses, a center hall brick colonial, has been sold to Col. Sanderford Jarman. His home was built to order according to his own plans.

It is the plan of the developers to continue operating in a price range which will be within reach of the average "service" income. Lots are also being offered at prices which will appeal to the service men desiring to secure a site for his home after retirement.

The unsold houses will soon be completed and open for inspection. They may be reached by driving to the entrance of the Army and Navy Country Club, taking the road to the left at the point where it starts up the hill to the clubhouse, continuing through the golf course to Glebe road, turning left on Glebe road about 100 yards to sign and left to houses.

Georgia Town Gets 5 Houses by FHA

Single Mortgage System Finances Construction.

Swainsboro, Ga.—Within the next few months five houses will be constructed here under terms of the Federal Housing Administration's "single-mortgage system." The projects are financed through the Bank of Wadley, a neighboring town, which is practicing a policy similar to that of banks in other sections of taking insured-mortgage business outside of their immediate territory. Bank officials from there have approved the five projects, which call for the erection of five buildings ranging in value from $2,250 to $3,200. Actual construction will be delayed for some time, as all contractors and builders are extremely busy. Population of Swainsboro is 2,442.

Insured Mortgage Response Hailed

Large Demand Is Reported by FHA Official.

Recognition of the insured mortgage as a prime investment was not long in developing, according to Robert M. Catharine, deputy Federal housing administrator. The current demand, he said, to purchase insured mortgages far exceeds the desire of approved mortgagees to sell this type of security. The underlying security of Government insurance, Mr. Catharine said, has made the insured mortgage an exceedingly attractive investment. In the first place, it is stated, no mortgagee can lose a penny of capital investment in insured mortgages. Under the most unfavorable circumstances—that is, in case of foreclosures—the investment would result only in a change from a yield of a maximum of 5 per cent per annum interest and ½ of 1 per cent per annum service charge to a 3 per cent debenture guaranteed by the United States.

"At the present time, selling activity is noticeably greater in those communities where approved mortgagees have reached their limit and are willing to release some of the insured mortgages in order to have additional funds with which to make new insured mortgage loans."

While the Federal Housing Administration requires a notice of all transfers of insured mortgages, it assumes no responsibility in arranging such transactions and only stipulates that the insured mortgages shall be properly serviced and that they shall be held only by institutions that have been approved as mortgagees by the Federal Housing Administrator.

Mortgages Offered Given Close Study

Reno Incident Illustrates FHA Safeguards.

Reno, Nev.—A recent incident here graphically illustrates the protection provided for purchases of existing property by the standard system of appraisal set up under the Federal Housing Administration's "Single-Mortgage System."

A mortgage to be used for the purchase of a residential property was submitted to the Housing Administration insuring office here. Outwardly the structure appeared in good condition, but a close inspection by Housing Administration workers revealed a number of structural defects.

It was discovered that structural timbers and partitions in the house had been severely damaged several years ago as a result of an explosion and fire in the house. Damaged portions of the structure had not been completely restored, and damaged sections had been covered with wallboard and plaster.

Clean Leaves Away.

When the leaves fall and blow about they will bank up against fences and at the base of trellises. Clean them away, as they will hold dampness all winter and rot out the wood against which they have come to rest.

32 Stocks Pass Highs Reached In 1929 Boom

Food, Mining, Tobacco and Glass Securities Are Included in List.

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14.—Thirty-two common stocks are selling today on the New York Stock Exchange above their 1929 highs. Increased earning power, actual or potential, is responsible in most cases.

Fortuitous circumstances favored some of the stocks. Gold mines were boomed by a 69 per cent jump in the value of gold, incidental to the revaluing of the dollar. Glass makers were helped by the repeal of prohibition and the expanding use of "safety glass" in automobiles.

The potent force of habit on the purchase of "inexpensive luxuries" is evidenced by the number of snuff, cigarette and chewing gum manufacturers on the list. There was little change in the retail prices of most of these products, but lower raw material costs boosted net income.

Food Products a Feature.

Food products contributed substantially to the total. The improved competitive position in its particular phase of the industry, evidenced by various units, is traced largely to more aggressive merchandising and a more effective use of advertising. The leverage supplied by the lower operating cost of Deisel engines is represented in the list, as is the increasing use of cheaper methods of transportation.

The individual companies, roughly classified, follow:

Foods—American Chicle, Coca-Cola, Cream of Wheat, Penick & Ford, Wesson Oil & Snowdrift.

Mining—Alaska Juneau, Dome Mines, Homestake, McIntyre Porcupine, U. S. Smelting.

Tobaccos—American Snuff, U. S. Tobacco, G. W. Helme, Liggett & Myers, Philip Morris.

Glass—Hazel-Atlas, Thatcher Manufacturing, Libbey-Owens-Ford, Owens-Illinois.

Miscellaneous—McKeesport Tin Plate, National Steel, Amerada, Columbia Pictures, American Safety Razor, Union Bag & Paper, Congoleum-Nairn, Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator, Hercules Motor, Greyhound, Omnibus Corporation, Briggs & Stratton and Atlas Tack.

Industrial Activity At Five-Year Peak

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—Business jammed a heavy foot on the recovery accelerator this week and raced ahead at the speediest clip since June, 1930.

In reaching the highest level in five years the Associated Press adjusted index of industrial activity topped its peak of 86.0 last week to finish at 86.7 compared with 65.0 in the like 1934 week.

Railroad Revenues Gain 34 Per Cent in October

By the Associated Press.

The Association of American Railroads reported today that net operating revenues of class one steam railways were $108,502,263 in October an increase of $27,555,260 or 34 per cent above the same month last year.

For the ten months' period, however, net operating revenues stood at $703,752,326, a derease of $6,282,089 under last year.

Lincoln Service Dividend.

At a meeting of the directors of the Lincoln Service Corporation held yesterday the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent was declared on the preferred stock to stockholders of record December 31, 1935, payable February 1, 1936. The volume of business as reported by Charles Delmar, president, more than doubled in 1934. During the year the Lincoln Service Corporation acquired two additional subsidiary companies.

WPA Is Buying 68,188,745 Yds. of Textiles

Two-Thirds of Total Has Been Acquired From 25 Contractors.

The procurement division of the Treasury Department has puchased 44,755,745 yards of textiles for the Works Progress Administration, it was announced yesterday by Admiral C. J. Peoples, director. Awards for an additional 23,443,000 yards will be made by December 24. These textiles will be made into garments by women taken from the relief rolls in accordance with the President's plan to put employables to work, and the garments distributed for relief purposes.

To obtain prompt deliveries of so large a quantity of textiles without unduly upsetting the market, the procurement division decided to depart from its standard specifications in certain instances and open competition to suitable commercial textiles available in the open market. In the formulation of this plan, the procurement division was assisted by the textile division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Bureau of Standards, as well as the Cotton Textile Institute, the Association of Cotton Textile Merchants and similar commercial organizations.

Invitations to bid have been mailed to approximately 250 textile firms throughout the United States, and 158 bids have been submitted to date. The total value of the low bids on the entire quantity of 44,755,745 yards was $4,619,355, or an average of 10.32 cents per yard. Over 25 contractors have received awards for goods manufactured by mills throughout the United States.

Business Notes.

The third anniversary meeting of the Washington Chapter, National Association of Cost Accountants, will be held at the Hay-Adams House on Wednesday evening. The local chapter is one of forty-six branches of this national organization which has a membership of over 6,500. Grant R. Lohnes, treasurer of the National Cash Register Co., will deliver the principal address.

The December issue of Dollars and Sense, published quarterly by Washington Chapter, American Institute of Banking, is in the hands of members. The magazine has been published since 1920 and the present editor, A. E. Henze, of W. B. Hibbs & Co., has served in this capacity since 1932. J. George Dagenais, Riggs National Bank; Kenneth Birgfeld, American Security & Trust Co., and Frank M. Durrance, jr., Hamilton National Bank, are associate editors. Lloyd R. Coates, Second National Bank, is circulation manager.

H. G. Meem, president of the Washington Loan & Trust Co., announced yesterday the appointment of Roger S. Quinn as auditor of the company and William F. Offutt as assistant auditor. At the same time, the appointment of Remick S. Ferguson, who has been connected for many years with the foreign department, was announced as manager of that department.

Stock Movements Mark Time In Restricted Trading Pace

Investors Find a Few Bargains in Specialties; Government Bonds Higher; Wheat Lower on Profit-Taking.

By Frank MacMillen,
Associated Press Financial Writer.

New York, Dec. 14.—Specialties, which plodded forward 1 to 3 or more points, had the play in an otherwise quiet stock market today. Trading was the smallest for a Saturday since September 28. Transactions totaled 666,560 shares. Measured by the Associated Press average of 60 stocks the market rose .1 of a point to 53.7.

Issues which gained numbered 306 against 170 on Friday, while losses were reduced to 224 from 543. The number of shares unchanged was 182, the same as in the previous session.

Brokers said the contraction in activity and the evenness of price movements for the market as a whole reflected the desire of the financial district to back away for another appraisal.

No one element thrust itself into trading calculations, analysts said, and sentiment remained hitched to satisfactory domestic trade news and to the irregular tugs of unsettled news from abroad.

Wall Street was reminded of its hopes for the automobile industry by Chrysler, which jumped 1¼ to 86 on one block of 2,500 shares. The issue closed with a gain of ⅝ at 85⅜. General Motors, on fairly brisk trading, picked up ⅛ at 54.

Bargain-Hunters Active.

That the bargain hunters were still avidly searching for equities was indicated by the gains turned in by Cluett Peabody at 44¾, Crucible Steel at 34½, Cutler-Hammer at 45¼, Food Machinery at 76½, Sloss-Sheffield Steel at 56½and U. S. Industrial Alcohol at 46.

Following their decline, under pressure of silver uncertainty during the week, buying came into American Smelting, up 2 at 58⅝; Anaconda, up ¼ at 27, and U. S Smelting, up 1¼ at 98½. Cerro de Pasco and Kennecott each lost ⅛ at 55⅛ and 27¾, respectively. No price was fixed for the white metal either in London or New York.

Continental Can and American Can showed some bounce after Friday's sharp drop, the former rising 2⅝ to 84⅝ and the latter advancing ¾ to 131¾.

American Telephone rose a point to 155. Fractions were chipped from U. S. Steel at 45⅞, Bethlehem Steel at 46⅜ and Montgomery Ward at 38¾. Gains of as much were tacked on to General Electric at 36⅛, Westinghouse at 92½ and Sears Roebuck at 65⅞.

The financial community said cotton consumption was about as expected. The Census Bureau reported it at 507,836 for November, against 552,187 in October and 480,081 in November last year.

The wheat market bumped into profit-taking on the heels of yesterday's sensational rise and closed down ⅜ to 2½ cents a bushel. Corn was ⅝ to 1⅜ cents lower. Cotton fell 65 to 80 cents a bale.

The French franc rose ⅛ of a cent to 6.61¼ cents. The pound sterling was unchanged at $4.92⅞.

Bond Trend Indefinite.

Another flurry of activity in securities of companies undergoing reorganization enlivened an otherwise dull bond market today. The main body of corporate loans moved in a narrow range with the trend indefinite. United States Governments were higher, but trading was light while foreign issues were steady despite declining tendencies among Italians.

Transfers of $6,681,000 were the smallest since November 9, and compared with $7,634,000 last Saturday. The turnover in governments was less than $100,000. The Associated Press averages ranged from a decline of .3 of a point in rails to an advance of .2 of a point in the foreign group.

Spectacular movements were made by several issues that have been in heavy demand throughout the week. American Type Founders 6 per cent certificates bounded up to 106½ for an 8 point gain before leveling off to 104¾ near the close. Today's advance brought the gain for the week to 34¾ points. American Writing Paper 6s advanced 8¼ points to 43¼ and the 6 per cent certificates were 5 higher at 40.

Other firm spots included Pan American Petroleum 6s, Richfield Oil 6s, St. Louis Southwestern 4s and Colorado & Southern 4½s

Losses of less than a point were recorded by a sizable number of active issues, including Baltimore & Ohio 4½s, Missouri Pacific 5s, Nickel Plate 4½s, Southern Railway 4s, Consolidated Gas 5½s and Columbia Gas 5s.

Only 6 of the 13 Government issues traded in had a price range. Treasury 2¾s of 1945 were 5-32nds higher at 100.20, and the 2⅞s of 1955 were 3-32ds higher at 99.30. Others moved narrowly.

Italian bonds dropped on the average of 1 to 2 points under fairly heavy offerings, but other foreign issues held up well. Small gains were in the majority.

Extra Dividends Total Exceeds $100,000,000

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—In Wall street's front yard has sprouted a good crop of extra and special dividends. Including this week's batch, more than $100,000,000 has been added to the total of regular disbursements made since November 1, according to authoritative estimates.

Furthermore, banking circles have derived encouragement from the fact that of the 140 or so companies making such payments most paid out of profits.

Lack of Trading Leaves Silver Price Unchanged

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—In view fo the fact that the London quotation for bar silver was nominal today, with no business transacted in the white metal, Handy & Harman, leading New York silver dealers, announced that no price for imported silver would be issued here.

No orders were on hand from the United States Treasury either in London or New York. Yesterday's New York rate for foreign silver was 60¾ cents an ounce, the lowest since March 29, last. This price represented a decline of 4⅝ cents an ounce on the week.

Trade Advance Gains Headway On Wide Front

Heavy Goods Maintain Lead in Expansion of Industry.

New York, Dec. 14.—Extending along a wider front than has been the case in many years at this season, trade improvement goes on, with the retail division in the center of the spotlight during the week, Dun & Bradstreet say today. In addition to the flow of fill-in requests for winter merchandise and the rising volume of reorders for Christmas items, popular staple goods were bought ahead in wholesale markets, as retailers built up inventories to gain price advantage.

Disregarding previous trends for the fourth quarter, expansion of industrial operations was unchecked, with leadership yet to be relinquished by the heavy goods lines.

Establishing new highs, in some instances, most of the industrial indices made longer reaches upward. Recovering from the Thanksgiving holiday influence, electric output made an all-time peak, gaining 5 per cent for the week and 15 per cent on the 1934 comparative; for the tenth consecutive week it exceeded the record that had held since December, 1929.

Coal and Oil.

Although bituminous coal production was off 7.1 per cent for the week, it was up 14.9 per cent from last year's, with the daily average the highest since June. Dropping 35,150 barrels, the daily average gross production of crude oil was only 245,100 barrels ahead of the quota.

The sharp rebound of freight-car loadings lifted the total above the preceding week's and for the tenth straight time topped the corresponding figures of 1933 and 1934; the rise from the latter was about 18 per cent. The recession in steel operations of 0.7 of one point left the rate at 55.7 per cent of capacity, as compared with 32.7 per cent in the same 1934 week.

Italy Increases Cotton Purchases

By the Associated Press.

A steady increase in Italian purchases of American Cotton was shown yesterday by Commerce Department figures. During November 58,058 bales were supplied to Italy compared with 51,000 bales in October and 31,000 bales in September. In November 1934, however, purchases were 79,015 bales.

Both Germany and the United Kingdom also boosted purchases. Germany took 136,563 bales in November, compared with 76,000 bales in October and 70,000 September. The United Kingdom purchased 259,831 bales in November compared with 215,000 bales in October and 121,000 bales in September.

Total exports during November were 1,134,874 compared to 572,359 for the same month last year. Exports for the four months ended November 30 this year were 2,574,786 bales compared to 1,894,142 for the same period a year ago.

Employment Reaches High for Recovery

New York, Dec. 14 (AP).—The number of persons unemployed in the United States declined from 12,505,000 in September to 12,109,000 in October, a new low for the recovery movement, according to the Alexander Hamilton Institute. The number of persons employed rose from 38,119,000 to 38,537,000, a new high. There were 1,135,000 fewer persons unemployed in October this year than in the corresponding month last year. Since the supply of workers was increased by 288,000 as the result of the gain in population, the decrease in unemployment was less than the gain in employment. The number of persons employed in October was 1,423,000 higher than a year ago.

Bond Offerings $205,536,000 During Week

Total Dollar Volume Is Fourth Largest for the Year.

New York, Dec. 14.—Due largely to the unusual activity in the market for new tax-exempt securities, bond financing this week reached a total of $205,536,000, the fourth largest week of the year in dollar volume. This compares with $26,299,000 last week, and $22,512,400 a year ago.

The marketing of $100,000,000 of Federal Land Bank 3 per cent bonds, besides 19 new State and municipal offerings made $142,536,000 tax-exempt securities placed on the market this week. The resumption of new corporate financing was marked by offerings of $45,000,000 Southwestern Bell Telephone 3½s and $16,500,000 Cleveland-Cliffs Iron Company 4¾s. Bankers reported that the corporate issues were quickly sold.

No important additions to the list of new issues registered with the Securities and Exchange Commission were made this week. The date of the $75,000,000 bond financing by Consolidated Oil Corporation has not yet been announced.

Curb Prices Droop In Narrow Range

By the Associated Press.

New York, Dec. 14.—The curb market moved in a narrow groove today with trading activity at low ebb. Slight recoveries were recorded among issues recently under pressure. Transfers approximated 153,000 shares compared with 307,000 a week ago.

American Gas & Electric yielded ½ of a point at 36½, while other utilities, including Electric Bond & Share were about even. Among metals, Sunshine Mining was up ¼ of a point at 20, while other members of the group were also narrow.

Small improvement was recorded by Gulf Oil at 70, Technicolor at 18, Glen Alden Coal at 16⅜, Humble Oil at 60¼, Montgomery Ward "A" at 143¾ and Cleveland Tractor at 14¼. Swift International was unchanged and American Cyanamid B eased.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, Dec. 14.—Uncertainty arising from the criticism over the Franco-British proposals to settle the Italian-Ethiopian conflict in political circles caused irregularity on the bourse today. Rentes and international issues were generally steady, with light fluctuations in other stocks. The market closed steady.

Berlin—Prices sagged throughout today's session on the boerse, which closed weak and inactive.

London—Closed.

Room for Play, Games Is Need For All Homes

Many Heads of Families Planning to Make It Christmas Gift.

By Lenore Kent.

Game room, "rec" room, rumpus department—it matters not a whit what you call it. The family will have its own name for the place before many cigarette ashes have been spilled, in any event. The main thing is that you have such a place as a part of the household.

The idea of having a recreation room is especially intriguing at holiday time and many's the paterfamilias who is deep in plans for building a recreation room in the basement or attic as the Christmas present for his entire family.

There are so many decorative themes that lend themselves wholeheartedly to such a room that it resolves itself into a matter of sorting out the family's favorite pastimes until the most decorative one is determined upon. If, for instance, the household is "that way" about card playing, nothing could prove a happier background for their shuffling and scorekeeping than a wall decoration of humorously-sketched kings, queens and jacks. These can be applied to the wall as greatly enlarged playing cards—perhaps 3x4½ feet in size. Most commercial artists have magic lanterns in their kit of tools with which they can greatly enlarge art subjects. In this way they can simply "throw" the reflections of the royal cardboard family on the wall and paint in their portraits—adding such grimaces and coy expressions as you desire.

What sort of surfaces should they be painted upon? Well, it's usually advisable to cover basement walls with wallboard and this takes paint excellently. The lightness or darkness of the background color of the wall should be determined by the amount of light that enters. Remember, when you make your selection, that dark colors soak up light as a sponge soaks up water. The crossbeams of the ceiling should also be covered with wallboard and it is well to coat this surface with a very light tint of the oil or water paint you are using so that it will act as a light-reflecting surface.

There are really dozens of theme songs for the decoration of a rumpus room. If you've traveled a lot and are particularly fond of one of the countries you have visited, you might dedicate your room to the country and make it a patio of old Spain—a room that suggests Algiers, Norway or Timbuktoo. Foreign travel posters on the wall can be unusually effective and these can be protected and made washable with a coating of shellac.

If you and your family are keen on the subject of dancing, your recreation room might be made into a night club. A simple wall decoration for such a room: Enlarged bars of music, taken from a song sheet, with musical notes cavorting up and down the scales. If the room is to be in the basement and the cement floor is dry, it can be coated with a paint that is prepared especially for such surfaces and then waxed.

If your family has footlight fever and some of its members have dramatic aspirations, here is the place to build a small stage where they can play to the gallery to their heart's content. If you are a home movie fan, here is the place for your screen and projector.

Then, there are the nautical schemes that will allow you to call your fun room "the fo'cas'le," the Northwest woods-log cabin idea, and the Rio Grande theme with its cacti, corrals, Indian rugs and serapes. Your game room can be anything from an artist's studio to a rathskeller. It's all up to you. And, if Dad is willing, but his pocketbook is weak—there's your Uncle Sam in the background who has created the Federal Housing Administration to aid with the financing of just such home improvements.

Contrasting Color Use For Entrance Is Urged

Individuality is given to dwellings today by painting the entrance door a color contrasting with that of the rest of the exterior. For a cream-painted stucco house, a deep red door suggests welcoming hospitality and adds a decorative touch to the facade. Gray-blue doors look well on white-painted clapboard houses, and green doors add an interesting accent to a stone house.

Woodenware Now Used At Luncheon, Breakfast

Woodenware has come out of the kitchen to the breakfast and luncheon table. Some of the new are rather expensive, but a very smart salad container, for example, can be created inexpensively from a kitchen chopping bowl. The chopping bowl is carefully sandpapered inside and out, then the outside is painted bright red, blue or green. Sometimes only a band of color is added. Smaller bowls make good containers for fruit, nuts or candy.

Window, Door Caulking Dries, Needs Replacing

The caulking around window and door frames in masonry houses dries out with time, and that, together with the shrinkage of the wood, will open up the cracks that will cause leaks both of air and water. Occasionally this caulking must be scraped out and replaced. Look over your windows and doors and see if that time has arrived for your house.

Mummy Case Blues.

It is believed by scientists that the blue seen on mummy cases, having lost nothing of its brightness, must be either ultramarine or cobalt. Modern analyses have shown that the blue on ancient pottery, both Egyptian and Chinese, was sometimes derived from cobalt.

Beds in Door Prove Success in Nursery

Enterprising Mother Expands Room for Play.

In-a-door beds generally have been considered the prerogative of bachelor girls and rising young businessmen who live in one-room apartments. One enterprising young mother, however, adapted the idea to the nursery.

Two little boys who shared the room had many games to play, while, with two beds in the room, there was little space left. Wall beds which folded up and were completely out of the way in the day time were installed. The doors which hid them were painted a pastel color and animals were drawn on the panels.

Closets for folding beds may be built and similar changes made to the nursery through the use of modernization credit funds which are obtained from private financial institutions insured by the Federal Housing Administration.

5 Home Shows To Depict Wide Range of Types

Plan for Every Pocketbook Slogan of Displays Next Month.

As plans for five national home shows to be held in January are being perfected, announcement was made recently by the Federal Housing Administration that the exhibits will include types of homes suitable to every pocketbook.

The home shows are being arranged with the intent to show the general public the most modern refinements of better living comfort combined with charm and efficiency.

Sponsored by local real estate boards and other civic groups, the shows will be conducted under rules and regulations laid down by the Manufacturers Display Council, a group of national manufacturers of building products. The Federal Housing Administration, as its contribution, is providing exhibition equipment.

Wide Range of Types.

A keynote of the five units of equipment which the Housing Administration will furnish for national home shows is the wide range of home types, displayed in miniature, which are included in the displays. Within the "talking towers," which will broadcast information on housing at the shows, there are two miniature homes visible. Many of these models can be constructed as actual homes under terms of the Federal Housing Administration's "single-mortgage system" within a price range of between $3,500 and $4,500. More elaborate house types will also be included.

Another standard exhibit of each show will be a full-sized model home designed by local architects and built on the floor of the exhibition building. These homes will embody the very latest in design and construction and will be equipped and furnished with the last word in home appliances.

Millions of Visitors.

Visitors at these shows, which, it is estimated, will run into millions before the end of 1936, will not only learn the fine points of modern construction and furnishings but will also be acquainted with the plans and provisions of the national housing act and how to make use of the Federal Housing Administration's modernization credit plan and the "single-mortgage system."

The National home show movement will get under way January 4, with the initial show opening its doors in the Fifth Regiment Armory in Baltimore. Following this show others will be held during the month in Houson, Tex.; Fort Worth, Tex.; Miami, Fla., and San Diego, Calif. The San Diego show will be a permanent part of America's Exposition, which reopens January 15.

FHA Credit Aids Farm Home Repair

$1,200 Loan Requires $38 Monthly Payments.

Ithaca, N. Y.—Provisions of the Federal Housing Administration's Modernization Credit Plan have made it possible for William Nye, a farmer living near here, to carry out a long-contemplated improvement on his residence.

Until 1935, it was learned by the Housing Administration office, local banks had been unwilling to approve the loan of $1,200 which Mr. Nye needed to carry out his plans. Under the Modernization Credit Plan he has obtained the necessary funds and is enlarging his home, installing modern heating and lighting equipment. Mr. Nye's monthly payments will amount to $38, which, it was said, he will readily meet out of his current income.

Twenty-seven other farmers in this vicinity have recently obtained modernization loans for installing modern heating equipment, according to a report from a company which manufactures artificial gas for use in rural communities. In order to obtain this heating comfort these farmers have installed reservoirs on their property in which gas may be stored.

Method of Converting High Beds Is Outlined

As the low bed will probably remain a favorite, large high beds may be converted by sawing down the headboard or removing it entirely, substituting a footboard for the headboard and cutting down the legs.

Rub Sandpaper.

Before using new sandpaper, rub two pieces together to remove coarse grains of sand. Never tear sandpaper, cut it. Where rough paper has been used, always follow up with a fine sanding. Use only the finest sandpaper between paint coats.

Lacquer Dries Quickly, Endures for Long Time

Lacquer is a solution of a substance similar to celluloid in which the desired coloring pigment has been mixed. It differs from paint primarily in that it dries by the simple evaporation of solvents, whereas paints and varnishes depend for their drying upon a slow chemical process of oxidation. Lacquer can stand extremes in temperature. It is waterproof, can be cleaned and gives a high luster. The surface, which is remarkably durable, is suitable for wood, metal, plaster or glass.

BUSINESS EXECUTIVE

A corporation whose business is more profitable now than ever before, justifying national expansion, directed by executives so well known that you can easily investigate them through your bank, now finds that the Washington market outlets justify a local branch installation.

For unavoidable reasons over which we have no control we are undecided about the man we intend to use in this territory. We prefer a resident man, but it is difficult here to decide his qualifications. However, the basic requirements are intelligent industry and unquestionable integrity, nothing technical is involved.

Early returns should net the individual selected $1,000 per month which should be substantially increased from month to month.

Following a proven mutually profitable policy we permit our branch executives to own control of our branch installations, which to the right man, will require a minimum investment of $5,000 plus an agreement to invest a certain percentage of net profit in further expansion.

Do not answer this advertisement or call it to the attention of your friends if above cannot be clearly established.

Write, covering fully, to Suite 4612, 70 Pine street, New York, and if interested, we will arrange for you to come to New York at our expense.

Ill health forces the owner of this custom built detached stone home located in Kenwood to sacrifice his equity for an immediate deal.

This home is situated on a terraced lot having 150-foot frontage, artistically landscaped in a setting of many large shade trees. The plan is center entrance hall, step-down living room, open and screened flagstone terraces. Four master bedchambers with two connecting baths, storage attic, maid's room and bath, 2-car garage and every modern accessory expected in this type property.

The owner will sell this home which cost him $42,500 for $26,500 or will exchange the property subject to one trust of $15,000 for a smaller 3-bedroom home. Shown by appointment.

Hundreds of Resorts in Tropical Florida Offer Varied Attractions to Holiday Visitor

Resort Spots Of Mid-South Rated Highly

Dozens of Places Offer Wintering Facilities Equal to Any.

Virginia, South Carolina and Georgia Boast Good Climate.

By Roland Winter.

While the deep South leaps first to mind when plans are being laid for a winter jaunt or sojourn in warmer climes, there are dozens of spots along the route from here to Florida that offer some of the best resorting to be had anywhere. In Virginia and Charleston, S. C., the oldest inhabitants will assure you that there are only two places in the South—Virginia and Charleston. That's a little exaggerated, as a glance at the map will show.

While Virginia doesn't count much in winter dallying, still one of the things one has always meant to look in on is the fantastic natural labyrinth of Luray Caverns, where the temperature inside among all the grotesque formations is just what it was last summer. In the southern part of North Carolina the resort section begins with Pinehurst, winter golfing and tennis center. perhaps the most famous. By the way, the long celebrated sand greens of this resort are at last, golfers note with mixed joy and sorrow, giving way to grass. Another noted spot in this long leaf pine country is Southern Pines, where happy idlers mount horses to chase foxes or play at anything from tennis to archery.

And now we get to Charleston with its surroundings of rich salt marshes where turkeys and ducks abound and red clay and live oak country where wealth from the North and West has restored many a colonial estate. Charleston itself, with its languorous magnolia gardens, old-world streets, historic charm and laughing Negroes, is certainly unique among American cities. In the harbor is Fort Sumter, where the Civil War began.

Nature in the Raw.

For any one who likes nature in mood of wild; lonely melancholy, the desolate islands and mainland north and south of the city will be a lure. The spirit of these environs is still what it was when Edgar Allan Poe caught and put it into his fantastic "The Gold Bug" a century ago.

Still further south the Georgia resorts begin, where the eerie Spanish moss beards the trees and denizens of the islands speak Gullah and Geechee, strange half African dialects.

Sea Island, where Eugene O'Neill finally achieved privacy on a walled estate and now writes his plays, is one of the most noted resorts of the Georgia Coasts, but all the Savannah area offers much the some sort of sunlight and landscape.

These spots are especially favored by anglers these winter months. Even this far South, though, the waters are likely to be too chilly for surf bathing.

Tourists Find Romantic Lure In West Indies

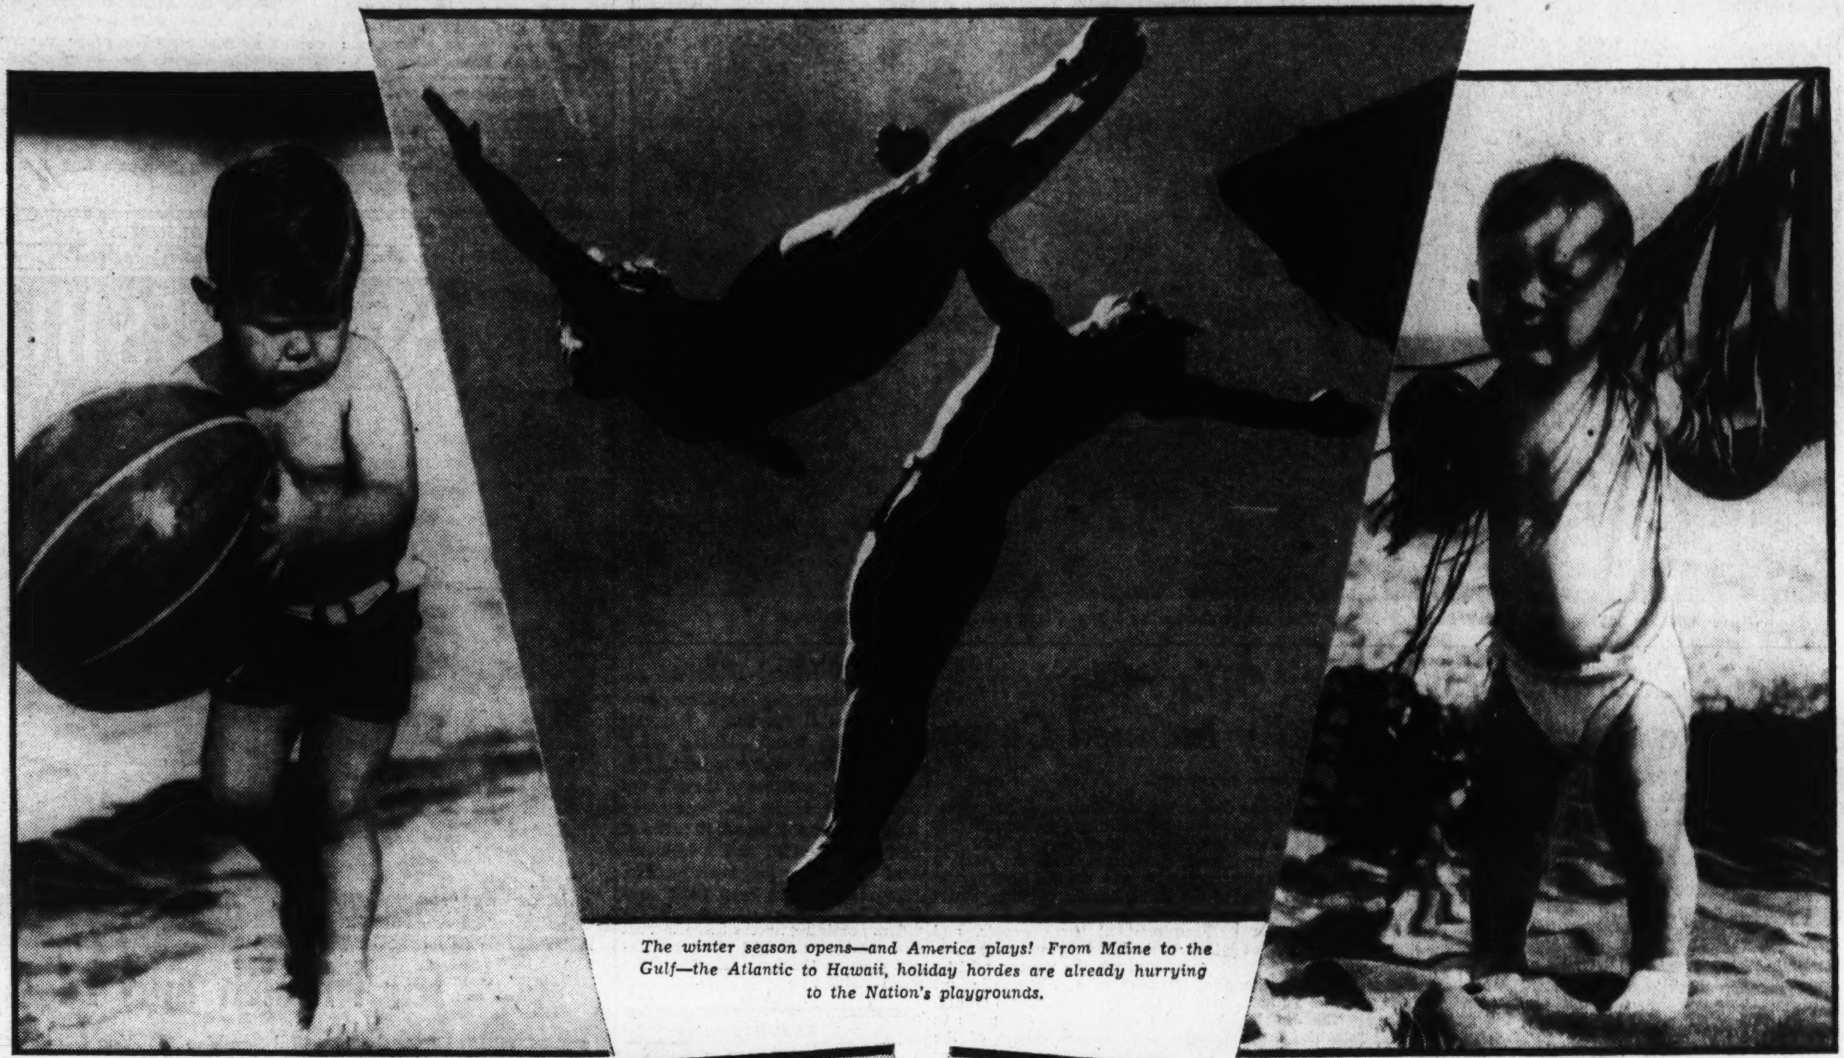
Cruise Bookings Indicate Travel Born of Dry Laws Is Permanent.

Born of depression and prohibition, West Indies travel has come to stay. The short escape-cruise for whoopee purposes led Americans to "discover" the romance and tropical beauty of a South Seas paradise only a few days from our coasts, and cruise bookings this season prove beyond doubt that the lure of the blue Caribbean and the palm fringed islands that Columbus first discovered is permanent.

Bermuda, the little British possession of pink coral and evergreen, claims to have inspired Shakespeare to write "The Tempest." On the edge of the Spanish Main, where blood-thirsty pirates roamed in pursuit of gold-laden galleons, the little island was haven to a wrecked mariner in the Elizabethan era. He brought back such a tale of beauty that Shakespeare wrote a play about it, or so the legend goes.

Then there are parts of the West Indies that belong to the United States. Puerto Rico is as "foreign" in its atmosphere as any of the isles and offers palatial hotel facilities. There are the Virgin Islands, which the United States bought from Denmark during the World War for military reasons and found useful until Secretary Ickes started promoting them as winter resort scenery with PWA funds. The Federal Government owns most of a rum distillery there and announced some days ago it was developing a new insular cocktail with this rum as the base.

The Virgin Islands are fairly riddled with caves built by the buccaneers and are typically West Indian in romantic history and coral island beauty.



The winter season opens—and America plays! From Maine to the Gulf—the Atlantic to Hawaii, holiday hordes are already hurrying to the Nation's playgrounds.

Mecca of Snow Sportsman Still Is Lake Placid

Many Vacationers Now Run to Meet King Winter and His Sports.

Instead of running away from winter, more and more vacationers these days are running to meet it and draw from it the thrill and zest that its high-speed, vigorous sports alone can afford.

Mecca for the winter sportsman in this country is still Lake Placid, scene in 1932 of the third winter Olympic Games, where in a few days now the season will be opening.

College Week at Lake Placid, Christmas vacation goal of many of the best debutantes, gets under way with the official opening of the Mount Van Hoevenberg Olympic Bobsled Run December 29. This mile and a half-S and hairpin turns was built for the games four years ago at the cost of $200,000. The 500-pound sleds negotiate it in about a minute and a half and rocket out into its straightaway doing 70. If just watching isn't enough thrill for the uninitiate, there are licensed drivers about who will teach him to run a bob.

Ski Jumping on Tap.

To get back to the program, collegiate ski-jumpers will usher in the new year by competing for several annual trophies on the Intervales Ski Hill. In 1932 Hans Becker, of Norway, soared off 244 feet into space from this jump. Novices can't quite do this, but there are experts on hand who can teach them to stand up in a very short time and enjoy skiing over Lake Placid's 200 miles of trails. Sik-joring, a sport in which one skids along pulled by a horse, is a favorite pastime of the amateurs.

Skiing in its various forms is by all odds the most popular sport at all the winter centrs. In New York the department stores have erected ski slides where the ambitious novice practices on powdered borax with an instructor whose outfit is sprinkled with talcum powder snow.

Lake Placid offers a wide variety of diversions to anyone who doesn't get caught in the ski rush. For example, there are hundreds of fishing cabins on the lakes in the Adirondacks, where one may sit in comfort by an open fire, dangle a line through the ice and wait for nibbles. Snowshoeing is not unknown, although frowned upon by skiers, and one can mush off across the hills with a sled and team of dogs a la Jack London if one chooses.

For ice-skating, Lake Placid's facilities are unsurpassed. The great Olympic rink, 98 by 197 feet, is artificially frozen within the arena, so that the ice sheet may be always in perfect condition irrespective of the weather. It is here that figure skating, called the most beautiful of all sports, can be seen at its best as American and foreign stars curvet in intricate patterns at colorful ice carnivals throughout the season.

Christmas Song.

The world's most famous Christmas song, "Silent Night, Holy Night," was written and the music composed on Christmas Eve, 1818, by Joseph Mohr, the minister, and Franz Gruber, the organist, of the little church at Oberndorf in Austria.

Estremadura Historic.

Estremadura, an inland province of Spain, produced many of the men who became famous for conquest and exploration in the West Indies, Mexico and South America. Among them were Francisco Pizarro, who conquered Peru; Pedro de Valdivia, who gave Chile to the Spanish crown; Hernando Cortez, who subdued Mexico; Vasco Nunez de Balboa, who discovered the Pacific Ocean; Sebastian de Benalcazar, who won Colombia and Ecuador; Hernando de Soto, who discovered the Mississippi, and Diego de Almago, the partner of Pizarro in plundering the Incas.

Modern Japan Walks in Shoes

Wooden clogs and straw sandals remain the most common footgear for Japanese wearing the traditional garb, but when the native sandals and Western-style shoes march side by side in the downtown streets of Tokyo, it is only another indication of the amazing way in which Japan has adopted modern methods while she continues in her old, revered customs.

Modern Japan goes ski-jumping and mountain climbing in the approved European fashion, while ancient Japan holds tea ceremony, Yet Japan, whether it follows the ancient or modern tradition. has a common meeting ground in its appreciation of beauty,

Not only during cherry blossom time; but throughout the year, whatever the season, the Japanese take a keen delight in the management of their gardens, in cherished vistas of Mount Fuji, and frequent excursions to the country in happy groups to enjoy the shrines for which Japan is famous.

Christmas Tree.

In Italy, where Christmas trees are seldom seen, the custom of the Presepio, started by St. Francis of Assisi, is the outward sign of Christmas. Churches and homes alike then have their little life-like reproductions of the inn where Jesus was born, its cattle, the wise men, and the babe in the manger.

Scandinavia is the home of the Yule log, for these northern peoples used to kindle huge bonfires at the winter solstice to honor the god Thor, and the bringing home of the log was once a religious ceremony.

Latin Quarter Is Most Alluring Spot in Tampa

Ybor City Keeps Old-World Tone Along With a Touch of Havana.

To Washingtonians, who say farewell to the sun when winter comes and spring seems so far ahead, St. Petersburg (Fla.,) seems like a magic city. In this town the sun shines so much that a newspaper there gives away its newspapers on those days when the sun fails to shine—and you can count on your fingers the losing days.

St. Petersburg is one of the show spots of Florida's west coast—a community of 40,000 with more than 100,000 annual visitors. Almost entirely surrounded by the waters of the bay and the Gulf of Mexico, St. Petersburg has a 33-mile shore line, with ideal beaches for bathing and a recreation pier which was built by the municipality at a cost of more than $2,000,000.

Pier Runs Far Out.

Extending far out into Tampa Bay, it affords parking facilities for more than a thousand cars (Washingtonians will love that!) and it also provides facilities for picnics, card parties and dances.

Gandy Bridge, which connects St. Petersburg and Tampa, is the longest automobile bridge in the world—and at the other end is Tampa, the western terminus of the famous Tamiami trail (remember the song, "The Tamiami Trail," of ten years ago?).

Tampa's climate is as delightful as that of southern Florida, and its wide variety of sports, including some of the most famous golf links in the State, makes it extremely popular with visitors.

The luxuriousness of its hotels, theaters, playhouses, clubs and countless attractions force the visitor to forget that Tampa, aside from being a mecca for tourists, is a thriving industrial city.

Latin Section Unique.

By far the most unique and glamorous section of Tampa or of all the West Coast is Ybor City, the Latin quarter of Tampa. Here homesick emigres have built a city that combines, in intriguing proportions, the Old World stateliness and romance of Madrid and Seville with the carefree, colorful life of Havana. It is Ybor City that the visitor to Tampa spends his most delightful hours.

No visit to Florida's west coast would be complete without a period spent in Clearwater, Venice, Fort Myers and other beautiful cities along this romantic coast. Too, the visitor will desire to see Pensacola, and, possibly, drive over the Old Spanish Trail to New Orleans before returning north. Many west coast visitors leave Florida for a few days each year during the famous New Orleans Mardi Gras, which makes all New Orleans a holiday city.

Wassailing.

In the west of England the ancient Christmas custom of "wassailing" is still observed. The word is an Anglo-Saxon one meaning "be healthy," and the ceremony of "wassailing" entails upon carol singers the carrying of a bowl of spiced beer to be sampled with cakes and apples at each home visited.

St. Augustine Has History Of Rich Past

City Near Jacksonville Named in Legend of Ponce de Leon.

Beach at Daytona Rated as Finest in the Nation.

The east coast of Florida—a beach which extends from Jacksonville, near the Georgia State line, to Miami and Coral Gables at the tip of the peninsula—is now preparing for the most successful winter season in years, and this beautiful country is attracting thousands and thousands of winter visitors, men and women who seek the sun when winter's icy hand grips the north.

For variety, no section of the United States offers such holiday opportunities, with the visitor able to choose not only from hundreds of well-known resort centers of every description, but also to choose either "historical" settings such as St. Augustine, which was an established city before Peter Minuet purchased Manhattan Island from the Indians, or extremely modern settings such as Miami and Coral Gables, which have literally grown to fame during the last three decades.

First Tropical Touch.

The first suggestion of the tropics is found in Jacksonville, where bathing and driving beaches, picturesque parks, public playgrounds and the accessibility of numerous streams where fish abound entice the visitor. Aside from its historic background, Jacksonville is a "year-round" playground, and an important industrial city as well. Whether one reaches this delightful city by air, rail, yacht, coast steamer or automobile, there is presented a delightful city fortunately located with abundant hotel accommodations which are easily the rivals of any in the United States.

Just south of Jacksonville is St. Augustine, long a popular winter resort, and famous as the oldest city in America. St. Augustine was founded by the Spanish explorer, Aviles, in 1565, and for 200 years it was governed by the Spanish. Fort Marion is the only mediaeval fortification in the Americas.

An interesting feature of this city is the so-called "Fountain of Youth." Legend has it that when Ponce de Leon, the explorer, visited here the Indians led him to this fountain, explaining that its waters would give eternal youth to anyone who drank there. Excellent hotels and facilities for all sports are available.

Daytona Beach Prized.

Daytona Beach, the scene of record-breaking automobile speed trials, has one of the most wonderful beaches in the world and here Don Campbell, the English driver, brought his racer, the Bluebird III, to establish a world's record.

Farther south, Orlando, Fort Pierce, Palm Beach, Fort Lauderdale, Miami Beach and Miami are well known to the winter traveler. All sports, glorious sunshine, white beaches and blue skies combine to make these resorts world famous.

Straw Displayed At Yule Feasts By Devout Poles

Wisp of Hay on Tablecloth Is Reminder of Christ's Birth in Manger.

Warsaw, Poland.—When you enter a Polish home on Christmas your host greets you with the words, "Jesus Christ be praised!" to which you respond, "Forever and forever!" When you come to sit down to the festive board, you will always see a wisp of straw peeping out from beneath the tablecloth, straw to remind all that Jesus was born in a stable. No Polish Christmas table, poor or rich, would be laid without this simple emblem of the Nativity.

The bread on the Christmas table is cut to resemble the sacrament bread in church, another illustration that to the Pole Christmas is a holy as well as a festive season. Later the head of the family offers to each guest the Christmas wafer, which has been blessed by the priest at church, and only after the name of Jesus has been again invoked do the merry hours begin.

Men and boys go around on Christmas Day caroling, as in other countries, but in Poland they dress in biblical robes and carry miniature cribs lit with candles and other quaint representations of the story of Bethlehem. In the theaters on this day it is possible to see medieval mystery plays, which have been given for centuries and still retain the childlike and rustic simplicity of bygone ages. The most striking thing to an American at a Polish Christmas is its solemn religious character, which holds the minds of the people more than the exchange of gifts.

Continuing in Its Role of Trail Blazer for Neighbors.

$500,000 Program Backs Col. Doherty's Faith in Place.

Coral Gables, Fla., Dec. 14.—Prepared to hang up new records in the race to entertain winter visitors, the de luxe capitals of recreation in Greater Miami are putting the finishing touches on a sports and social program expected to regale an avalanche of sun seekers.

As unsettled conditions abroad concentrate attention on American playgrounds, this city, continuing its role of trail blazer for Florida resorts, is preparing for an intensive five months, keeping its glittering amusement machinery in motion for a throng expected to exceed 2,000,000 this year.

With the program centered around the 75-event schedule planned for the Florida Year-Round Clubs by Col. Henry L. Doherty, president, the curtain will go up with the annual Miami Biltmore $10.000 open championship, the world's richest golf classic.

Backing his faith in Florida as the hub of international resortdom with a $500.000 program, Col. Doherty has again this season demonstrated his leadership in the State's winter activities.

Included on this calendar of major sports events will be golf and tennis tourneys, horse and dog racing, aquatic meets, angling tournaments, the annual All-American air meet, football, baseball, jaialai, the famous Spanish game; yacht racing and polo. In addition there will be the informal activities that circle the Miami resort clock and including swimming, fishing, riding, dancing beneath the palms and scores of other recreations.

Designed to provide winter visitors with a rounded program of social and sports activities, the winter calendar for the Florida Year-Round Clubs, which include the Miami Biltmore Country Club, the Key Largo Anglers Club and the Roney Plaza Cabana Sun Club, will continue into the late spring.

Always a colorful spectacle, the Miami Biltmore $10,000 open will be brightened by Sam Parks, jr., 26-year-old National Open Golf champion, who also is heading the pro staff at the Miami Biltmore Country Club.

'Athens of Florida' Keeps Open House

With a wider variety of sports and social events scheduled throughout the winter, DeLand, "the Athens of Florida," has already begun keeping open house on its orange-clad hills for a host of winter visitors.

Wise Northerners who have learned the simple trick of turning the long, cold, dreary months of mid-winter into the shortest months of the year by going South are arriving in larger numbers than ever before.

Special entertainments planned for the winter visitors include symphony concerts, Stetson forum meetings, tourist dances, socials and club meetings, motorcades, intercollegiate athletic events at the Stetson University, theatricals and bandshell programs.

Juices Served Free.

To make certain that his guests will enjoy the pleasures and benefits of native orange and grape fruit juices Henry W. Haynes, proprietor of the Princess Issena Hotel, Dayton Beach, Fla., serves these juices free to guests all winter.

His guests drink 1.500 gallons of orange juise, 500 gallons of grapefruit juice, to say nothing of 500 gallons of tomato juice in the course of a season.

Crowds gather on Florida's sunlit terraces. This scene shows the Roney Plaza Cabana Club at lunch time.

Orlando Counts On Large Gain In Vacationers

De Witt Miller, of Chamber of Commerce There, Predicts 25 Per Cent.

Orlando, Fla., Dec. 14. — Their winter vacation plans keyed to the buoyant tempo of the Nation's new prosperity, sunshine seekers from every State in the Union are converging upon Orlando to participate in a program of sports and recreations that will run the gamut from golf to lawn bowling.

DeWitt Miller, president of the Greater Orlando Chamber of Commerce, predicts that the winter population this year will show a 25 per cent increase.

Utilizing all of its bountiful recreational resources, this lake-dotted city in the heart of one of Florida's most picturesque resort sections, is bidding for the patronage of the southbound visitors with a card of major sport events that will be launched with the Orlando $2,000 open golf tournament. Among links stars who will shoot for top money in this event are Sam Parks, jr., National Open champion, and Johnny Revolta, national professional champion.

Arrival of the new year will be marked by an Olympic stars aquatic meet, January 3 and 4, which will be staged in one of the 33 lakes here. In the list of nationally famous swimmers and divers invited to take part are the Kompa girls, Dorothea Dickinson, Marshall Wayne, Ralph Flanagan and Kathryn Rawls, Fort Lauderdale's stellar daughter.

St. Petersburg Offers Glamour For Socially Inclined Guests

St. Petersburg, Fla., Dec. 14.—As never before St. Petersburg this season will enhance its reputation as "The Platinum Peninsula" by the glamour of its social functions, its smart sports events and the program of entertainment for the great congregation of Northerners which gather here to worship at the shrine of the sun.

Established for the winter in the hotels and in their ornate estates on the north shore, in the Jungle, Pasadena and Snell Isle, the fashionable crowd will make the Christmas holidays sparkle with particular brilliance as formal dinner dances open the de luxe bay shore hostelries, and the welkin rings with gay dances and parties at the clubs, cabana colonies, smart cafes and aboard yachts.

Prominent at these events, and others scheduled in unbroken sequence, through the winter, will be the military and diplomatic set from the Army, Navy, Coast Guard, Air and State Department units in this locality, and members of the artists' colony, including prominent writers, painters, musicians and stage folk.

St. Petersburg's hotels, some of them among the most luxuriously appointed in the world, advanced their opening dates to admit the unprecedented influx of sun worshipers which have stolen a march this season on wily King Winter.

Kloeppel Alters Hotel.

Jacksonville, Fla., Dec. 14.—Robert Kloeppel, hotel owner and operator here, who purchased the El Verano Hotel, of West Palm Beach, and changed its name to Hotel George Washington, has announced the completion of changes and improvements in that hotel which will make it an outstanding unit of his "Kloeppel Hotels," the George Washington, Mayflower and Flagler of Jacksonville, and the new George Washington of West Palm Beach.

Sea Island Riders.

Horseback riding is attaining new importance at Sea Island, Ga., this season with many Cloister guests and Sea Island residents riding frequently. In addition to the miles of picturesque bridle paths already winding over the island, 20 miles of new pine-carpeted and palm-bordered trails have just been marked. New stables have been built near Frederica, making it possible for riders obtaining horses there to visit the nearby ruins and shrines without making the long ride from the main stables.

Ormond Beach on Ocean Short Way From Daytona

Ormond Beach, Fla., Dec. 14.—On the Atlantic Ocean, less than 50 miles from St. Augustone and adjoining Daytona, is Ormond Beach, proclaimed by many visitors as Florida's ideal winter playground. This resort has, for a number of years, attracted prominent social and business leaders from all parts of the country. Here is located the Hotel Ormond, with cottages, and opposite this famous hostelry is the Casements, winter home of Mr. John D. Rockefeller, sr.

Christmas Market.

In Nuremberg, the real old-fashioned Christmas city of Germany, a Christ-child market, for toys and Christmas gifts, is held. It has taken place for the last 238 years.

West Palm Beach Opening Earlier

West Palm Beach, Fla., Dec. 14. Snow-dodgers are flocking to West Palm Beach earlier than ever this season. According to railroad, hotel, steamship and bus men, bookings will average more than 20 per cent better than last year when the population here was boosted nearly 20,000 by the influx of winter residents.

The most complete program ever provided visitors has been scheduled by the recreation commission and other organizations. The annual game fishing contest, already open; second annual Sailfish Derby in late January; Washington's Birthday Regatta; Seminole Sun Dance in March

Whitman-by-the-Sea Has Own Bathing Beach

Announcement has been made of the formal opening of the Whitman-by-the-Sea, the largest and most elaborately planned hotel to be built in Miami Beach for some years.

The site is an entire block on the ocean front at Thirty-third street, private bathing beach. The grounds are completely landscaped to give a fitting tropical setting.

Wandering Souls Entertained.

It is still customary in Ireland to burn candles in the windows and set cups and saucers on the table for the entertainment of wandering souls from purgatory, who are believed to enjoy coming home for Christmas.

A New MIAMI BEACH is calling you!

When mid-winter cares begin to pile up, there's an overnight escape to tropic sunshine — to warm surf and golden sand — to whispering palms and silver moonlight — to gay outdoor games and pastimes made doubly enjoyable by contrast with ice-bound Northern winters. Golf on palm fringed fairways, Big Game Fishing in the indigo Gulf Stream, Polo, Riding, Tennis, Horse and Dog Racing, Sailing and Park Sports, keep you out in the warm clean air. It's a profitable investment in health and well-being for the entire family.

★ For More People Than Ever Before

You need not be a millionaire. More than $8,000,000 in new construction this year has greatly increased facilities in every class, ample to suit every need and every vacation budget. Efficiency apartments are as low as $300 for the season, completely equipped. Rates for larger units and furnished homes are equally attractive. Hotels and apartments offer every class of accommodation at special daily, weekly and monthly rates. Plan to make this year a Miami Beach year. You'll find it economical, mentally and physically refreshing. It's the chance you've always wanted to 'play hooky' from gloomy old King Winter's rigorous school.

MIAMI--Where the Sun is waiting for You . . . .

Miami presents a varied face to her winter visitors: gay and sophisticated, or quiet and restful to frayed nerves. Strenuous outdoor games for the athletic, and champions in action for those who prefer to watch. Smart and fashionable, or ideal for beach-combing laziness. Social, cultural, educational—Miami's phases are almost unlimited. But to all she offers a fascinating composite of carefree pastimes, healthful climate, stimulating exercise, warm golden sun and rolling surf—things that make life really worth living.

Vacation Costs Are Moderate

Yet for all her attractions, Miami's vacation and year-'round living costs are surprisingly moderate—are much the same as for comparable standards in other metropolitan areas. Facilities for 150,000 visitors assure competitive rates. More than 200 hotels range from $2 to $10. Over 5,000 furnished homes and 10,000 completely equipped apartments are from $200 up for the six months season. Come now—swift and modern carriers bring you here within a few short hours to join the gay throngs who are taking their place in the Sunshine Capital of America.

Castles in Spain..

For all their fame, legendary "Castles in Spain" have their limitations. Where could you find one, for instance, with its own golden beach and a shimmering tropic sea at its very doorstep? With whispering palms touched by magic moonlight? With the parade of sunshine pastimes and carefree diversions in Miami Beach from which to choose your entertainment? Here, at the Pancoast is a "Castle in Spain" that looks the part . . . light, airy, Spanish architecture, patios and terraces, decorative tile. Traditions of unexcelled cuisine and friendly service add the final touches of practical well-being to glamorous vacation days. Select clientele assures you of congenial companions for gay days and tropic nights. After all, "Castles in Spain" are only legendary . . . but the Pancoast is actual . . . is alive! So much so that it is advisable to write or wire well in advance for reservations.

Modern Customs Brought to Isle of Majorca by Tourists

Jewel of Mediterranean Welcomes Winter Colony

Despite New Freedom in Black Costumes, Festivals and Processions Revive Memories of Picturesque Majorca.

Palma de Majorca—Masculine and feminine Majorca combines its enthusiasm in the first common happiness of a month by welcoming a return of winter tourists. The arrival of early English and Spanish hotel guests and the opening of winter villas mark the first unanimity of opinion between the factions striving for modernity and those who revere tradition, since the small township of Cataluna chose a lady mayor.

"The coming of tourists will do much to soothe the temperament of Mallorquins of the old school," says Robert Nicol, resident manager of the American Export Lines, who tells how the followers of ancient codes have been rudely shocked and surprised by the sudden insistence of Catalan Dona for her rights and the spread of the Barcelona feminist movement to the island.

Tourists Effect Changes.

Since the island became a tourist center, change after change has disturbed the serenity of the old line Mallorquins who have been content to follow the dictates of the noble family heritage. From time immemorial descendants of the nine ruling nobles have sheltered womanhood and subjected femininity to the domination of the male member of the household. The influence of tourists has jarred social bonds. Ultra-modern women have brought a liberty and new freedom to the island, introduced by backless bathing costumes, beach pajamas and shorts. The dilemma of hinterland Majorca is becoming a contest between a widening degree of broad-mindedness and the prosperity of the tourist trade.

The popular customs which still reflect the aspects of early Mallorquin life add to the island's climate and beauty in attracting tourists. The processions and festivals, rich in color and sound, carry out the animation of old-time Majorca and revive picturesque memories of ancient cults.

The famous festivals will exhibit the history close-up of Spanish dances, with each district having its own regional characteristic adaptation. Expressive in the parades both grave and gay, the horse and chariot dominate the marching columns. However long might be the line on foot, swinging in cadence with the drum beat and the brazen music, caparisoned horses are the most conspicuous features in these old-time celebrations. In many sections of the island the festivals resemble aspects of ancient Moorish rituals, steeped in Orientalism, with melodies of Russia and Asia. The neighboring Island of Ibiza is distinct by its musical sentiments directly linked with the music of Brittany and Ireland.

Among the attractions seen in the Spanish festival dance are the round dances of the sardana, as originated in ancient Cataluna, the aurrescue in Navarre and indigenous to the Basque country, with the jotas, famous in Valencia and Murcia. The Andalusian dances all have their own distinctive features and are presented with many modifications by the islanders. Of great interest to tourists is the Mallorquin jota, patterned after the famous dance of the Aragonese rhythm, which has its own special significance and character, as presented in Majorcan festivals.

Miami Chorus Of 100 to Sing 'The Messiah'

Program in Bayfront Park Amphitheater Scheduled Christmas Night.

By Gerry Swinehart.

Miami, Fla., Dec. 14.—Presentation of "The Messiah," to be sung by a chorus of 100 voices in Bayfront Park Amphitheater on Christmas night will bring the city's musical program to a new height.

Sponsored by the recreational department of the City of which Ernest E. Seiler is director, the program of concerts, oratorios and light and heavy opera in concert form had its premiere December 6.

The Miami Philharmonic Chorus is under the direction of Prof. Alfred Wiley and will be accompanied in the season's presentations by LaMonaca's Concert Orchestra.

Classics to be presented in addition to "The Messiah," include Verdi's "Aida;" Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and "Creation," famous oratorio by Haydn. In addition there will be choral presentations of many excerpts from the better-known light operas, including "The Geisha," "Robin Hood," "Gypsy Love," Gilbert and Sullivan's "Pinafore," and "The Mikado."

Featured soloists and dancers who will take part in the presentations were introduced at the recent preview concert.

Also contributing to what is expected to prove the most notable musical season in the history of the Greater Miami area will be a series of symphony concerts sponsored by the Mana Zucca Music Club, the University of Miami Symphony Orchestra and other organizations.

Thomasville Opens First Class Hotel

Three Toms Inn, the leading hostelry at Thomasville, Ga., opened yesterday.

Offering the highest standards in cuisine and service; every form of diversion in a balmy winter climate and restful peace, the inn appeals to those who appreciate the refinements of living and enjoy its luxury, comfort and hospitality.

The eighteen-hole golf course, having grass greens, is one of the finest in the South and many interesting matches are scheduled.

Thomas County is noted for its game preserves, and quail, deer, doves, turkey and ducks are found in abundance.

The inn is under the direction of George C. Krewson, ja., who also operates the Oceanside Hotel at Magnolia, Mass.

Miss Deborah Verry, of Worcester, Mass., misses a short putt on the eighteenth green to lose to Charlotte Glutting, of East Orange, N. J., State golf champion, in the seventh annual women's Mid-South at Southern Pines Country Club, Southern Pines, N. C.

Daytona Beach Expects Huge Tourist Boom

Gay and Artistic Season Is Ready for Vacationers Through Winter.

Preparations for handling the largest crowds of tourists to come to Daytona Beach since the boom era are being completed as vacationists from the Eastern and Middle Western States are arriving in unprecedented numbers this early in the season.

With the expansion of recreational and entertainment facilities, Daytona Beach visitors are assured of the finest of entertainment during their sojourn at the "world's most famous beach." The program of activities, which will start in December, will be most varied and will continue through April.

The world's leading concert artists will again appear on the auditorium program this season. The Municipal Band, recognized as one of the finest in the South, will be heard in a series of concerts. Forum lectures are also included on the literary program. Miss Leota Cordati Coburn, of the Chicago Opera, will present a number of musicales.

The second annual Senior Golf Tournament, which is expected to draw entries from more than a score of States, will be staged on March 2, 3, 4, 5, 6 and 7. The Florida State Trapshoot at the Municipal Gun Club, one of the finest in the South, will find many competing for the valuable prizes.

Lively Events Put on Calendar Of Entertainment at the Pines

By Howard F. Burns.

With business conditions improved over the country, the minds of the people are turned again to winter vacations, and the attractions of the mid-South will lure thousands to enjoy the pleasurable activities of the mild winter. The cottage colony continues to swell, the hotels report heavy bookings for the holidays on through to April.

Southern Pines, with three country clubs and four 18-hole golf courses, is located in the heart of the foremost golfing center of the country.

The tournament committee has arranged a number of national events, which will open March 23 with a pro pro best ball championship at Southern Pines Country Club. The tournament will precede the thirty-fourth annual United North and South at Pinehurst.

Tuesday and Wednesday, April 1 and 2, the eighth annual Women's Mid-South Championship, a 36-hole medal event, will be played. The tournament was won last season by Miss Charlotte Glutting, of East Orange, a former national semifinalist.

The horse will take no small part in the activities here this season.

Highway Tours to Add Nine-Day Florida Trip

All-expense tours, sponsored by Highway Tours, Inc., and sold only through Greyhound Lines, Inc., proved so popular last season that the tours will be expanded with an all-expense, 90-day tour of Florida, including hotel accommodations, sightseeing tours at all stops and entertainment.

Cities and places to be visited on this trip include Jacksonville, St. Augustine, Miami and Miami Beach, St. Petersburg, Tampa, Ocala and the world famous Silver Springs.

Year-Round Crowds Flock to Atlantic City in Their Quest of Health and Amusement

15,000,000 Visitors Paid Call at Resort This Year

Resort Noted for Wide Range of Amusements and Sports; Piers Extend as Far as Half-Mile Into Ocean.

Famous for its mild climate, advantageous location and the Boardwalk, Atlantic City is one of the greatest year-round health and pleasure resorts of all times.

Zero weather is practically unknown, the usual mean temperature during the winter registering a brisk, invigorating 38 degrees at its lowest. Physicians throughout the United States and Canada recognize the tonic effects of Atlantic City's bracing salt sea air and throughout the year a constant stream of people come to the resort on the advice of doctors.

Another factor well worth considering is the absence of factory smoke, gas fumes, carbon monoxide gas and traffic noises. A visit to Atlantic City has been likened to a cruise on an ocean liner with a promenade deck, hotel and pier solariums, open and enclosed and the sundecks where hundreds recline in comfortable steamer chairs, snugly wrapped in rugs.

Visitors can find practically any type of activity desired. The guest will find 1,200 hotel establishments, ranging from modest cottages on the avenues to the majestic beachfront structures. Libraries, swimming pools, game room, squash courts, children's play rooms, concerts, dramatic presentations, dancing and cabaret entertainment are all on the list, winter or summer.

Piers Extend Far into Sea.

No one who has been to Atlantic City can ever forget the amazing amusement piers that extend in some instances almost a half mile into the ocean. Included in the program of one are famous orchestras, stars of the stage, screen and radio, three motion picture houses, vaudeville shows, water sports shows and a number of interesting exhibits. Another has dancing, boxing shows, basketball games and a most fascinating spectacle—the deep sea net haul—twice daily. Still another pier exhibits rare paintings, statuary and the unusual finds of scientific excavation parties.

Golf is played throughout the entire year, with ample facilities available for the ever-increasing number of visitors to whom a vacation means golf every day.

No visit to Atlantic City is complete without an inspection of the largest building of its kind in the universe. Convention Hall, where the cream of American conventions are held, occupies seven acres of ground. It has a seating capacity of 60,000, a full-sized indoor football field, the world's largest stage and the world's largest pipe organ. The longest homerun ever made by Babe Ruth or any other baseball player would not go from one end of the hall to the other.

This busy little city of 65,000 has entertained more than 15,000,000 visitors this year.

Tide of Tourists Southwestward Running Higher

Little-Used Paths Opening for Northerner Who Chases Climate.

For northern dwellers who get enough snow and ice and don't want to join the chilblain brigade in its trek to Jack Frost's play centers, there is a sunshine trail, surprisingly enough, that leads neither to Florida nor California.

While it has long been blazed, this trail is nothing like as well worn as the others, but the tourists are finding it in greater numbers of recent seasons. It leads into the extreme Southwest.

For the sake of convenience, start an itinerary at New Orleans. Only difficulty is that you'll have a hard time making up your mind to go any further.

The Crescent City lives up to its name of the "Paris of America," for the good reason that its early settlers were impoverished and otherwise exiled French gentlemen who deliberately tried to reproduce Paris. Consequently the Vieux Carre, where the streets have French names with Americanized pronunciation and where O. Henry sipped absinthe and laid the scenes of many of his best stories, probably is the most romantic city in America.

Of course, there is another part of the city, but that is just another big city. Among the winter activities are yachting and horse racing.

A little to the north and west is the Evangeline country of slow bayous and Spanish moss, quaint folk customs and picturesque costumes. Rushing through the rest of Louisiana, you might stop off at Houston, Texas, for the duck shooting on Buffalo Bayou and then decide to stay the rest of the winter in the mild climate that nurtures all the usual outdoor sports.

But move on to Galveston, an all the year round city, for the tarpon fishing. Be careful you don't get the treasure hunting bug here. The coast sprouts legends about buried Spanish doubloons.

Great White Fleet Posts Itinerary for Cruises

Through the waters of the Caribbean to ports of the West Indies aboard vessels specially constructed for travel in varying latitudes, a series of cruises have been scheduled by the United Fruit Co.'s great white fleet, with voyages conforming to virtually any vacation cruise plan.

Vacations of from 10 to 20 days may be planned aboard these spotless white liners, with a variety of itineraries with all expenses included. A 17-day trip visits Havana, Jamaica, B. W. I.; Panama and Costa Rica, with ample time for shore visits in all of these countries.

There is a 10-day Havana tour and an 11-day Jamaica trip. Then, to fit the two-week holiday, there is a 13-day Jamaica tour. Shore visits and sightseeing trips are arranged on these and other voyages.

Auto Bureau Reports Gain in Travel to South

A sharp increase in the number of routings to Southern points has been reported by the touring bureau of the Keystone Automobile Club.

3 Special Cruises On Furness Listing

January Will Be Red-Letter Month for Line.

Most of the sailing dates are printed in red on the Furness sailing list for January. Red, in Furness typography, means a cruise. And with no less than three special cruises sailing from New York, January is a real red-letter month, not only for the line but for the noted Furness flagship Queen of Bermuda. which has been selected to make all four cruises.

Never has this line offered so extensive a program of special winter cruises, and never before has the Queen of Bermuda pushed southward to include Havana as a port of call, as she does on her January 6 sailing, and again on her January 23 cruise.

The complete list of cruises includes, besides this first sailing to Nassau and Havana, another of the familiar and popular triangle cruises to Bermuda and Nassau, instituted several seasons ago by the Furness-Bermuda Line and now an annual fixture on its winter program—together with a nine-day cruise to Bermuda and Havana.

Bremen Is Sold Out For Holiday Cruise

S. S. New York Will Be Run as Second Section.

According to a wire just received by Mrs. Laura Waters, of the Waters Ideal Travel Tours, the Bremen is sold out and the S. S. New York is being run as a "second section" for the holiday cruise to Bermuda and Nassau.

A large number of reservations have been transferred to the S. S. New York, and Miss Mildred Biondi will conduct the group on that ship. Miss Marion Ryan will be in charge of the group sailing on the S. S. Majestic for Nassau, while Mr. John Shew will take his holiday group to Bermuda aboard the S. S. Manhattan.

John Mitchell Waters 3d will sail on the S. S. Oriente December 24, with a group to spend the holidays at Havana. Mrs. Laura Waters, director of Waters Ideal Tours, will sail with her group on the Bremen.

Five Seaboard Air-Conditioned Trains on Road

Complete Service Given to Florida and Other Southern Resorts.

Five completely air conditioned trains, the only completely air conditioned trains to Florida and the South, make up Seaboard Air Line Railway's winter fleet of crack flyers.

With all indications pointing to a banner season in Florida and other Southern resorts, Seaboard Air Line Railway has arranged the finest train service ever provided from Washington for winter followers of the sun, it was announced yesterday by Edward Plack, Seaboard's assistant general passenger agent here.

Led by the famous Orange Blossom Special, which made its first trip from Washington Thursday, five completely air conditioned trains will speed daily on fast schedules to Florida and the South.

The Orange Blossom Special is scheduled to leave Washington at 5:10 p. m. daily and arrive the following afternoon at central, east and west Florida resorts.

Reduced winter excursion fares to the Carolina, Georgia and Florida resorts are a feature of Seaboard service.

The Southern States Special, the Cotton States Special, the New York-Florida Limited and the Robert E. Lee, all equipped with air-conditioned coaches, dining, lounge and sleeping cars, offer a wide choice of leaving and arriving times at the great Carolina resorts, Southern Pines, Pinehurst and Camden; Sea Island, Savannah, Ga., and all Florida resorts.

Seaboard trains are air conditioned the year round, Mr. Plack explained, so that passengers enjoy filtered, circulated air throughout their journeys, without dangers of drafts and stifling dry heat. In cold climates the thermometer is mechanically controlled and the air heated to the scientifically determined "most comfortable temperature," while in traveling under Florida's warm sun the cars are comfortably cooled.

Broadcasting on Ship.

When the Franconia sails from New York January 7 she will be fitted with what is known in England as the public address system. By this the music of the ship's orchestra will be relayed throughout the entire ship; victrola records may be radioed; instructions to passengers may be broadcast; general programs from the shore may be received, and concerts and lectures aboard the ship may be heard from stem to stern.

Egypt Dispels Tourist Fears Of Disturbance

Government Bureau Sends Reassurances About Troubles There.

Cairo, Egypt.—The government, through its recently organized tourist bureau, is cooperating with the hotel, railway, steamship and aviation interests to make the winter season an unusually entertaining one for visitors.

At no time have plans for the winter program been halted. The Egyptian government, anxious to dispel alarmist rumors, cabled its representatives in America in the latter part of October to reassure prospective visitors that all was normal in Egypt and that arrangements for their accommodations and entertainment had not suffered the slightest disturbance.

A continuous program of winter entertainment with new opportunities for side trips has been arranged to induce visitors to make longer stays in Egypt. Train, Nile steamer and airplane schedules now permit tourists to traverse all parts of Egypt in luxurious fashion. New motor routes and bus lines open vistas to many parts of the kingdom out of the usual tourist paths, including remote oases in the Libyan desert.

Balboa Lost His Head.

Balboa, who discovered the Pacific Ocean and was second only to Columbus as a navigator, was beheaded in Darien, in the southern part of Panama. He was but 42 years old. He had been accused of trying to make off with several ships in an effort to reach the riches of Peru. Pizarro, a soldier at the time, made the arrest. Later Pizarro accomplished what Balboa barely started.

11 Links Tilts Scheduled at 3 Florida Cities

Palm Beach, St. Augustine, Ormond Beach Plan Big Tournaments.

Eleven major golf tournaments will be played this season at three of the leading Florida east coast resorts — Palm Beach, St. Augustine and Ormond Beach—according to official announcement made by Ray McCarthy, director of advertising and sports exploitation for the Florida East Coast System.

The 1936 campaign on these courses will be inaugurated with the holding of the Lake Worth tournament at the Palm Beach Golf Club, January 13 to 17, and will come to a close with the annual winter championship of Florida for the Ponce de Leon Cup, at St. Augustine, March 16 to 20.

In addition to these 11 established events, involving several championships of national character, there will be golf competitions for a number of well-known organizations, such as the New York Athletic Club, the Winter Golf League of Advertising Interests, and the Artists and Writers Golf Association. A group of members from the N. Y. A. C., the largest athletic club in the world, will hold their tournament at St. Augustine, February 20 to 24, making their headquarters at the Hotel Ponce de Leon, while the members of the other two groups will play at Palm Beach.

The Winter Golf League of Advertising Interests is scheduled for Palm Beach, January 18 to 25, while the Artists and Writers Golf Association, which includes such universally known figures as Rex Beach, Grantland Rice, Rube Goldberg, James Montgomery Flagg, John Golden, Arthur William Brown, Frank Crowninshield, Russell Patterson and a host of others, will be at Palm Beach February 1 to 8, also staying at the Breakers.

The regular tournament schedule at these Florida east coast resorts includes the second annual holding of the National Amateur-Professional best ball match play championship, which will be contested again on St. Augustine links. This tournament was inaugurated last March, and it proved a most successful innovation. The winning team was composed of T. Suffern Tailer, 1934 Metropolitan amateur champion, and Jimmy Hines, professional at the Garden City Country Club on Long Island. The leading professionals of the country competed in this new classic, including Gene Sarazen, Craig Wood, Horton Smith, Willie Macfarlane, Johnny Farrell, Henry Picard, Denny Shute and a number of others.

Pictures Tell History Of Canadian Pacific

Montreal, Canada, Dec. 14.—History of the Canadian Pacific Railway in pictures is shown in Windsor Station today on the fiftieth anniversary of the completion of the first transcontinental line on Canadian soil. Some 300 pictures, embracing all the highlights of the company's history-making activities in Canada in the last half-century, have been secured from many sources and carefully arranged in groups.

As focal point of interest in this display is a huge oil painting of the "Driving of the Last Spike," at Craigellachie in the Canadian Rockies 50 years ago, showing Donald A. Smith, later Baron Strathcona and Mount Royal, pounding into place the spike holding the last connecting link. A cross-section of the history of Canada is depicted in this display.

Navel Orange's Origin.

The navel, or seedless orange, originated in Bahia, Brazil, and made its debut in the United States in 1835. It was generally introduced in Florida and California in 1870. It is now the most popular of all oranges, $50,000,000 worth being sold yearly. In Bahia the navel orange is considered "the greatest prodigy of the vegetable kingdom."

Vulcania Reenters Service in January

Colorful Itinerary Posted for Trips on 11th.

The Vulcania, which reenters the New York-Trieste service on January 11, will visit ports en route that are so varied and colorful that the voyage takes on all the aspects of a bona fide cruise.

The first stop is at the Azores, those colorful Portuguese Islands anchored several hundred miles off the coast of Europe.

Lisbon, the Portuguese capital, one of the most colorful capitals of Europe, offers a rich field for exploration. Touching at Gibraltar, the ship continues to Algiers. At Palermo, Sicily, the scene changes to one of Latin brilliance.

The Bay of Naples, one of the most beautiful in the world, is the next stop, then Patras, Greece, and the Dalmatian Coast with its walled City of Ragusa. A few hours, sailing up the azure Adriatic and the canals of Venice are reached. Trieste is the final port, a few hours away.

The Raven.

The Raven, Poe's great poem, was written in a building which formerly stood at the corner of Nassau and Ann streets, New York.

Oil Burners Are Lighted On Liner Queen Mary

Glasgow, Scotland, Dec. 14.—Oil burners on the Cunard White Star liner Queen Mary were lighted for the first time this week and steam began to crackle through the pipes which reach to all quarters in the new queen of the seas. Fuel oil was turned into three of the ship's 27 boilers to heat the vessel for the workmen during the winter months.

Seven turbo-generator sets, which are capable of developing 10,000 kilowatts, sufficient to light a town of 100,000 inhabitants, will be tested in a fortnight.

Bookings 20% Higher For West Indies Tour

Advance bookings indicate an unusually large amount of tourist travel can be expected on cruises to the West Indies this winter, according to Elliott Liman, manager of the cruise department of the Holland-America Line.

Reservations for the first winter cruise of the line's flagship, the S. S. Statendam, sailing from New York next Saturday for an 11-day West Indies cruise, already exceed the number of passengers carried on a corresponding cruise last year by slightly over 20 per cent.

Many Cruises Put on Steamship Schedules for Christmas and New Year's on Sunny Seas

West Indies and Bermuda Among the Ports of Call

Friday Sees Departure of the Swedish-American's Kungsholm on 15-Day Journey to San Juan, Cartagena, Kingston and Havana.

By Darrell Preston Aub.

What do you think of the idea of saying "Merry Christmas" and "Happy New Year" while you shade your eyes from a warm, tropical sun? After all, there is no reason why all the nice Christmas and New Year's sensations must be accompanied by sleet and chill. And it's a pleasant novelty, donning your most formal cotton evening gown for the gala New Year's Eve celebration. All right men. Your white mess jacket, if you insist.

Imagine Christmas, or New Year's, or both, on the broad face of a kindly sea. No horns—except your neighbor-merrymakers. No gasoline, no traffic. Or go a little further and be on land for these holidays, somewhere in the mellow, warm West Indies, in Bermuda, in Mexico, in South America. You will not soon find an experience to equal it. The variety of native celebrations include the English, the Spanish, the French and the Dutch. Which will it be?

Special Cruises Aplenty.

Of special cruises that will keep you busy either or both of the coming holidays, there are plenty. Friday sees the departure of Swedish-American's Kungsholm on a 15-day journey to San Juan, Cartagena, Kingston and Havana, and on the same day, the French Line will send its Champlain forth on a gala 12-day jaunt to Port au Prince, Cartagena, Cristobal, in the Canal Zone, and Kingston in England's Jamaica.

Fourteen days of sailing, seeing St. Thomas, La Guayra, Cristobal and Havana are the program notes for the Holland-American Line Statendam cruise which sails from New York Saturday. Cunard White Star has scheduled the Georgic for a colorful cruise leaving the same day, on a 12-day journey to Bermuda, Port au Prince in Haiti, Havana and Nassau. Still Saturday, and yet another departure, on the Statendam of the Holland-America Line, this time for an impressive array of ports, 11 days' full of them, including St. Thomas, St. Pierre, Fort de France, Trinidad, La Guayra in Venezuela and Curacao.

December 27 Big Day.

December 27—A big day for sailing away over the new year. The Majestic goes to Nassau in the Bahamas for a five-day holiday. Canadian Pacific and friends and family say good-by to the Empress of Britain this day, leaving on its 10-day Kingston-Havana-Nassau trip. The Bremen, of the North German Lloyd, leaves for a five-day cruise to Nassau and the U. S. Lines' Manhattan for a five-day trip to Bermuda.

And these, my friends, are only the specials. Nary a word yet about the grand regular services that always carry a crowd of merrymakers at this time of year. Furness-Bermuda's regular schedule provides sailings right up to December 28 that can include either or both of these holidays. The Porto Rico Line has a couple of all-expense cruises that fit perfectly. There's one leaving New York Thursday for 12 days of visiting Puerto Rico and Santo Domingo.

The splendid ships of the United Fruit's Great White Fleet have 17 day Costa Rica cruises that go to Havana, Jamaica, Panama and Costa Rica.

On the Columbia, of the Colombian Line, you sail away on Thursday for 18 days of adventure in Haiti, Kingston, Jamacia, Colombia and the Canal Zone, a gala adventure on the Spanish Main which includes both approaching holidays.

Christmas Cruise.

Ward Line's Oriente offers a special Christmas cruise leaving December 24, visiting Havana and returning to New York December 31. And this line's Oriente also carries New Year's revelers December 31 from New York, returning January 7 after an exciting visit to Havana.

If we have omitted any, it is because the glitter and dazzle of these imminent holiday possibilities have left too-bright spots before our susceptible eyes. It will indeed be the strong person who will say "no!" to this array. The American Express tells us that the negative answer is practically impossible judging from the solid foundation of bookings already laid by an anxious public.

Five Winter Tours Slated to California

Personally Conducted Trips Last Two Weeks.

Five personally escorted winter tours to California, including seven full days in the Golden State and embracing some of the finest scenery in the West, are announced by the Washington office of the Burlington Railroad. Operated jointly by the Burlington and the Santa Fe Railway, each of the tours covers 14 days of transcontinental adventuring, with most of the time spent in and around Los Angeles and San Diego.

All of the tours leave Chicago on Sunday mornings, beginning January 19. The first scheduled stopover is at Williams, Ariz., where the party embarks on a 60-mile motor trip to the Grand Canyon. Almost an entire day is given over to sightseeing at this colossal geological phenomenon.

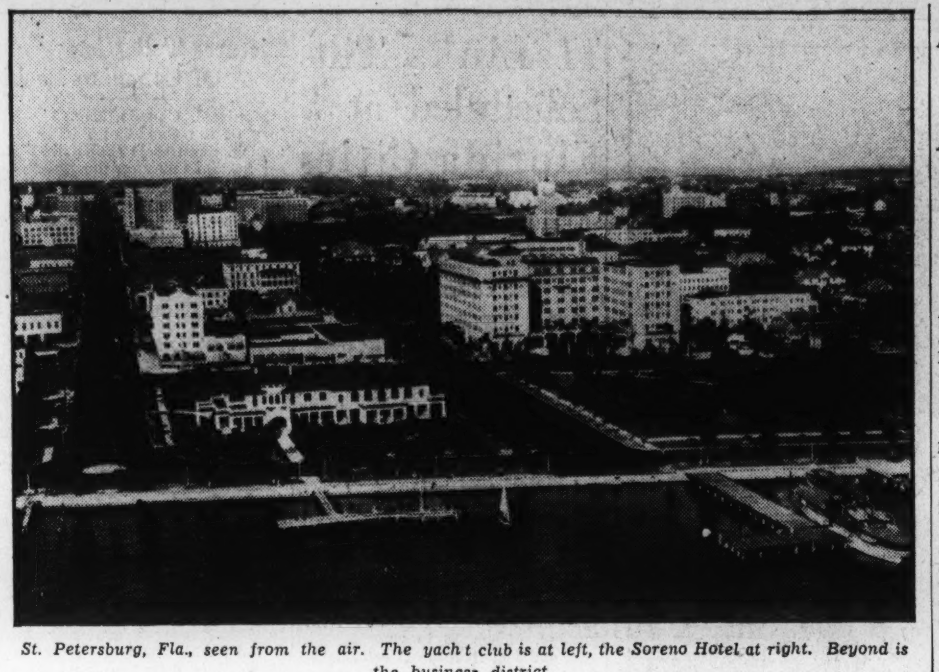
Arriving in Los Angeles Wednesday noon, the next four days are spent in this city. A motor trip is provided for Thursday morning, to Hollywood, Beverly Hills, Santa Monica and the Pacific beaches, the rest of the time being left open for private excursions and sightseeing.

Increase in Travel Reported by Ober

Capital Agency Places Its Gain at 20 to 40%.

Ober Steamship and Tourist Agency, which has been sending Washingtonians on vacations and other trips for 14 years, reports a steady upward trend in travel during the year. An increase of 20 per cent to 40 per cent was reported in business handled by the agency.

Ralph B. Tew, proprietor, said the unsettled condition in Africa seems to increase rather than deter the seasoned traveler. More bookings have already been made this fall and winter for travel to Europe this coming summer than he has seen for many years past, he said. Some of the cruise ships which will sail during June and July next year are already heavily booked, he added.



St. Petersburg, Fla., seen from the air. The yacht club is at left, the Soreno Hotel at right. Beyond is the business district.

Queen Mary's Dining Room.

British interior decorators, sculptors and designers employed on the Queen Mary have pooled their talents to produce an exquisite decorative effect in the dining room. Light woods, accentuated with silver bronze metal work, dominate the general scheme. Wall decorations include a series of bas relief carvings by Bainbridge Copnall.

Passengers dining in this saloon may ascertain the position of the ship by raising their eyes to a large map of the North Atlantic, on which the course of the Queen Mary will be shown by a moving illuminated model of the ship.

Christmas Cruise.

The Cunard White Star liner Georgic will sail on a 12-day cruise to the West Indies on December 21, returning January 2, spending Christmas and New Year's at sea, as she will be steaming between ports on both festival days.

Ancient Monastery.

Next year will mark the 700th anniversary of the foundation of the Black Friars' Monastery at Canterbury, England. Here Daniel DeFoe preached in Tudor times.

Cuban Tourists Gain.

Cuba's progress on the path to recovery has brought courage and comfort to her hotel and amusement interests. The past few months have witnessed a marked increase in tourist trade, according to Will P. Taylor, manager of the National Hotel of Cuba in Havana, and preparations are being made for one of the most active seasons ever enjoyed by the Island Republic's famous winter resort.

A.C.L. Schedule To Dixie Resorts Are Speeded Up

Winter Tourist Fares Cut, Automobiles Shipped at Low Cost.

Quickened schedules, made possible by excellent condition of the continuous double track, rock ballasted, safety protected railroads over which Atlantic Coast Line trains operate, brings all Florida and the South only one-night-out from Boston and intermediate points en route.

The low cost for shipping automoblies in connection with passenger tickets, reduced fares for winter tourists tickets with liberal time limits, reasonable cost of living accommodations, and the wonderful out-of-door winter climate make a trip to Florida and the South this winter not only desirable but possible to all of average means.

Belleair Boastful Of Its Promontory

In the whole golden, sun-bathed curve of Florida's gulf coast there is perhaps no more picturesque combination of land and sea than the promontory of Belleair. Floods of sunshine and warm, gentle breezes from the Gulf of Mexico produce a climate that places this region among the most favored sections of Florida.

The Belleview Biltmore Hotel, situated on this promontory, has had winter after winter a steady following of Northern visitors, numbering among its patrons members of famous old American families.

Two of Florida's finest golf courses are located here, each laid out by Donald Ross. The courses are under the supervision of the noted professionals, Billy Burke and George Low.

Aquatic meets, diving exhibitions and water polo games are held in the Belleview's outdoor swimming pool.

On Treasure Island, among tall palms that line the broad white beach, cabanas are clustered.

Cook's Plans for Cruise To Tropics on Holidays

A new departure in New Year festivals is being planned by Cook's.

A personally escorted party will leave Washington at 1 o'clock Friday, December 27, for New York, where it will board the world's largest cruising liner, Majestic, for a cruise to the sunny Southern waters. Two days will be spent at the famous winter resort, Nassau.

The gay party will be accompanied by Violet B. Kelk, of Cook's staff in Wasington or by Kenneth Banghart, manager of the travel office in Washington, who is in charge of arrangements.

Metropolitan Opera Returns to N. B. C. Networks December 21 for Complete Season

Inaugural in Series to Be "Lohengrin;" Huehn to Sing

Elsa and Lohengrin to Be Sung by Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchoir; Broadcasts to Begin at 1:45 P. M., With Milton Cross Announcing.

Radio's most elaborate feature returns to the air December 21, when the National Broadcasting Co. again invites radio listeners throughout the world to a front seat at the Metropolitan Opera Saturday matinees.

Again, as since the historic first Metropolitan Opera broadcast on Christmas Day, 1931, these complete performances will be broadcast from coast to coast and beyond to Hawaii over combined N. B. C.-WEAF and WJZ networks, and they will be short-waved for listeners all over the world. The entire series, including the Saturday matinees of the Metropolitan supplementary season which will follow the regular Metropolitan season of 14 weeks, also is offered to the Canadian Broadcasting Commission.

The opera to be heard in this season's inaugural broadcast will be Richard Wagner's "Lohengrin," with Lotte Lehmann and Lauritz Melchoir in the two leading roles of Elsa and Lohengrin. Emanuel List will be King Henry and Frederich Schorr, Telmarund.

Huehn in Debut.

Julius Huehn, young American barytone, already known to N. B. C. network audiences, will make his Metropolitan Opera debut in this performance, singing the role of the King's Herald. Marjorie Lawrence, young American contralto, who makes her debut at the Metropolitan on the previous Wednesday night as Brunnhilde in "Die Walkure," will be heard as Ortrud.

The performance will be under the direction of Artur Bodanzky, first conductor of German repertoire at the Metropolitan, and internationally recognized as one of the greatest of contemporary Wagnerian interpreters.

The broadcast, over N. B. C.'s two networks, will commence at 1:45 p. m., and will extend to the last note of the finale. During this first Saturday matinee broadcast, Edward Johnson, new general manager of the Metropolitan Opera Association, will make a brief address to the radio audience.

Cross to Announce.

Milton J. Cross, veteran N. B. C. announcer who has announced the Metropolitan Opera broadcasts from the beginning, again will be at the microphone to announce each act and comment upon the plot and action of the stage presentation. He will operate from Grand Tier Box No. 42.

The Metropolitan Opera opens its season Monday, December 16, with a larger portion of the house sold by subscription than in many past seasons. The few seats for the opening performance not taken by subscribers were placed on sale Monday, December 9, and were completely sold before the close of that day's business. These facts reveal greatly renewed interest in grand opera on behalf of the public, due both to the interesting repertoire announced and the number of new stars added to the Metropolitan roster this year.

Among these are several young Americans, many of whom first gained artistic recognition via radio. Among names which will be recognized by N. B. C. listeners: Grace Moore, Josephine Antoine, Hilda Burke, Helen Oelheim, Chase Baromeo and Julius Huehn.

This year, as during the first season of Metropolitan Opera Saturday matinee broadcasts, these complete performances direct from the stage of the world's foremost opera house are brought to radio listeners from New York to Hawaii and throughout the world through the courtesy and at the expense of the National Broadcasting Co.

O'Keefe Kidded

Innocent Victim of Guide's Change of Coats.

When Walter O'Keefe set forth the other day to speak at Columbia's Teachers' College the other day, it was with the understanding that a blonde young lady wearing a red hat and brown coat would meet him at Amsterdam avenue and 116th street to conduct him to the Speech Club's luncheon.

Walter arrived promptly and within ten minutes timidly approached four young women, who answered the description given. But none was the right one. Pedestrains were beginning to eye Mr. O'Keefe with suspicion when a girl in a green coat appeared and escorted him to the luncheon.

"I changed my coat at the last moment," she confessed, "and I didn't have time to call you up!"

No audience will be permitted for Helen Hayes' network show Tuesday night from Washington's N. B. C. studios. But the candid camera shows how she appears in scenes from "The New Penny."

New Series Soon by Library of Congress

In recognition of what the NBC Music Guild has accomplished in fostering chamber music throughout the country and in keeping with the increased appreciation of this type of music on the part of radio listeners, the Library of Congress offers N. B. C. network audiences eight one-hour programs under the auspices of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge Foundation this year instead of four as in previous seasons.

This new series, to be broadcast Tuesdays, from 4:30 to 5:30 p. m., begins December 24 and extends to February 11. A program of music appropriate to the Christmas season will be sung by the Vecchi Singers on the first broadcast.

On consecutive Tuesdays the Library of Congress Chamber Musicales will be presented by the Roth String Quartet; the Kolisch String Quartet; the Roth String Quartet plus a soloist; Guy Maier and Lee Pattison in a program of music for two pianos; the Barrere Woodwind Octet; the Casella-Poltronieri-Bonucci Trio, and a Chamber-orchestral program by an ensemble to be announced later.

High Frequencies

EDDIE CANTOR has received a contract renewal for nineteen additional weeks. He's preparing now to return to New York from Hollywood, where his broadcasts have been originating since early fall while he made a picture.

* * * *

Jimmie Melton is dieting to remove extra poundage before facing movie cameras next month. His second picture will be "The Desert Song" . . . Before her marriage, Mary Livingstone was a sales girl in a West Coast department store.

* * * *

When Ben Bernie and Phil Baker were vaudeville partners, they stuck to music. Neither "pulled a gag" until they separated . . . Connie Boswell has memorized 650 songs . . . At home they call tap-dancing Eleanor Powell "Ding" . . . New York program experts say the Manzanares South American orchestra moved operations to Detroit to be free of the influence of Tin Pan Alley.

* * * *

To Gracie Allen, while on the air, Milton Watson, the tenor, is "Milty Wilty." Now his daughter, aged 2 and one-half, greets him at the door on his homecomings with "Hello, Milty-Wilty!" . . . In the dramatic series "Vanished Voices" there's a gadget, which exists in imagination only, which "calls back" voices from the past. Listeners now are writing in (thinking it's real) asking for diagrams. They want to compare it with their own ideas of such a machine!

* * * *

Fred Waring and the Lane sisters went recently to Tarrytown, N. Y., where Fred lectured earnestly before pupils of the Washington Irving High School. At the end of the address, devoted to radio, he invited questions. Finally a husky young voice from the rear cried out: "What's Rosemary's telephone number?" Waring had an answer—his office telephone number.

* * * *

A gold microphone, symbol of his long career as a radio star, was presented to Frank Munn, tenor of the "Lavender and Old Lace" program, after the broadcast last Tuesday night by his associates—Fritzie Scheff, Lucy Monroe and Gustav Haenschen. It was Munn's twelfth anniversary of his radio debut.

Singin' Sam is coming to town. His network program will originate from the Peoples store, 11th and G streets, Monday night.

'Prima Donnas Just Pikers—'

"Prima donnas are pikers. For sheer, ripsnorting temperament I'll take amateurs any day," says Fred Allen. You might think a complete novice at singing would be afraid to call his sol-la-ti-do his own. But, according to Allen, you would be wrong. Some of the lads and lassies—singers, pianists, imitators, etc.—could give a matinee idol tips on artistic bombast, the comic claims.

Fred cherishes particularly the memory of a young lady from Newark. Time prevented her appearance on the air. After the show she stormed up to Fred with finger wagging and demanded what he meant by making her come all the way to New York—a 20-minute trip—and not putting her on the air. (P. S.—They put her on the next week.)

A Bronx violinist also stands high among the temperamental performers that have come to "Town Hall Tonight." This young man forgot his music, worked himself into a frenzy and refused to go on the air when another copy of his piece was located at the last minute.

A middle-aged soprano got off key, stopped in the middle of her song and stamped her foot at the bewildered professional accompanist and stalked to her seat. An Irish tenor got mad because Fred called him "Eddie" and acidly remarked that his name was Mr. So-and-So. An amateur who had been successfully auditioned wired that he would not go on a program that features such acts as the recent "singing rooster."

"Temperament?" says Fred. "Make mine vanilla."

Allen and the Mighty Allen Art Players will present another "drama" Wednesday night, WRC.

Symphony Programs Tonight

Albert Spalding, American concert violinist, will be the guest soloist on the General Motors symphony concert, WRC, at 10 p. m. Burns and Allen on Stage.

For the first time in several years George Burns and Gracie Allen will appear behind vaudeville footlights. They will play weekly engagements in Minneapolis, December 27; Chicago, January 3, and Boston, January 17. They will broadcast their Wednesday programs from these cities.

Gracious Dragonette.

Jessica Dragonette wins today's prize for taking the "temper" out of temperamental. While autographing programs after her last broadcast, an admirer accidently spurted ink on a lovely white evening gown Jessica was wearing for the first time. She won the hearts of a group of onlookers by simply smiling and continuing her autographing!

What Music Do Air Virtuosi Like? Kostelanetz Answers

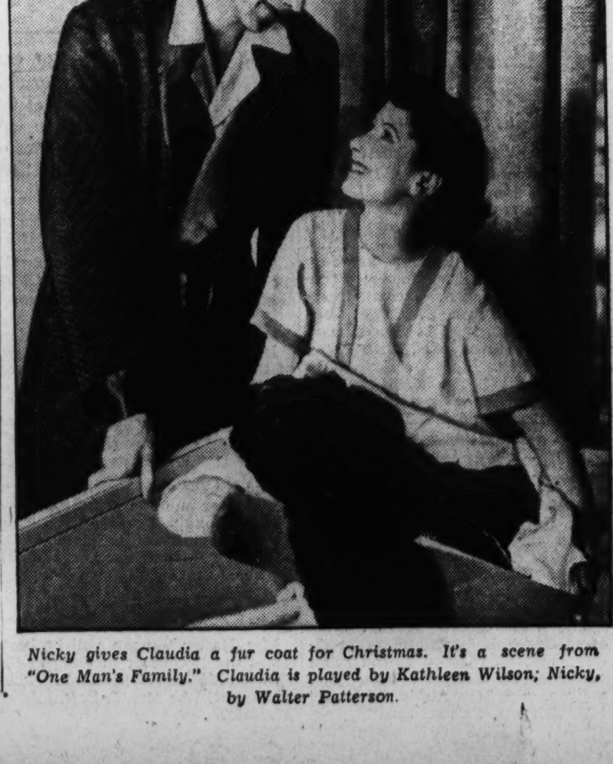
A striking similarity between the tastes of the professional musician and the average radio listener is revealed in a recent poll of Andre Kostelanetz' C. B. S. Orchestra to determine what kind of music a musician likes.

The men in the Kostelanetz organization, a 45-piece group of virtuosi drawn from symphony orchestras in America and Europe and famous dance bands throughout the country, chose overwhelmingly as their favorite great composers Brahms and Beethoven, with the Brahms First Symphony and Beethoven's seventh their favorite compositions. In the recent Philharmonic-Symphony audience poll CBS listeners selected the same two composers.

The musicians' favorite overture was a toss-up among Beethoven's "Leonore" Overture No. 3, Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" and Thomas' "Mignon." Their favorite opera was Puccini's "La Boheme," with an interesting tie for second place between Wagner's "Die Meistersinger" and Gershwin's folk-opera, "Porgy and Bess."

In the popular music field it was everybody's race. "Sophisticated Lady," "Without a Song," "I'll See You Again," "St. Louis Blues," "Farewell, My Lovely," and Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" were in the vanguard. But 34 other selections received votes, ranging from "O Promise Me" and "Kiss Me Again" to "Double Trouble" and "April in Paris."

Nine overtures received votes. These included overtures to Wagner's "Rienzi" and "Tannhauser," Verdi's "Vespri Siciliani," Goldmark's "Sakuntala," Tschaikowsky's "Romeo and Juliet," and "The Merry Wies of Windsor."



Nicky gives Claudia a fur coat for Christmas. It's a scene from "One Man's Family." Claudia is played by Kathleen Wilson; Nicky, by Walter Patterson.

C. B. S. Plans to Cover 1936 Political Scene; Dates Named

Quickening activity and interest in the American political scene is evidenced in broadcasting schedules as the 1936 campaign year approaches. Comprehensive plans to bring a representative cross section of political opinion to the microphone already have been formulated by the Columbia Broadcasting System. Numerous others will be added.

The new year on the radio promises to be as colorful as any in history, rivaling even the excitement of the campaign and conventions which captured a record radio audience in 1932.

Commenting on the 1936 outlook, H. V. Kaltenborn, Columbia's veteran news analyst who in recent weeks has had occasion to study current political trends in various parts of the country, says:

"Never in the 40 years of my political observation have national politics dominated the American mind as completely as today. The election is almost a year distant, yet candidates and party politics are already in the forefront. Moreover, it would take a European war to displace the 1936 election from the American mind."

Programs scheduled for the next few weeks include:

December 16—Summary of action taken at meeting of executive committee, Republican National Committee, Washington. Time: 10:45 p. m.

December 21—A debate on: "Should We Buy American?" with James W. Gerard, former Ambassador to Germany, affirmative, and Raymond T. Rich, director of the World Peace Foundation, negative. Time: 2:30 p. m.

December 28—Representative Hamilton Fish, "Public Opinion" program, on "Wage Earners and the New Deal." Time: 10:30 p. m.

January 8—President Franklin D. Roosevelt's speech, Jackson Day dinner, Washington. Time: 10 p. m.

January 11—A debate on "Should We Pay the Soldiers' Bonus?" with Representative Wright Patman, affirmative, and Henry H. Curran, director of the National Economy League, negative. Time: 10:30 p. m.

January 18—Robert Taft, son of the late President Taft, before the annual luncheon, Women's National Republican Club, New York. Time: 2 p. m.

January 25—From Liberty League dinner, Washington. Speakers are expected to include John W. Davis, Alfred E. Smith and Jouett Shouse. Time: 10:15 p. m.

CARRIE JACOBS BOND comes to the microphone as an actress tonight at 11, WRC, in the cast of "The Melody Master."

Vox Pop to Be Heard From Different Cities

Three important new developments are announced in the Vox Pop Program, now heard from New York (WRC) on Sundays at 2:30 p. m.

In the first place, the contract of Jerry Belcher and Parks Johnson, interrogators of the man-in-the-street, has been renewed. Second, the program will be heard on Tuesdays at 9 p. m., starting January 28, over the same network. Third, the question-but-not-answer men will work in cities outside of New York from time to time.

It is felt that the programs to date have delved pretty well into the store of knowledge of the New Yorker, Belcher and Johnson say. The decision to broadcast from a new city, however, will not be made in haphazard fashion. The Vox Poppers will endeavor to visit a city in which there is being held some celebration or observance of national importance or interest.

With the Hams

For the benefit of those who made the trek to the Telephone Building last Saturday evening and found the meeting rooms of the Washington Radio Club deserted; meetings of the club are held the second and fourth Saturday of each month. Last month, having five Saturdays, broke up the usual routine of every other Saturday.

Adolph More, W3EKU, was awakened in the middle of the night (that's what he calls 10:30 a. m.) by a booming and crashing. On investigating, he found that his 40-foot mast had hit the dust, breaking all the panes on the way down from the roof.

Joseph de Bettencourt, W3DEG, who has been using just a pair of 45s in his five-meter rig, is building up an M. O. P. A., continuing the 45s as the oscillator and adding a pair of tens for the amplifier. With this layout and the Reinartz directional antenna that he's making up he should break some of his past DX records. Elizabeth Zandonini, W3CDQ, is working ten meters. With ten meters only good from about 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. and having to be on her job during that period, she spends her entire lunch period trying to break records.

* * * *

Robert Kruse, of the first district and a personal friend of the late Walter S. Parks, W3ZW, has written to the secretary of the Washington Radio Club suggesting a resolution be made petitioning the Federal Communications Commission not to reassign the call of W3ZW, that it should remain to his memory for all time.

The Washington Radio Club's party will be held December 28. The time and place will be announced next week. Rumor has it that a 14 megacycle crystal will be on the market about the first of the year. What a boon to the five and ten meter birds.

Bernard Ruff, W3DLA, has a new rig with a single 46 in the final and would have us believe that he can draw an inch and a half arc off the tank coil—Hi! How many of you remember when John Reinartz, W1QP, won a prize at a hamfest and offered to swap with the winner of the next drawn prize and the next thing pulled out of the bag was "How to Become a Radio Amateur?"

* * * *

Julian Scrivener, W3EXI, better known as "The Old Virginia Ham On Five Meters," has abandoned 73s when he signs off and is using 88s in its stead. Elmer Smith, W3FMR, is on 40 meters with an 802 and is working the West Coast plenty these days. Barron Freeburger, W3DK, is looking for some electrolytic condensers that won't pop to put in a BCL set he's been trying to repair since Hector was a pup. J. Stanley Brown, W3EHE, famous haywire builder says he's had enough. He's going to build up something conventional.

Hams! Don't forget to send in your comments to the editor, Bernard Salisbury, W3FAC.

On the Air Today

THE magazine "Radio Stars" presents its Distinguished Service Award medal to Gus Haenschen, orchestra conductor for "American Album," in the course of the program tonight at 9:30, WRC. Haenschen receives the medal in behalf of the program's stars—Frank Munn, Lucy Monroe, Arden and Arden, Bertrand Hirsch and the Amsterdam Chorus.

Reginald Gardiner, English comedian of Bea Lillie's "At Home Abroad" company, and who imitates things—wallpaper, trains and whatnots, headlines the "Magic Key," WMAL, at 2. Oddly enough, with a London comedian appearing on this side, the "Magic Key" goes to London to pick up an outstanding American act—Borrah Minevitch and his Harmonica Rascals. Also Rose Bampton and Ray Noble and orchestra.

The "Music Hall of the Air" presents "Cavalleria Rusticana," Mascagni's colorful opera, with Viola Philo and Jan Peerce, WMAL, at 12:30 p. m. . . . It'll be a Christmas shopping sketch for Jack Benny and Mary Livingstone tonight at 7, WMAL. That is, if they don't change their minds after sending out the announcement.

Auto Makers Emphasize Safety of Their New Cars

Some at Same Time Are Concerned Lest These Improvements Might Operate to Cause Still More Recklessness.

Motor car manufacturers are making a prime point of the greater inherent safety of their new models. They are stressing more powerful brakes, improved steering, sturdier bodies, safety glass and similar features. They are saying less about the inherent high speed of their new creations than in many a recent year.

Safety seems suddenly to have become one of the most important qualities in the passenger automobile from the standpoint of those who produce and sell, as well as those who buy and consume them.

However, the manufacturers are not quite certain of what the effect of building safer cars—and stressing their safety—will be.

New Viewpoint Sought.

The idea prevails that something must be done to change the psychology of drivers, of motorists generally.

A mechanically safer car is an important step in the right direction, but if its greater margin of safety is stolen or misused, the initial step is largely nullified. In this connection, the car makers point out that more powerful brakes will not work toward the end of greater security of life and limb so long as motorists see in them merely a margin that permits of faster driving. In other words, they are afraid motorists will think of the new brakes in terms of greater permissible speed instead of quicker stopping.

The same thing applies to improvements in steering. The new cars will take curves with far less insecurity than their predecessors. New stabilizing devices assure this result. But what of the greater margin of assurance is translated into higher speeds? Why cannot motorists realize that the real merit of the improvements lies in achieving more safety at present-day speeds?

The safety margin inherent in the newest cars is one for which the producer of automobiles feels he need offer no apology, but for its abuse after he acquires a new car many an owner probably will owe the industry an apology whether or not he ever makes it.

About "Other Fellow."

The "other fellow" is one of the handiest creations the motorist ever has produced, speaking from a psychologic standpoint. Without this notorious character it would be impossible for the average driver to justify so many of his own thoughtless blunders.

One of the commonest mistakes of the average driver for which the other fellow is blamed is that of getting in the wrong lane and, in consequence, being delayed more than is necessary. The law, however, gives the other fellow a complete and unabridged right to do just what he is doing in most cases regardless of what delay it may cause the motorist immediately behind but who should be somewhere else.

Try to be judicial about it the next time you are berating the other chap and determine whether or not he really is to blame.

Mistaken Assumption.

A mistaken assumption of many motorists is that the overtaking drivers do not have the right to pass when the car ahead is traveling up to the permissible speed limit.

The law on the subject speaks pointedly otherwise. An overtaking car is given the right to pass whenever its driver wishes so long as the road is clear.

If you are driving a car several years old, ride in one of the new models at night and notice how much slower your own car's lights are than the car itself.

The new car's lights are likely to reach down the highway twice as far as those of the vehicle just a few years old. It does not mean necessarily that the later model can be driven twice as fast with safety, but hints perhaps that the old one should be driven only half as fast as its owner is inclined to operate it on the open highway at night.

Its illumination system, incidentally, is one of the most impressive features of the latest car.

Diesels Impressive.

They achieve rather impressive figures in connection with the passenger car Diesel engine.

Air drawn into the cylinders on the suction stroke, for instance, is compressed to the extent of from 350 to 500 pounds per square inch. This degree of compression results in an air temperature of almost 1,000 degrees Fahrenheit, a temperature of such intensity as to assure combustion of the fuel without use of the conventional spark plug.

In spite of the high pressures and temperatures, oil engine builders now are resorting to lighter materials than ever used before—and they are giving better results.

Recent racing experience provides the reflective motorist with an excellent idea in connection with keeping his car in a safe condition.

Almost without exception those who have sought glory and records in automobiles during this year, both in this country and abroad, have found that engines and other units of the car show less strain than tires; in other words, are less prone to give trouble under conditions of unusual strain.

It is a good point to bear in mind when you are considering a high speed journey on tires that already have seen considerable service.

The Hiking Club of Job's Daughters, Bethel, No. 1, met Tuesday at the home of Dorothy Johnson.

The ways and means committee held a show dance at the Brightwood Temple yesterday.

On December 7 officers were elected as follows: Dorothy Linz, honored queen; Harriet Schmidt, senior princess; Mary Ellen Bailey, junior princess; Marthena Mehrling, guide, and Kathryn Blankenship, marshal.

The drill team meets every Thursday in the Masonic Temple, New York avenue and Thirteenth street.

At the next meeting of the Bethel officers will be installed.

Christmas Festivities Will Bring Colorful Week to Students in Washington Schools

References Announced For Post Contestants

30,000 Copies of 100 Sources Available to Students Through Agencies Aiding Competition.

More than 30,000 copies of 100 references on current and historic governmental issues have been made available to thousands of local and rural students, competing in the current and third Washington Post Scholarship Competition, through the generosity of many public agencies, including a number of Federal press services and civic organizations, such as the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, the National League of Women Voters and the National Civil Service Reform League.

To meet the increasing demands of students competing annually in The Post competition, for reading matter on the vital civic issues stipulated for essay writing, the competition director at The Post, Louise Engle, early this fall approached these organizations for donations of relevant publications. Their response was both prompt and generous, with the result that, for each high school enrolling in the competition, The Post is furnishing, without charge, a Special Competition File, equipped with 31 folders, one for each of the 30 essay topics, and one labeled, "Miscellaneous References."

Throughout the competition area, which embraces Washington, Alexandria, and 43 surrounding Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia counties, teachers and librarians have enthusiastically endorsed this contribution, which is serving them and their students as nucleus for further collections concurrent with their studies of the civic issues.

Both Sides Presented.

Careful efforts were made at the competition headquarters to include in the file material which would present opposing aspects of problems implying political or economic controversies. Thus, on the first of the stipulated topics, "The NRA-Supreme Court Issue," the collection includes an address by Secretary of Commerce Roper entitled "Forward With the Constitution" and excerpts from an article in the Yale Review, by John Dickinson, reprinted in The Post, entitled "Does a Bureaucracy Threaten the Nation?"—both defending the Administration's stand.

On the opposing side, two leaflets are included from the Sentinels of the Republic, reprinting addresses by Congressman A. P. Andrews and Judge Finis J. Garrett, and two pamphlets from the American Liberty League, "New Deal Laws in Federal Courts" and "The Supreme Court and the New Deal." Approaching the problem from the middle course is an address before the Virginia State Bar Association by Senator Tom Connally, of Texas.

Committee Documents.

Likewise, to cover the essay topic, "The Status of the Child Labor Amendment," the file includes pamphlets favoring the amendment's adoption and setting forth its history and status, from the National Child Labor Committee, and others opposing the proposition from the Sentinels of the Republic. Contestants using this material will acquire, in concise form, up-to-date information touching the interesting legal, economic and social ramifications of this issue.

One of the most difficult problems listed for essays, "The Proposed Thirty-Hour Week," is treated in the special file in two able studies in pamphlet form, one favoring the proposal, by the American Federation of Labor, and the other opposing it, by the Brookings Institution.

"The Tennessee Valley Experiment" is well covered in the collection by two pamphlets issued by the information service of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and, in criticism of the experiment, two others, one from The Nation's Business, the organ of the U. S. Ghamber of Commerce, and one from the American Liberty League.

The National League of Women Voters contributed a number of helpful publications, including a collection of pamphlets by Katherine A. Frederic, describing the duties and functions of the departments and establishments of the Federal Government. This collection, filed under "Miscellaneous References," is proving especially valuable in many classes studying general problems of our Federal Government, as well as those covering the competition's specific essay topics.

Other Topics Covered.

Many of the other interesting topics, embracing civic, economic, international and historic problems, are likewise covered for the convenience of teachers who must present these subjects with due emphasis upon their various controversial aspects.

In addition to the file, an extension library service has been made available to competing classes through the cooperation of the American, Catholic, Georgetown and Howard Universities. These local institutions are offering, as major awards in the competition, nine four-year tuition scholarships for winners to be selected at campus finals next spring. The extension library supplies include bulletins and clippings from current publications which have been donated in recent months by many Washingtonians whose interest has been aroused in the project.

The contributors to the special competition file include, in addition to those named, the International Labor Office, the Department of Labor, the Foreign Policy Association, the National Council for Prevention of War, the National Self-Government committee, the Commission of Inquiry on Public Service Personnel, the United States Civil Service Commission, the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works, the Housing Division of the Public Works Administration, the Non-Partisan Committee for Ratification of the Child Labor Amendment, the National Municipal League and various members and committees of Congress.?

Corporation Sponsors Contest on Education

An essay contest emphasizing the importance of education was announced yesterday by International Business Machines Corporation. The contest, second to be conducted by the company, will be open to approximately 2,000,000 third and fourth year students in public, parochial and private high schools throughout the United States.

The subject of the competition will be "How Education Develops the Power to Think." Essays are to be submitted to teachers before April 15, 1936.

Ballot for D. C. Will Be Debated At Catholic U.

Intramural Contest to Help Select New Members of Varsity Team.

The right of District of Columbia residents to vote will be subjected to argument at Catholic University tomorrow night when the Shahan Debating Society conducts the fourth of its series of intramural debates.

Taking part in the discussion will be Tony Sparacino, '39; Frank H. Vogel, '39; Henry V. Ratke, '37; and Ernest Arnoldsky. The intramural sessions are for the purpose of selecting members of the varsity debate team, which will represent Catholic University in intercollegiate debates now being arranged.

Following the debate there will be an open forum discussion of the Pi Kappa Delta intercollegiate debate fraternity question for 1935-36, "Resolved: That Congress by a two-thirds majority have the right to override decisions of the Supreme Court unfavorable to legislation." In preparation for the debating season, the Rev. Maurice O'Leary, O. P., moderator of the Debating Society, is giving a course in public speaking, treating the subject from the standpoint of matter, form and debate procedure.

Under the direction of Dr. Frederick V. Murphy, well-known local architect, Class A students in the department of architecture of the university are engaged in the Robert Perry Rogers' prize competition, a national contest sponsored by the Beaux Arts Institute of Design of New York City. The subject of the contest is "An Airport Building Near a Large Metropolis," and the specifications state that it is to serve as a terminal for a transcontinental air line.

Dr. Francis L. Talbott, instructor in physics at the university, will address the cosmology class in philosophy on the subject of "Matter in Recent Physical Theory" at 2 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon in McMahon Hall. This lecture is the third of a series arranged by the Rev. Charles A. Hart, Ph. D., of the philosophy department, for the correlation of the natural sciences and non-scholasticism.

The design for the class rings of the class of 1937 has been selected, according to announcement just made by William J. Tobin, jr., of 1223 Michigan avenue northeast, who is chairman of the ring committee. The rings are being manufactured and it is hoped they will be ready sometime during the Christmas holidays.

Alumni of Eastern To Dine Thursday

The 6,000 members of the Alumni Association of Eastern High School have been invited to a banquet and variety program Thursday night in the school lunchroom.

An address of welcome will be made at the dinner by John M. Riecks, '29, president of the association. Afterward the former members of the student body will have their choice of several entertainments.

There will be a 7 p. m. business meeting and election of officers. A basketball game between Tech alumni and Eastern alumni will begin at 7:30 p. m. in the gymnasium. This will be followed by another between Eastern High and Gonzaga High. There will be a motion picture at 8 p. m. in the auditorium. Dancing will begin in the armory at 9:30 and refreshments will be served in the lunchroom.

President Riecks is being assisted in arrangements by H. Eldred Wilson, '27, vice president; Gwendolyn Rusk, '29, secretary, and Joseph Rabbitt, '30, treasurer.

Students at Columbia Enter Poster Contest

Under the direction of Phillip Mansfield and W. Anthony, instructors, students of the day and evening classes of the commercial art department of Columbia Technical Institute have been engaged preparing posters for the Bal Boheme competition conducted by the Arts Club.

An exhibition of the submitted posters will be open at the Arts Club this week. The poster committee is made up of Virginia C. Diedel, Mrs. William Ridgely Chapline and Marie E. Walcott, chairman.

Trinity Players Will Reproduce Mystery Cycle

Medieval Dramatization of Birth of Christ to Be Given Today.

The story of the Birth of Christ, as told in dramatization adapted from the York cycle of mystery plays by Miss Elsie Kernan, director of dramatics at Trinity College will be presented this afternoon in Notre Dame auditorium as a feature of Trinity's annual Christmas party.

The York mystery cycle was the outstanding contribution of Medieval England to the drama and much of its natural simplicity has been retained by Miss Kernan in her direction. The entire play will be acted in pantomime against a musical background furnished by a harpist and violinist from the Trinity student orchestra. Representatives from each of the four undergraduate classes are in the cast of 17.

In staging the play, Miss Kernan has divided the original cycle into four episodes, each depicting an important event in the Nativity. The Annunciation will be dramatized first, with the Journey to Bethlehem, the scene of the Shepherd and the Angels, and the Coming of the King an d the Nativity following in that order.

The rich Oriental costumes worn by the Kings in the last scene were designed and fashioned by Trinity students. The Christmas play will be given before an audience of faculty, undergraduates, and orphan children who will be the guests of the college for the day.

Barrett H. Clark, noted dramatic critic, told a Trinity College audience this week that "the American theater at the present time leads the world in artistic production," and that Phillip Barrie, Sidney Howard and Maxwell Anderson are the leading modern dramatists.

School Awards Design Ribbons

A-4 Section at McKinley Wins First Prize in Yule Contest.

A gay-colored Christmas basket depicting Santa Claus riding on a sled filled to overflowing with food stuffs, won first place in a competition last week at McKinley High School. The basket was submitted by A4 section in the annual pre-Christmas contest.

Section A3 won second prize, and D3 third prize. Blue, red and white ribbons, respectively, were awarded to the winners.

Frank C. Daniel, headed the committee of judges. Miss Jesse Coope and William E. Myers, assistant principals, also served.

"Cash and Can" assemblies were held Thursday and Friday with an amateur show for each day. The students in the audience voted for the amateur whom they thought best. "Admission" to these assemblies was money or food.

A Tech regular football supper will be given Tuesday at Collier's Inn. Teachers, students, parents and friends are welcome to attend.

Tech's girl reserve publicity committee has issued a small paper for the benefit of the members of the organization. It is original on the part of the members.

American U. Club Plans Yule Play

'Is Life Worth Living?' Will Be Given on Campus.

The annual Christmas play, of the American University Dramatic Club, "Is Life Worth Living?" will be presented next Wednesday night at the gymnasium auditorium on the campus, as the climax to almost a week of holiday festivities.

Under direction of Will Hutchins, professor of art, and dramatic coach, the comedy is the same production presented by the Abbey Theater Players, under the title of "Drama in Inish."

The leading role in a student cast is taken by Margaret Johnston, graduate of Central High School, while the male lead is by Homer Patton, of Altoona, Pa. Music will be by the college orchestra, under direction of James R. Thurmond.

Prior to the play, the formal Christmas dinner will take place in the college dining hall.

Maret School Pupils Plan Yule Program

Pupils of Maret School will give a Christmas program at 4 p. m. Friday in the auditorium of their school. Several Christmas songs rarely heard will be sung in French. Among them will be "La Reveillon," by Maurice Bouchor; "Hymne au Sapin," old German melody, words by M. Maret; "Nuit de Noel," by Jacques Dalcroze; "Noel des Bergers," by Theodore Botrel; "Joy to the World," arranged from G. F. Handel, 1744.

Two plays also will be given: "Du Bois Mort . . !" by M. Maret, two short acts, and "A Puritan's Christmas," a two-act play in English.

Pupils of Gunston Hall Plan Candlemas Rite

Pupils of Gunston Hall will conduct their annual Candlemas service at 8:15 p. m. today in the school auditorium, 1903 Flordai avenue.

The entire school will take part in a pageant symbolizing spiritual grace, the great light, with its attendant virtues, Truth, Faith, Hope, Love, Joy, and Purity.

1st Parliamentary Forum Topic Is Limitation of Supreme Court

Post Staff Photo.

ORVILLE A. HITCHCOCK, director of debates at American University, has announced a new series of public discussions for this winter.

Meeting Held Helpful to Competitors for Post Scholarship.

Parliamentary forums, similar in some respects to Town Hall discussions, sponsored locally and nationally by United States Commissioner of Education John W. Studebaker, which should prove helpful to contestants in The Post Scholarship Competition, will be inagurated Wednesday at the American University Liberal Arts College by Orville A. Hitchcock, director of debates and chairman of the department of speech at that institution.

Two members of the American debating team, Frank Hoadley and Chester Morrill, will collaborate with two debaters from Pennsylvania State College in presenting, within eight-minute time limits, first an analysis, and then three solutions to the question: "Should we limit the power of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional?"

The meeting will then be thrown open to audience members for two-minute comments and arguments and subsequently for a final vote on the proposed solutions.

Hoadley, of American University, will open the forum with an analysis of the issue. One of the Penn State debaters will then present a proposal to empower Congress to override by two-thirds votes the high court's adverse rulings on congressional acts.

Morrill will then present a second solution: that the present system be upheld with minor modifications. The other Penn debater will follow with a proposal that Congress be empowered to control intrastate, as well as interstate, commerce.

The meeting is attracting attention from local and nearby high-school social science students and teachers, especially those who are concentrating upon essays covering "The NRA Supreme Court Issue," the first of the topics listed for the current Post competition.

Mr. Hitchcock believes the plan has advantages over the old form of debate, which presents only two sides of a given issue. He expects to include several similar meetings in his debate schedule this year. The program will open promptly at 4:10 o'clock Wednesday afternoon at Hurst Auditorium on the Nebraska avenue campus.

Western Class Elects Hatch

Francis Shinn Named Secretary, First Boy in Office.

John Hatch has been elected president of Western High School's June graduating class; Marion Brown, vice president; Francis Shinn, secretary, and William Shelton, treasurer.

The election of Shinn was unique in that it placed a boy in the office of class secretary for the first time in Western's history.

The Western squad competitive will be tomorrow. The units will drill in the streets near the school. In case of unfavorable weather the drill will be postponed until Thursday.

Western has founded a "press association" for those interested in newspaper work. Editors of the Breeze, the school paper, and the Westerner, the year book, are charter members. At the first meeting Eddy Gilmore, reporter for the Washington Daily News, spoke.

Sheppard Grove Alters Its Calendar

Regular Meeting Advanced to Tomorrow Night.

Morris Sheppard Grove, No. 7, Woodmen, will hold its next meeting tomorow night at the W. O. W. Hall. The regular meeting night falling on Christmas Eve made the change necessary.

Mrs. Fannye Kolb has been appointed acting financial secretary. At this meeting officers will be elected.

The grove has been invited to attend a dance given by the combined camps of the city in the auditorium of Thomson School on Thursday night.

Attorney to Discuss 1933 Securities Act

Isaac N. P. Stokes, attorney at the Securities and Exchange Commission, will speak to Washington College of Law students tomorrow morning, continuing the series of special post-graduate lectures. He will discuss the Securities Act of 1933, the Securities Exchange Act of 1934, and Title 1 of the Public Utilities Act of 1935.

The first of a series of intersection debates in the freshman classes was held last Monday on the question, "Resolved that the United States should own and operate all munitions plants in this country." The decision was awarded to the affirmative team composed of I. Lee Bunch, L. Nelson Lee, and Ben Smith, representing Section D. They were opposed in the negative by Gaines H. Gough, Brooks B. Ford, and Verne R. Young, speaking for Section C. Lee was voted the best speaker.

Wilson Students Visit Planetarium

Philadelphia Trip Sponsored by Newtonian Society.

The Newtonian Society of Wilson Teachers College sponsored a trip to Philadelphia yesterday to visit the museum and planetarium of the Franklin Institute. The trip was especially planned for Dr. Kennard's astronomy class, but several other students and teachers also attended.

The Women's Athletic Association will have its annual Christmas party Tuesday in the Little Theater Miss Eberling and Miss Kriener, physical education instructors, will be chaperons.

To provide more concerted action the student council is taking the responsibility this year of gathering food and clothing for Christmas baskets. All organizations will co-operate with the council. As a part of the program the council will give a can dance, admission to be a can of food. The dance will be held at 4 p. m. Friday in the Little Theater. The orchestra will be composed of members of the student body. The food and clothing will be taken to the Washington Federation of Churches for distribution.

Three Washington Girls At Smith College Ball

Three Washington girls attended the fourth annual Charity Ball at Smith College last week. They are Mary Fowler, junior, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alvah Fowler, 3456 Newark street; Helen Litz, sophomore, daughter of Mrs. George Litz, 3602 Thirty-fourth street northwest, and Ellen Knipe, freshman, daughter of Mrs. Henry Knipe, 2400 Sixteenth street. The dance is one of the biggest social events on the Smith calendar.

Miss Margaret Chase, a junior, who is the daughter of Mrs. Charles Alden Chase, 2219 California street, took part in the first production of the Smith College Dramatic Association's season last week. The play was "The World We Live In."

Navy Band Orchestra Plays Tomorrow Night

Under the direction of Lieut. Charles Benter, the U. S. Navy Band Orchestra will play the following program tomorrow night at 8 o'clock in the sail loft: Overture to "Polyeucte" (Dukas), "Carnival of Animals" (Saint-Saens), "Concert Square Dance" for strings (Davidson), Hungarian folk dances (Wiener), Symphony No. 4 in E minor (Brahms).

A program of light music will be presented by the orchestra on Wednesday afternoon at 3:45. Next week the regular orchestral concert will be given on Monday night instead of Christmas Eve, and there will be no concerts between Christmas and New Year's Day. Band concerts are scheduled this week for Monday at 11 a. m. and Thursday at 11:30 a. m.

Seniors' Group At Roosevelt To Offer Play

'Why the Chimes Rang Out' Will Be Presented to Student Body.

A group of Roosevelt High School seniors are planning a presentation of the Christmas play, "Why the Chimes Rang Out," to be given before the student body before the Christmas holidays.

The students are working under the direction of Esther Galbraith, dramatics instructor; Emma Louise Thompson, of the music department, and Marguerite Manning, also of the faculty.

Actors and singers have not been chosen for all parts. However, leading roles will be taken by Frances Dewey, Mimi Norton, Charles McLendon, Robert Morris, Italo Ciatti, Ruth Selsky and Catherine Vagnoni. The players will be assisted by glee clubs and orchestra, directed by Miss Thompson. Old Christmas carols will be part of the program.

The Chevron Club of Roosevelt gave a dance Friday in the school armory. Robert Rieseberg, Robert Brownell and Joseph Hicks had charge of arrangements. Ed Finckel's Roosevelt Band played for dancing.

A fountain court, with a pool and rose garden, has recently been laid out at Roosevelt High School east of the arcade connecting the main building with the auditorium. Miss Maude C. Gunther, of the biology department, drew up plans and arranged for materials.

Through a gift of the Gardeners Club of Washington, 300 rosebushes were obtained for the court.

Georgetown U. Yule Banquet Slated Tonight

Gold Football Pins, Other Prizes to Be Awarded During Evening.

Georgetown University's annual Christmas banquet will be staged tonight in Ryan dining hall of the College of Arts and Sciences. The junior class will have charge of arrangements.

Special music will be furnished by Billy Robert's Diplomats. Intramural and extra-mural prizes will be awarded as well as gold football pins to the varsity football squad. The affair will start at 6 p. m.

Peter J. Brennan, jr., chairman in charge, will be assisted by the following committeemen: Joseph A. Moynihan, Joseph D. DiSesa, Robert Ferrera, John Love, Chris Boland, J. Frank Duffy, John C. Donnelly, Joseph McCloskey, Noel Ryan, John J. Cuningham and Walter Dailey.

Dr. Arthur A. O'Leary, S.J., president of the university, is in New York City, where he is spending his religious retreat at the Church of Ignatius with Dr. Coleman Nevils, former president. He will return Friday. That day will find most of the students departing for their Christmas holidays, which will continue in most departments to January 6.

The more than 40 members of the Washington Club at the college are arranging for their annual Christmas dance during the holidays, date and place to be announced later.

The debate for the George E. Hamilton Medal will be held tomorrow night by members of the Philodemic Society in Gaston Hall at 8:15 o'clock. The question is one involving the power of Congress, by a two-thirds vote, to override any Supreme Court decision declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional.

Peter J. Brennan, Joseph J. Power and Milton A. Free will defend the affirmative side. The negative team is composed of John S. Lang, James D. Curtin and Thomas B. Finan, jr.

Mrs. Stern Hostess.

A social evening was enjoyed Wednesday at the home of Mrs. Worthy P. Stern on Lamont street, when Mrs. Stern, assisted by Miss Harriet Frush, was hostess to members of Chapter F and their friends.

The feature of the program was a group of piano solos played by Mrs. Florence Elliott and several vocal selections by Miss Sila Knutson.

18th Century Negro's Almanacs Displayed at Howard University

Banneker, Descendant of African Chief, Served on L'Enfant's Commission That Planned City of Washington; Made First Clock in America.

Three valued almanacs, which parallel in age and historical significance those of "Poor Richard," are on display this week in Howard University's Carnegie Library. They were designed and published by Benjamin Banneker, Negro surveyor, astronomer and mathematician, a member of the commission that laid out the city of Washington.

Banneker's ingenuity in many fields of activity is reflected by the almanacs. James McHenery, a member of John Adams' Cabinet, who made possible the publication of the first edition in 1791, assured its readers that "it was begun and finished without the least information or assistance from any person or from any books." Thomas Jefferson, interested in science and letters, read the Banneker Almanac, and sent copies to many friends.

Banneker, born in 1732, where Ellicott City, Md., now stands, was the great-great-grandson of an African chief. He was aided in acquiring an education by George Ellicott, flour mill operator, and out of his enthusiasm for books on mathematics, astronomy and history grew his interest in writing an almanac.

First American Clock.

Among Banneker's accomplishments was the construction of what is believed to be the first clock built in America. Through Jefferson the Negro received an appointment from George Washington to serve on Maj. Charles L'Enfant's commission to plan a capital for the new United States.

One of the hand-printed almanacs on display at the Howard library is entitled "Benjamin Banneker's Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia Almanacs and Ephameris for the Year of Our Lord, 1792."

Remedy for Cancer.

It tells how needles were first made, it gives a remedy for rheumatism and cancer, and a cure for corns, it contains household hints and lists members of Congress, the eclipses, tide tables and reprinted excerpts on the slave trade.

Long before the time when international organization for peace was a popular topic, Banneker was advocating that a secretary for peace be included among the officers of the President's Cabinet. Banneker died in 1804.

Besides almanacs, the library will have on display until Wednesday copies of Banneker biographies and of his benefactors, the Ellicotts. There will be shown also a letter, in facsimile, that Banneker wrote Jefferson, and historical sketches which were read before the Maryland Historical Society in 1845 and again in 1854.

G.W.U. Students To Assist Poor

Drive Is Made to Obtain Provisions for Yule Baskets.

Preholiday activity on the George Washington University campus this week will center about the student campaign to supply Christmas baskets for needy Washington families.

The campaign is sponsored jointly by the student council and the Hatchet, campus publication. Everett Strandell, of the Hatchet, and Charles Stofberg, of the student council, are co-directors of the food drive.

Others assisting are Marvin Footer, Nell Clements, Sis Porter, Morris Kruger, Wayne Lambertson, Clair Henniger, Jack Hyland, Lela Hatchett, Julia Metcalf, Mary Shelton, Mary Spelman, Alphons Leemans, Austin Cunningham, Reba Edelman, Morris Sinclair, Garth Edwards, Robert Fernstein, Deane Bryant, and Jerry Griffin.

All student organizations, as well as individual students and faculty members, are co-operating in the drive.

The first regular session of the George Washington University Student Union will be held Wednesday at 8 p. m. in Stockton Hall. The session will be taken up with a discussion of neutrality legislation as reported out by the union's committee on foreign relations, of which Fred Brooks is chairman.

Recreation Clubs Thrive At Community Centers

More Than 125 Join in Program of Sports and Social Events Each Week at Macfarland; Activities Varied.

By Bess Davis Schreiner.

The aim of the Community Center Department to make "every community center a recreational club" for adults and young pepole is rapidly becoming a reality. Under the direction of Mrs. Elizabeth K. Peeples, director of the department, the use of many school buildings after regular school hours is being widened to include the establishment of community clubs with programs presented two, three, and often four evenings each week.

The staff of Macfarland Young Men's Club, perhaps the oldest club of its kind in community centers, is headed by Harry English, who is assisted by Philip Fox, as athletic supervisor, Larry Munn, as boxing and wrestling instructor, and Frank Cady as personnel director. Each week, Monday through Thursday, more than 125 young men and older boys engage in a program of sports and social events.

Other Community Clubs.

The same type of club is also gaining impetus at Gordon Community Center under the supervision of Director Aherne. Community clubs are also organized in Columbia Heights Community Center, Langley Center, southeast, East Washington, Tomson and in the centers in divisions 10-13, there are three clubs which are perhaps the most successful of all. Terrell Community Club for Boys located in Terrell Junior High School and organized two years ago has an experienced leadership of standard qualifications and training for this type of recreational work. Francis Junior Boys Club and Randall Boys Club, directed respectively by Thomas J. Anderson and Mrs. L. N. Fitzhugh, are attracting young people.

The Terrell Boys Club is directed by P. L. Jacobs on the Monday through Thursday schedule.

In Southeast Community Center there is another and somewhat different set-up in the Southeast Recreational Club, which is basically social, dramatic and musical in its program on Saturday nights at Buchanan branch of Southeast Center. With Mrs. H. Cournyn Olson, as club supervisor, the young men and young women of the community meet each Tuesday and Saturday night, and carry on under their own committee, a definite program of community recreation which is as wide as the interest of its members demand.

Orchestra Organized.

A club orchestra has been organized. Social affairs, dramatic and musiscal affairs are given.

Although East Washington Community Center has no organized club, many kinds of community participation may be noted, beginning with the dancing class of about 50 children, some as young as 4 years, and others of teen age. Moving picture program and week-end dances are included also.

Athletics are not forgotten in the East Washington Center, for Albert Nathanson leads a group of boys, known as the Eliot Juniors, in sports and games on Saturday nights.

Consumers League Leader

Harris & Ewing.

MRS. FREDERICK MANNING, whose interest in industrial conditions set a precedent among White House women and did much to establish the Consumers League. Mrs. Manning is the former Miss Helen Taft.

One Group at New York For Big Consumer Rally

Frances Perkins, Mrs. Frank Farley, Miss Wells, Mrs. Henry P. Davison and Mrs. Sargent Among Those Figuring in the News.

By Vylla Poe Wilson.

Women well known in Washington have been much in the news of women's activities in other cities this week.

The group, led by the secretary of labor, Frances Perkins, who took an important part in the forum discussions of the thirty-sixth annual luncheon of the National Consumers League in New York Tuesday, included all women who have long been identified with activities of the league in Washington.

Those who are familiar with the local activities of the Consumers League recall the impetus given to this activity in its early days, by Miss Helen Taft, now Mrs. Frederick Manning.

At Christmas time when Mrs. Manning was the "young lady of the White House," she presided personally at the exhibition held on F street to demonstrate the evils of purchasing goods not made under proper industrial conditions. Since that time women of the White House have given most hearty support to the educational work of the league.

Miss Margaret Wilson enlisted in the work when she was a "daughter of the White House" and has maintained this interest.

Backed by First Lady.

Mrs. Roosevelt is, of course, one of the most enthusiastic indorsers of the work and is very careful about learning of the conditions under which articles are made before she purchases them.

Mrs. Frank P. Farley, of Chevy Chase, president of the American Legion Auxiliary of Maryland, presided at the meetings of that organization in Baltimore last week. Mrs. Farley is as active in the affairs of the patriotic societies in Washington as she is in Maryland and is a frequent guest of honor here.

Another Washington woman who attracted the attention of those who keep up with the woman-thought of the Nation this week was Miss Marguerite Wells, president of the National League of Women Voters.

She issued a call to the members of her organization and all other American women to make a study of neutrality legislation. She asked the study groups in the States to stress this subject.

Interested in Y. W.

Mrs. Henry P. Davison, who endeared herself to Red Cross workers in Washington during and since the World War, presided at a luncheon in New York on Friday under the auspices of the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Davison has been as interested in this organization of young women as she has been in Red Cross work.

The topic of discussion at the luncheon was "Youth—The Nation's Future." Among the other women well known in Washington who took part in the discussions at this luncheon were Mrs. George A. Wyeth, Mrs. Cleveland Dodge, Mrs. Andrew Carnegie, Mrs. Henry Sloane Coffin and Mrs. John D. Rockefeller, jr.

Mrs. Abbie C. Sargent, of Manchester, N. H., who has been in Washington many times in recent years in the interest of the farm woman and has spoken at meetings and appeared before committees of Congress, has been appointed to the general advisory committee on maternity and child welfare.

Miss Perkins' Choice.

Mrs. Sargent is the president of the Associated Women of the American Bureau Federation. Secretary of Labor Perkins recommended the appointment of Mrs. Sargent. The committee will operate in connection with the social security act.

The Associated Women of the American Farm Bureau Federation have put themselves on record "demanding" that action be taken by the organization of men with which they are affiliating in the support of child labor legislation. Another object of the women is to enlighten youth on the effects of alcohol and narcotics on their health and their careers.

Elks' Baskets Will Cheer 350 For Christmas

Hampers to Go to Needy; 200 to Be Honored at Old-Timers Night.

Washington Elks will bring Christmas cheer to more than 350 needy families on Tuesday of next week, when the social and community welfare committee of the lodge makes its annual distribution of Christmas baskets. Gus Brahler is chairman of the committee.

The annual old-timers' night was held at the club Wednesday. More than 200 Elks who have been members of the order 25 years and longer were honored. Among the speakers were Judge Robert E. Mattingly, himself a past exalted ruler of the lodge; Henry I. Quinn, member of the Board of Education, and Michael G. McCormick, former treasurer of the lodge.

Exalted Ruler James J. Murray has accepted the invitation of Dr. J. Winthrop Peabody, superintendent of the Tuberculosis Hospital, to turn on the lights of the community Christmas tree at the hospital next Sunday. The Elks Boys Band will participate in the ceremonies. The exalted ruler will be accompanied by a large group of members.

District Deputy John E. Lynch will make his final official visitation of the year at Havre de Grace Lodge on Thursday. Past Exalted Ruler George E. Strong has been appointed chairman of the committee to arrange for the initiation in February of the grand exalted ruler's national class. It is expected that a class of more than 50 candidates will be initiated by Washington lodge.

The lodge meets Wednesday for the last time until January 8, on account of the cancellation of the meetings falling on Christmas Day and New Year's Day.

Mrs. Husband Talks At Suburban Rally

Washington Woman Speaks About Americanization.

Mrs. W. W. Husband, of Washington, addressed the Woman's Community Club of Kensington and 30 members of the Woman's Club of Kensington, guests of the Community Club for the day at the regular monthly meeting held last Monday in the Masonic Hall. She gave a talk on "Americanization." Mrs. Morris K. Barroll presided.

Mrs. W. F. Matthews was chairman of the luncheon committee, assisted by Mrs. Alfred B. Hastings, Mrs. B. F. Dierdorf, Mrs. L. F. Poole, Mrs. E. A. Noyes, Mrs. Cyrus W. Sherman, Mrs. B. L. Kumler, Mrs. Herbert Wright, Mrs. W. O. Kingston, Mrs. Edward R. Saunders, Mrs. Marion Curran and Mrs. Charles Houghton.

Dore Walten, with Mlle. Beulah B. Chambers at the piano gave three 'cello solos. Mlle. Mary Deffenbaugh, accompanied at the piano by Mme. William J. Wallis, sang two solos.

Chapter Corporation of D. A. R. Pushing Campaign for Funds to Set Up Quarters Here

Ella Dorsey Given Credit For Project

Former President One of Ruling Spirits of Enterprise.

Mrs. Waterman Directs Efforts; Reports by Mrs. Grimes.

The State executive committee of the District Daughters of the American Revolution met December 7. The State regent, Mrs. George Madden Grimes, gave a report of the many chapter entertainments, State and national committee meetings and other patriotic affairs she had attended.

Mrs. James Henry Harper, State director of the C. A. R., said the children were giving a scholarship for Christopher Burrows at Tamassee, D. A. R. School, and were packing a Christmas box for him.

The members of the Chapter House Corporation under the presidency of Mrs. Jason Waterman are continuing their efforts to raise funds to give the D. C. D. A. R. permanent headquarters. One of the stoutest supporters of this aim was former President General Ella Loraine Dorsey.

Miss Helen Harman, vice president from the District, has charge of the collection of old gold for the national memory book under Mrs. Grace L. H. Brosseau, honorary president general.

Mrs. Holt Reports.

Mrs. Fred Holt, chairman of patriotic literature for the blind, reported Haskins' "Our Government Today" is being set in Braille, to be ready in about a month, and the next book being prepared was "The Constitution and Its Makers" by Fred Taylor Wilson.

The junior and senior groups, Sons and Daughters of the U. S. A., will gather at 7:30 p. m. at Peck Chapel Saturday for their regular Christmas entertainment, when many talented young members will take part. D. A. R.s are urged to attend.

Mrs. Earl B. Fuller stated the next D. A. R. radio hour would be over WRC Friday. The program will be put on by the C. A. R.s.

Mme. Cantacuzene-Grant, national defense chairman, held a large organization meeting October 30 with the regular chapter representatives and many other interested daughters present.

The Girl Home Makers, under the direction of Mrs. Clarence Weaver, have built up a regular weekly attendance of 54 girls who are present every Wednesday evening. The dramatic class, under the leadership of one of its own members, Blanche Fleming, will present a play Wednesday at 7:30 p. m. at Gospel Mission, 218 John Marshall place.

Genealogy Group to Meet.

The genealogical research committee will meet Saturday at the Willard to hear Mrs. Lue R. Spencer, registrar general.

The State press relations chairman, Miss Margaret I. Fraser, reported 1558 columnar inches of D. C. D. A. R. news in the Washington papers since June 6, a gain of 1,146½ inches since October 5. She laid stress on three points—to give full names that credit might be given where credit was due, to use nontransparent paper in typing newspaper reports to lessen the strain on the eyes of the newspaper folks, and to give the substance of the chapter guest speaker's subject in two or three sentences that the public might share privileges of the hearers.

Mrs. Z. Lewis Dalby, the chairman, reports that the magazine committee benefit February 4 will be a pageant, "Stopping From the Pages of the D. A. R. Magazine," which will be in the form of a mammoth copy on the stage.

Mrs. Alexander Bell reported for the approved schools. Several chapters have already pledged scholarships for the mountain schools. Tamassee is asking for more soap and milk coupons to buy laundry equipment. Crossnore continues to need a large supply of clothing.

Mrs. Wilbur V. Leech, the new Americanism State chairman, reported 650 students attending the Americanism School and 200 of these attending the citizenship classes.

A silver cup was presented to the United States Marine Band Monday by the District of Columbia Daughters of the American Revolution in recognition of patriotic co-operation. Miss Lillian Chenoweth, State chairman of music, made the presentation through the State regent, Mrs. George Madden Grimes, and the cup was received for the band by Capt. Taylor Branson, first leader. Col. Clark was the officer in charge and arranged the details for the occasion.

Frances Scott Chapter.

The Frances Scott Chapter, D. A. R., held the December meeting at the home of Mrs. Frank B. Bell on Huntington street. Mrs. Bell was assisted by Mrs. Walker S. Martin and Mrs. E. Laurence Hazard. The regent, Mrs. E. P. Andrus, presided.

Mrs. Bell gave a talk from historical data preserved in her family on the ancestors in the Shenandoah Valley of the Glenn and Burns families.

Autos Go Free On N.&W. Ships From This City

Line Offers Inducement to Motorists on Way to Old Point Comfort.

Prosperity must be returning, judging from the great numbers of motorists who are heading South, and adding pleasure to their trip by driving their cars on board Norfolk & Washington steamers at Washington, and traveling by water to Norfolk and Old Point Comfort. Or, perhaps, it's a combination of prosperity and the prospect of enjoying a 200-mile trip by water down the Potomac and Chesapeake Bay that's starting so many Southern auto trips.

Driving your car on to one of the palatial steel steamers of the line and then forgetting all about the rigors and dangers of road travel while you and the family silently glide by the peaceful Virginia shores, is an excellent and an economical way to begin the Southern auto trip. Not only is it a welcome break to the monotony of driving, but the surrounding country is of intense interest.

Incidentally, cars are carried free. Interesting because of the wealth of historical centers, you will have easy access to visit, and beautiful because Tidewater Virginia is one of the real beauty spots of the Atlantic coastline.

Suppose, for instance, you drove your car on board one of the Norfolk & Washington floating hotels. Leaving Seventh street wharves, any evening at 6:30, this is something like what you would experience:

First of all, you'll have to imagine the food, because mere words can't describe that! Naturally you're going to be treated to tangy salt air all night.

Of course, being a modern steamer, there is every modern comfort, such as radios, library, really comfortable staterooms, lounges, roomy decks, etc. In the morning your car will be delivered to you bright and early at the dock and you will be at the very gateway of Old Virginia.

Snow Sports Gain Favor at Halifax

Ski-Joring Among Most Popular Pastimes.

Halifax, N. S., Dec. 14.—"New Scotland" is actively encouraging and developing winter sports in its own right this season, according to a recent statement by A. J. Campbell, of the highways and touring department here, to Col. Walter W. Hubbard, New York visitor.

"Raquetting, which is really snow-shoeing, is always popular in some parts of Nova Scotia," said Mr. Campbell, "while many of the beautiful hillsides supply unsurpassed opportunities for skiing, bobsledding and tobogganing."

Ski-joring, in which the young man or young woman on skis holds the reins behind a galloping ski pony, is similar in nature to aquaplaning behind a fast motor boat. The hills around the Annapolis and Gaspereau Valleys, parts of Cape Breton, and the hills around Halifax are snow-clad during the real winter months and skiing is increasing in popularity every year.

Contest Is Opened To Cruise Group

Game Fishing Tourney Is Slated at Hamilton.

Salt water game fishing enthusiasts who take the New Year's cruise on the United States liner Manhattan this year will have an opportunity to prove their skill in tournament competition, for the first annual game fishing tournament of the island will be in progress during the 2½-day stay of the cruise ship at Hamilton Harbor.

The United States Lines announced today the completion of arrangements with B. V. Seymour Smith, sports director of the Bermuda Development Board, for amateur sportsmen among the Manhattan's passengers to enter the contest. The line's agent in Bermuda is prepared to furnish entry forms and make reservations for the hire of boats, licensed boatmen and also lines and bait.

Canal Route Travel Expected to Increase

Capacity business can be expected this winter on the travel route around America by way of the Panama Canal, according to present indications, which have been strong enough to cause the ports along this popular vacation trail to prepare for a real rush.

For the past two years, according to figures just made public by the Panama Pacific Line, which operates the largest passenger steamers in the intercoastal service, there has been a steady and rapid gain in passenger carryings, the improvement having been noticeable before transatlantic bookings had indicated the return of better times. Particularly noticeable was the increase in 1934 and 1935 tourist business during the summer months, which are the off season for travel between New York and California.

Big Season at Lakewood.

After a round of social and athletic events during the Thanksgiving holiday, Lakewood, N. J., is concentrating on the Christmas season. The hotels are accommodating larger crowds than a year ago December, which is the ideal month in Lakewood. Sidney Grossman, director of Hotel Grossman, says indications point to a banner season this year at this winter vacation resort in the North.

Vibration Is Held Past on Normandie

French Line Director Says Flaw Is Remedied.

"With the knowledge and the means we now possess, the Normandie's vibration troubles may be regarded as a thing of the past. We have found the solution, and the trouble will be removed before she resumes service in March," says Henri Cangardel, managing director of the French Line, in a statement issued from the company's headquarters in Paris and just received here by Henri Morin de Linclays, resident general manager of the line here.

Calling attention to the fact that the Normandie's voyages were no more marked by vibration, which is common to all fast ships at one time or another, than those of some earlier express ships, Cangardel explains that the adjustments now being made, during the Normandie's winter lay-up were based on the findings of a number of technical experts who rode back and forth upon the Normandie during all her crossings for the purpose of studying every phase of her behavior.

Among those from Washington registered at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, Atlantic City, are Mrs. H. L. Brenninger, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Scull, Miss Anne Lewis and R. M. Kempton.

Sports Are Varied At Virginia Beach

Virginia Beach, Va., Dec. 14.—The winter sports and social program scheduled at this resort offers visitors for the 1935-36 season almost every type of entertainment.

The program just announced by Sidney Banks, managing director of the Cavalier Hotel, embraces over 50 sports as well as several types of social activities.

Heading the social calendar is the Christmas week Fox Hunt ball and the annual New Year's party. Numerous hunt dinners will also be held on week-ends until the conclusion of the season.

A Brilliant Actress Eschews The Cinema to Embrace Radio

Helen Hayes Finds a Strangely Satisfactory Medium of Expression in the New Form of Entertainment That Pays Heed Only to the Ear.

By Nelson B. Bell.

IT is a matter of some perturbation to the faithful of the playhouse that Helen Hayes should have nominated the radio as her chief medium of expression.

There is no affinity whatever between the invisible but audible form of entertainment afforded by the metalurgic tubes and the living or even the socalled "legitimate" theater. They are as far apart as the North Pole is from the South Pole. And that is an appreciable distance.

Yet, Miss Hayes, one of the most authentic artistes the theater is able to boast, has become suddenly infatuated with the airwaves as an instrument of personal expression, preferring that medium to the more erratic, but at the same time more comprehensive, cinema.

From the standpoint of the actor, the films are not a perfect device for the registering of human emotions. By the very nature of their manufacture, the artiste's style is abridged by the necessity of abandoning continuity and cumulative effect and devoting her talents to an intermittent, illogical and at times staccato procession of unrelated emotions and events.

To the true artiste this, perforce, must be an annoyance. But the ether is no less hedged about with impediments to a complete achievement of artistic effect.

Being solely an auricular form of entertainment, the radio immediately eliminates from the performer's repertoire every aspect of interpretative effort save only voice.

Suiting the action to the spoken word becomes a negligible factor in limning character or producing a definite dramatic climax. The entire problem reduces itself at once to inflections, intonations and tonal qualities of the vocal organ.

It is, perhaps, an odd commentary upon the present outlook of the theater's foremost artists that they should prefer a medium that so restricts the free play of their diverse capabilities.

* * * *

THERE can, of course, be no question of the authenticity of Miss Hayes' right to a place among the most brilliant actresses the native theater has produced.

From the time of her juvenile parlor performances to the present, Helen Hayes' career has been a progressive demonstration of a remarkable gift of interpretation. Her accomplishments behind the footlights and before the motion picture cameras have been marked by a conspicuous versatility, a soundness and an emotional warmth that few of her contemporaries have been able to muster.

It is only necessary to recall the vivid contrasts of such roles as she played in "What Every Woman Knows," "Petticoat Influence," "Coquette" and "Mary of Scotland," to realize the far reaches of this gifted young woman's exceptional talents.

The perfection of these impersonations has not been confined in its lineaments to an exclusively vocal accomplishment. By mobility of countenance, a penetrating command of facial, as well as vocal, expression and the eloquence of gesture, Miss Hayes has been able to make each of her stage portraits a compelling and a believable creation.

It may be the part of superior achievement to create comparable symbols of realistic accomplishment through the agency of a single sense, but the screen, barring its jigsaw method of encompassing a continuous and flowing narrative, still would seem to be a more advantageous outlet for such commanding talents as Miss Hayes' than a medium that appeals only to the ear and has nothing to offer the eye.

* * * *

THIS discussion, of course, suggests some such apprehension of the varied advantages of television as George White has anticipated in formulating the present structure of his twelfth and latest edition of the "Scandals," which closed an eminently successful week's engagement in the National Theater last night.

Mr. White has demonstrated with what complete satisfaction television may be relied upon to bring to both eye and ear the spectacles and commotions of the workaday world. The demonstration has rather surpassed Mr. White's ability to whip his revue into a perfected form of ribald diversion. The piece is still in flux. Substitutions of personnel and material still are going on and will be continued throughout the final tune-up week at the Majestic Theater in Brooklyn, preliminary to the gauchery's Christmas week premiere in the New Amsterdam Theater in Manhattan.

By the time its Forty-second street inaugural is reached, the "Scandals" should reflect that high quality of showmanship for which its impresario has been noted ever since his first adventurous plunge into productional activities as a keen rival of the late Flo Ziegfeld in the visual splendors of his creations.

Probably the most impressive coup Mr. White has contrived to date is the signing to a run-of-play contract of Master Rudy Vallee, one of the most fabulous names in the contemporary amusement world.

Mr. Vallee on opening night at the National—his first with the show,

HELEN HAYES,
Washington's distinguished star of the stage, screen and radio, who returns to the city of her nativity this week in Laurence Housman's play of "Victoria Regina," to be seen in the National Theater prior to its presentation on Broadway. In this new drama, Miss Hayes assumes the role of Britain's beloved Queen Victoria, impersonating the character from early youth to old age. It is her first appearance here since "Mary of Scotland."

Acting Group Is Reorganized to Do Winter Plays

The Willard Players are casting for their first winter production, "Yellow Jack," to be presented in Roosevelt High School auditorium at Christmas time.

Sidney Howard authored "Yellow Jack" with the collaboration of Paul de Kruif, and in it he tells the story of Walter Reed's fight against yellow fever, of the heroism of science. The play was presented in New York in the spring of 1934 for the first time, and followed the same author's adaptation of "Dodsworth" in being a play of unquestioned interest.

In presenting the play, the Willard Players are departing from the form of entertainment which has made them known in Washington. During the summer of 1934 they presented their own production of "The Drunkard," both in Washington and in Baltimore. Later in the same season, they presented, in Baltimore, a musical version of the Washington success "Bootleg Babies." This past summer, the Willard Players presented the Myrtis Morgan production of "East Lynn."

While the policy of winter productions and straight dramatic presentations may seem an innovation to Washington audiences for the players to attempt, to them it is merely the fruition of a long-contemplated plan. In order to follow out this plan of winter, as well as summer, production it was necessary for the Willard Players to reorganize. The group is now under the guidance of a board of directors consisting of Donald A. Bolton, chairman; Elizabeth Gatlin Pritchard, Walter Studdiford, Hugo Inden and Rudulph Justice Watson.

Sylvia Makes Change In Winter Wardrobe

Sylvia Sidney, starring in "Trail of the Lonesome Pine," a Walter Wanger production, has found it necessary to make a slight adjustment in her winter wardrobe. The reason is a charming new convertible roadster of yellow with a fine green line.

Young Bride Is Defiant of the Social Register

Blue bloods made Eddy Duchin famous.

The youthful dance-orchestra maestro, currently busy in "Coronado," gay musical movie at Paramount, was first recognized and boosted to success by the swankier section of the country.

Eddy, who is working with Johnny Downs, Betty Burgess, Alice White, Jack Haley and Leon Errol in his initial film venture, started his professional career as a pharmacist. Graduate of the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, Duchin planned to step into his father's shoes as operator of chain drug stores.

Tunes kept running through his head, however, and his fingers had a habit of running up and down the keyboard. He got a job with Leo Reisman, playing at the old Waldorf-Astoria, finally going with him to the fashionable Central Park Casino.

At the close of the season, Reisman left, but Duchin remained at the request of the operators. Society folk had fallen in love with his piano style and demanded his retention Eddy formed his own band and success came almost immediately.

Continually thrown with the ultra-ultra, it wasn't extraordinary that the 26-year-old leader eventually married into their charmed circle. On June 5 he was wedded to Marjorie Oelrichs in New York.

In marrying Duchin, Miss Oelrichs knew she would be suspended from the blue-blood bible, the Social Register. But love, rather than social prestige, is what Marjorie values most in life.

In a recent interview she stated, "I have Eddy. Nothing else matters. Phooey for the Social Register. It's just a private telephone book, anyway."

Miss Hayes Assumes an Almost Modern Role as Revered Queen

In Undertaking Title Role in "Victoria Regina," Star Was Showered With Invaluable Data; Something About Her Leading Man and Producer.

WHEN Helen Hayes comes to the National Theater tomorrow night in the title role of "Victoria Regina," she will be enacting a familiar, almost contemporary, figure, compared with such past historical assignments as "Mary of Scotland" and "Caesar and Cleopatra."

Playing Queen Victoria has led to all sorts of novel experiences, Miss Hayes says. Emerging into twentieth century guise after a session in full costume at the photographer's, she told of the wealth of material on one of England's greatest sovereigns which had been made available to her.

"WHEN I was in London this fall," she recounted, "I pored over drawings and portraits in museums; I saw all Victoria's clothes; I talked with members of her family who had been in her household as children, whom she had practically 'brought up,' and who gave me the most fascinating sidelights on her personality! And then I went to Kensington and Windsor and visited some of the rooms where the very scenes we portray in this play took place.

"It was a tremendous help to me. It may sound silly, but it really gave me something to be able to stand in the place where Victoria stood when she heard of the King's death and her own accession to the throne, or where she became engaged to Prince Albert.

"And then, I have received any number of presents, all connected with Victoria. Charles Laughton gave me a beautiful piece of lace which had been made for Victoria's wedding, with V. R. worked into the the design. Adrienne Allen, a distinguished English actress who is now appearing in "Pride and Prejudice," sent me the queen's own signature, and someone else gave me a very unusual Victoria stamp, with a rare head of the queen on it.

"It is very strange to be playing a famous historical figure so close to us today. One day when I was going over my lines with my mother she reminded me of the fact that her mother—my grandmother—had stood with the crowds in the London streets to watch Queen Victoria's wedding procession go by!

"The crowd was rather dubious about a foreign marriage, and grandmother heard a man who was standing next to her defend the match on the ground that the queen herself was the daughter of a German mother."

At this point Miss Hayes broke off to call attention to the beauty of her costume, which was just being carried off.

"DID you ever see a lovelier gown than that? Some of the costumes I wear in this play are the most beautiful I have ever had." Of course it's been said that Victoria herself couldn't possibly have had good taste in the matter of clothes, that she was a dowdy little lady who cared very little about frivolities. But as a young woman and a newly-married queen she had perfectly gorgeous clothes—I know, because I've seen them!

"Not," added Miss Hayes with a wry smile, "that they aren't terribly uncomfortable to one who is not accustomed to them. I don't understand how women ever lived inside those narrow waistbands, and the innumerable flounced petticoats they had to wear."

VINCENT PRICE, Miss Hayes' leading man in "Victoria Regina," has had stage aspirations since he was 10, but seemed fated for a schoolmaster's career until a chance encounter in London last winter set his steps in a different direction.

It developed that a friend knew someone who knew someone else who was an associate of John Gielgud, who knew Norman Marshall, producer at the Gate Theater. Mr. Price was passed, very much like a bucket, from hand to hand until he was finally deposited at the stage-door of the Gate Theater, London's leading experimental, nonprofessional and noncommercial playhouse.

He found Mr. Marshall in the process of casting Maurine Watkins' gangster melodrama, "Chicago." Tall men with American accents were at a premium, and Mr. Price found himself, in the twinkling of an eye, "doubling" as a burly policeman and a venerable judge.

Once "Chicago" was on the boards, Mr. Marshall turned to preparing "Victoria Regina." Mr. Price, hearing rumors to that effect around the theater, went to Mr. Marshall and called his attention to the fact that he, Vincent Price, bore a remarkable, similarity to portraits of Albert, the prince consort, and that he could produce a German accent of unquestionable authenticity, due to his long stay in German-speaking countries. As a matter of fact, he could also have told Mr. Marshall that he had been an admirer and keen student of the prince's for a long time, and had read every book about him that had been published, but he felt that such information, although an interesting coincidence, was probably irrelevant, and, therefore, withheld it.

Mr. Marshall agreed with him that he seemed admirably suited to the role of Albert, and promptly forgot about it, or appeared to.

Two weeks later, however, Mr. Price was hurriedly summoned to the theater. A script was thrust into his hands, he read a few pages, and forthwith found himself cast in the part.

HIS success in the role paved the way for his engagement by Gilbert Miller for the American production, an engagement contingent upon the approval of Miss Hayes. The actress made a flying trip to England in October, saw Mr. Price, and the matter was settled.

Mr. Price is still a trifle dazed; one does not, even with the most theatrical imagination in the world, envisage oneself as leading man to Helen Hayes in one's first professional engagement.

His attitude toward the character of the prince consort is a mixture of admiration and humility. "He must have been about as good as a man could possibly be," says Mr. Price. "To this day he is not fully appreciated in England. He never completely lived down the stigma of being a foreigner, and historians have not helped him any since they have always either misinterpreted or belittled him.

"I think his principal characteristics were great intelligence and humanity; also he had an extraordinary sense of humor, or else he would never have survived the bitterness and prejudice which he encountered during so many years of his life in England."

THE only consistent international producer in the theater today, Gilbert Miller's supremacy in the matter of transoceanic commutation is unquestioned in theatrical circles. He has, likewise, a penchant for two or three day visits out to Hollywood by air, and just before his last departure from England secured a pilot's license in the expectation of piloting his own plane in the near future.

For many years Mr. Miller has divided his time and energies equally between New York and London. At the moment he is sponsoring not only Miss Hayes' vehicle but a production of "Libel," which, after a two weeks' run in Philadelphia, will open in New York shortly before "Victoria Regina." His latest English production, "Tovaritch," with Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Eugenie Leontovich in the leading roles, is the comedy hit of the season in London.

In addition to his activities as a producer, Mr. Miller owns several theaters in both New York and London and is also a director of note. Stars like Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Herbert Marshall are contracted to him and to no other for their stage appearances; he has a unique knowledge of the continental theater, and has sponsored innumerable successful continental importations on Broadway.

THE son of the late Henry Miller, himself actor, producer and director, Gilbert Miller has rapidly become, like his illustrious father, something of a legend, due not only to the foregoing roster of varied prosperous enterprises but also to the personality of the man himself.

Endowed with all the charm of his father, and a positively terrifying capacity for work, he is at once feared and adored by those for whom he, paradoxically, works. His uncanny memory has added to the legend. He can remember where the property man put an old hat six years ago, and he can tell you unerringly in which newspaper and on what date a certain item appeared. But he has difficulty in recalling names.

Once in London, wishing to cable his secretary in New York, he could not remember her name, although he had been using it for years, and had to phone his wife in Paris to learn what it was.

Among his successful productions are some of the plays which will endure longest in the memories of American theatergoers, and one and all they are studded with the names of the finest players on the stage today.

One has only to think of "The Age of Innocence," with Katharine Cornell; "Berkeley Square," with Leslie Howard; "Journey's End," "Our Betters," with Ina Claire; "The Captive," with Helen Menkin; "The Constant Wife," with Ethel Barrymore; "Her Cardboard Lover," with Jeanne Eagles and Leslie Howard; "The Good Fairy" and "Petticoat Influence," with Helen Hayes, and "The Late Christopher Bean," with Pauline Lord and Walter Connelly, to know that this is so.

This is their first appearance together on any local screen and affords the Capital an opportunity to judge why this talented pair has become one of the rages of London. Leon Errol's Film.

Leon Errol will have one of the chief comedy roles in "Coronado," Paramount musical.

Comic Star Returns After Long Illness

For the first time in four and one-half months, W. C. Fields paid a visit to Hollywood last week.

The long-ailing comedian appeared at Paramount studio for an hour's visit with friends. He pronounced himself to be in good health, although not completely cured of the sacro-iliac ailment that had him incapacitated for so long.

"I'll be completely well in a couple of more months," said Fields. "I've lost 25 pounds and I'm feeling better than I have in a year."

Ann Corio and Ace Comedians Are at Gayety

"Flash and Dash" is the big burlesque offering that opens a week's engagement at the Gayety Theater, starting with the usual matinee this afternoon.

With everything new, spick and span for its first trip over the Independent Circuit, this production promises to be a hit.

A sweet-looking cast has been gathered for the show, headed by two able mirth makers in Jack Hunt and Clyde Bates. These comic boys need no introduction to the devotees of humorous clowning, spicy gagging and grotesque posturing.

Glamorous Enda "Hot-Cha" Dee shares the spotlight with the comedians, due to her extraordinarily animated dances. Then there are Tom Bondy, character man; Lew Kessler, fast stepping juvenile; Mimi Lynn, soubrette; Charlotte Farrell, captivating prima donna, and others of equal merit in the amusement field.

Eighteen joyful girls, good-looking and well-trained, go through their chorus paces in a dozen or more musical numbers.

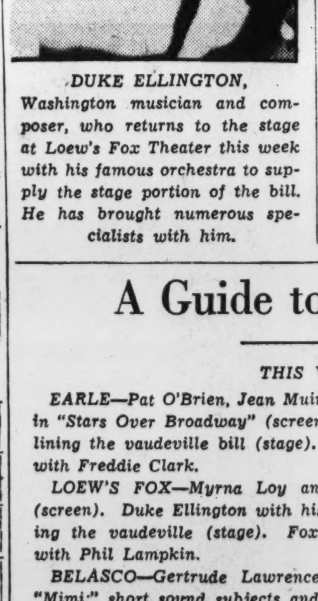
As an extra added attraction, Manager Jimmy Lake is offering his burlesque fans the highest salaried performer in this branch of the theater, Ann Corio, direct from an eight weeks' engagement in St. Louis, and prior to her debut in the larger picture palaces of the East.

Two More Hits Scheduled for Little Theater

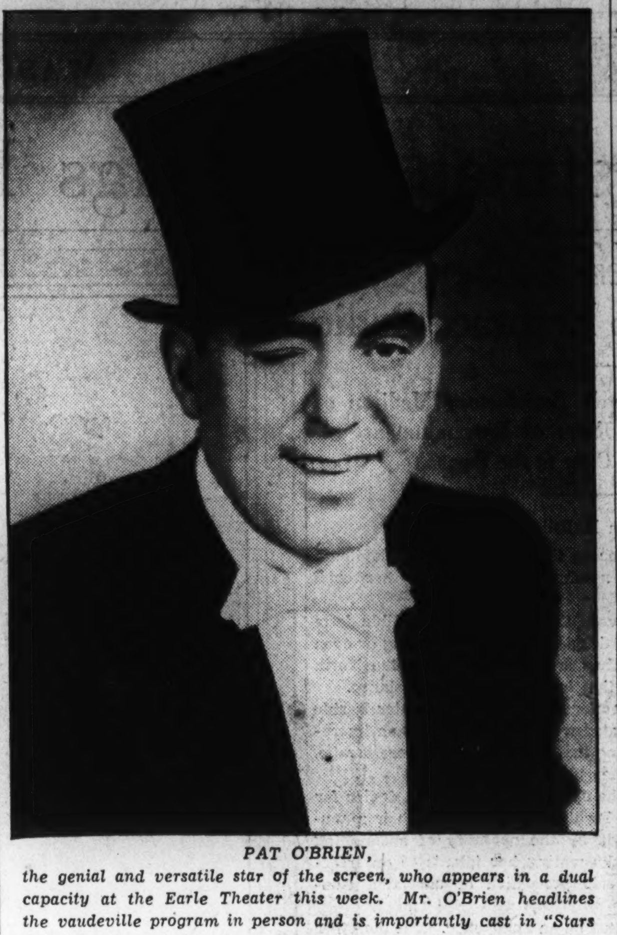
"Little Miss Marker," the picture that first established Shirley Temple as a sensational screen star, and "The Man on the Flying Trapeze," last W. C. Fields film before he was ordered from the studios by his physicians, are scheduled at the Little Theater this week.

"Little Miss Marker," which will be shown today through Wednesday, offers tiny Shirley, then only 4 years old, as a darling of typical Broadway gamblers who turn out to have hearts of gold. Adolphe Menjou, Charles Bickford, Lynne Overman and Dorothy Dell are featured in the cast.

"The Man on the Flying Trapeze," Thursday through Saturday, presents the inimitable Fields as a hen-pecked husband, who gets into trouble by making home-brew in his cellar.



DUKE ELLINGTON, Washington musician and composer, who returns to the stage at Loew's Fox Theater this week with his famous orchestra to supply the stage portion of the bill. He has brought numerous specialists with him.



PAT O'BRIEN,
the genial and versatile star of the screen, who appears in a dual capacity at the Earle Theater this week. Mr. O'Brien headlines the vaudeville program in person and is importantly cast in "Stars Over Broadway," the screen feature for the current week and an excellent one.

by the way—gave a distinctly disinterested and lackadaisical performance. His listlessness and obvious displeasure over the tasks assigned him were as transparent to the audience as a pane of glass. Mr. Vallee was in what is technically known as a blue funk. His only anxiety seemed to be that the whole world might not realize it.

From this unhappy state of affairs grew an expanding rumor that Mr. Vallee and Mr. White were practically at the so-called parting of the ways. Mr. Vallee seemed destined to adorn the "Scandals" with the limpid qualities of his artistry no longer than last night. Then the metamorphosis.

As was vaguely prophesied by this department no longer ago than last Thursday, Mr. White suddenly permitted Mr. Vallee to do some of the things he had most wanted to do in the general direction of the gayety of nations. Mr. Vallee, in high good humor, rather than a dudgeon of the same altitude, hied him to New York for his weekly broadcast and over the air announced the burying of the tomahawk by him and Mr. White to the great future glory of both them and the "Scandals."

That, as has been frequently remarked here and elsewhere, is show business.

One of the most surprising aspects of this whole contentious and seemingly insuperable impasse is that on Thursday night, when Mr. Vallee was in New York, Cliff Edwards took over his major duties on the stage and succeeded in acquitting himself with rather more glory than the prodigious crooner imported into the show for the sole purpose of making them stand out as distinctive and incomparable personal accomplishments.

Whatever else the "Scandals" in its twelfth edition may lack, it certainly is packed tight with talent.

Mr. White is aware of this condition every time he glances at the payroll, which, one surmises, is not the least of his present pastimes!

Columbians Are Doing Glaspell Play This Week

The Columbia Players will present "Inheritors," by Susan Glaspell, as the second production of their season, at Pierce Hall, December 18 and 19.

This is the famous play which was first produced at Provincetown in 1921 and has been played every year since by Jasper Deeter at his Hedgerow Theater in Moylan-Rose Valley, Pa. It has even lured its original star, Ann Harding, back from Hollywood to play the role of Madeline again and again.

The play is about freedom of thought and belief, and about the descendants of pioneers left a rich inheritance by their forefathers and what they do as inheritors. It might almost be a dramatization of the Declaration of Independence and what has happened to it.

Yvonne Kushner, well known in Washington theatrical circles since her Central High School days, is directing. The settings—an 1879 midwest farmhouse and a 1920 college library—are designed by Jane Lasater Rubey and executed by the Columbians' crew under the direction of Warren Head.

Fought Draw.

Victor McLaglen, who appears with Mae West in her new picture, "Klondike Lou," fought a draw in an exhibition with Jack Johnson when the latter was world's heavyweight champion.

Straight From the Studios

Melodrama Again Is Coming Into Its Exciting Own; DeMille Parries Thrusts of Il Duce; Movies Best in Shorts.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 14.—After a decade, Hollywood is returning to the reliable old melodrama, complete with villains, auto chases and all the other cardiac trimmings that go to make walloping entertainment. The heroines are as pure as they are beautiful, and the leading men are heroes, as anyone can see by their shirts thrown open at the throat.

Begun by the G-Man flurry, the "pursuit cycle" is amuck in all the studios as handsome fellows hurtle by airplane or cut the Pacific in speed boats, hot on the trail of leering heavies.

A survey at Paramount this week finds Fred MacMurray at the helm of a roaring motorcycle, breaking through traffic in pursuit of Robert Young and Claudette Colbert in "The Bride Comes Home." Even the glamorous Marlene Dietrich gets chased in "Desire" when she and Gary Cooper are run down by the gendarmerie on popping motorbikes.

The songs of Gladys Swarthout and John Boles are interspersed with thundering hoofs as the lovers elude the vigilantes in "Rose of the Rancho." Motorboat, horseback and auto chases are used in "Woman Trap" as Gertrude Michael and George Murphy track down their quarry.

"Rose Marie" at M-G-M is a musical, but there's foul play afoot in the big forest fire scene. And at the same studio, melodramatic shivers are on tap in "Three Live Ghosts."

"It Had to Happen," still under way at 20th Century-Fox, is another major hair-raiser, and it isn't hard to get the creeps watching Warner Baxter and Gloria Stuart in "The Prisoners of Shark Island" at the same film plant. And there, too John Boles is having a time of it as an American courier through Cuban swamps with Spanish snipers at his heels in "A Message to Garcia."

The only melodrama that doesn't sound like a chase is Warners' "The Walking Dead." but Warren William and Bette Davis say that's a misnomer of a title.

DeMille To Il Duce.

Although he is fond of battle scenes, Cecil B. DeMille delivered himself on the subject of conquest the other day. But plotter that he is, he calls the kettle black.

Near the globe which revolves slowly in the foyer of the new Los Angeles Times Building is a sign which says "Don't Touch the Globe." The director read the sign and remarked: "They ought to send that to Mussolini." Then he drove to his office and laid out plans for a temple-crashing scene that will kill off thousands of Philistines in "Samson and Delilah."

Add Thumbnail Sketches of Hollywood.

Claudette Colbert—"The place where you can't keep a secret."

Director Archie Mayo—"The only place unaffected by the Presidential order reducing the production of ham."

Dix Will Stay.

Richard Dix has decided to remain in Hollywood, and may, under his new contract, become a director as well as actor. England recently has put in its bid for the actor, and Gaumont-British also wanted to sign him. But he has turned aside their flattering offers, because he wants to spend the next two years in Hollywood with his wife and sons.

Harold Lloyd Joy Rider.

Visiting Adolphe Menjou at the Good Samaritan Hospital, Harold Lloyd was accompanied by a friend who remained in the ante-room. While the two actors inside were discussing Menjou's early return to Lloyd's "The Milky Way" set, a nurse approached the companion and said:

"Don't you want to see Mr. Menjou? It's perfectly all right."

"No thanks," the man said. "You see, I don't know him. I just came for the ride."

Figures of Speech.

Weep no more, my lady, or words to that effect, went from Harold Lloyd to Helen Mack when she told him of the death of her Scottie, Hoot Mon, several days ago. And now Helen's weeping has subsided with the receipt from Lloyd of a cocker spaniel, which she has named Noble, after a friend.

With the dog came this note from Lloyd: "Hoot Mon, rest him, was a comedian. There's no substitute for a comedian, so I am sending you a romantic lead. When he grows up he ought to make a first-class dramatic lead. Don't let him chew the scenery."

Hollywood Hay-Day.

All Hollywood got on the hay-wagon Saturday night at Grace Bradley's highly touted Hayrack party. At least it seemed as though everybody was there. The party assembled at Grace's home at Sherman Oaks, and proceeded by trucks to a nearby barn which was well appointed with hay. Nobody got lost, coming or going. The only flurry was caused by the temporary disappearance of Joe Penner's duck.

Cutie and The Beast.

It was a love scene between Mae West and Victor McLaglen on the "Klondike Lou" set. McLaglen with mock ardor, went at the lady like a wrestler. The director called no dice, but since everybody, including Mae, were laughing uncontrollably, Vic kept on. The result was that the lady laughed too much and had to rest in order to regain her breath. Then, still laughing, she glanced at McLaglen and said, merely, "Vic, you're cute."

That Coogan-Grable Match.

Although Betty Grable and Jackie Coogan announced their engagement, they cannot marry for at least two years. The lady's contract at RKO will not permit matrimony until she's 21. Authority for this is her father. And so the interesting announcement of their engagement comes to a bit of front-page publicity so that the pair's vaudeville tour could be set off with momentum.

The Prodigious Clifford Odets Slips a Bit From His Pedestal

His Most Recent Play, With the Miltonian Title of "Paradise Lost," Is Guilty of What One Acute Observer Terms a "Scattered Attack."

By Willard Keefe.

NEW YORK, Dec. 14 (AP).—There no longer can be any doubt about the importance of Clifford Odets as a dramatist.

His most recent drama, "Paradise Lost," was inspected by the theater's champions more in sorrow than in judgment, a critical attitude hitherto reserved almost exclusively for the plays of O'Neill and Shaw.

Odets won this flattering bracketing by his superior plays of last season. His talent, the surest among the new dramatists, led his intellectual clacque to demand perfection itself in his new play. "Paradise Lost" disappointed that expectation, but the champions are all sporting about it, busy among themselves revising the drama to the design they prefer and patting Odets on the head for a valiant, if misguided, effort.

The truth is, however, "Paradise Lost" is an exciting thing to see. Odets, scorning "synethetic plot" and sometimes forensic beyond all stopping, writes with such stormy beauty that even at its worst his new play is generally more satisfying than the things you are accustomed to encounter in the theater.

ALONG with plot, Odets throws overboard the work-a-day characterizations of the drama. His hero, he confides, is the "American middle class of liberal tendency" in a losing battle with a force "unseen, nameless but constant and deadly," which is to say the vallain, or "dirty heavy."

Well, the American middle class of liberal tendency has a great deal to grieve over in these times, and where can it get a better spokesman than Odets? He speaks through the family and guests of Leo Gordon, a purse manufacturer trying to resist the drive of the "unseen, nameless" enemy mentioned above to strip a home from his family and accumulated waifs.

The Gordon family, foredoomed, includes the father, ruined by a thieving partner; the strong-willed mother, a daughter, bereft of love and finding melancholy solace in the piano; a son dying of sleeping sickness and another son, who, no longer serviceable to the Olympic team, finds himself in a world that offers him utterly nothing.

A disciple of Chekhov, and doubtless with the latter's "The Cherry Orchard" in mind, Odets tenants this communal canteen with a variety of Chekhovian idiots.

He gives them irrelevant comments, sometimes helpful to his indictment of an illogical world, but often as startling and intrusive as the unexpected swear word of the duchess who, until then, had taken no part in the conversation.

THE economic misery of the world destroys the Gordon home. The defeated sit in a bare room and invoice their misfortunes of death, frustration and poverty.

A ragged outcast arrives to tell them, in effect, to pull themselves together.

That sets the elder Gordon off on a magniloquent message of good cheer to bring a hopeful curtain on better things ahead—possibly the dictatorship of the proletariat.

You dont' find fault with Odets' thought or his fury with the political and economic injustices that overwhelm his people. You just don't like his scattered attack. It isn't very good theater, especially from a man who gave us such magnificent theater in the bold discontent of "Waiting for Lefty" and the deep, moving warmth of "Awake and Sing."

There, in those earlier plays, each incident seemed right and inescapable; here too often they are self-conscious and contrived. For one peerless scene like the beginning of the third act, where the mother tells her dying son the story of Moses, there are a half dozen windy outbursts such as the Yankee radical's thunder against war. Powerful but awkward.

Movie Mentor Uses Periscope in Work

Hollywood directors have the reputation of being able to overcome almost any difficulty in filming pictures, but Mitchell Leisen topped 'em all when he directed an entire scene in "Hands Across the Table" through a periscope.

The sequence, between Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray, was to be played in the corner of a narrow room. But, after lights and camera were set up, there was no room for the director. Undaunted, Leisen went into a conference with the property man, who dashed off to reappear in a few moments with the periscope.

ANN CORIO,
the reigning beauty of burlesque, who comes to the Gayety Theater this week with the "Flash and Dash" Company, prior to transferring her talents to Broadway's "big time" productions.

Title Is More Vital Than Play, Says an Author

British Adaptor Cites an Example or Two to Prove His Case.

By Hubbard Keavy.

HOLLYWOOD, Dec. 14 (AP).—The growing use of better works of literature as movie material is due primarily, W. P. Lipscomb, English playwright, said today, to the effect the title of a classic has on public consciousness.

"A Tale of Two Cities," "David Copperfield," "Les Miserables," sell themselves because so many feel acquainted with their charcters, or because of curiosity, or both, Lipscomb declared.

"Hollywood has not turned to the classics because there is a shortage of material," Lipscombe said. "Nor are the established literary works chosen so much because of great stories or great plots. There are great characters in literature and often a literary work is chosen for the screen solely because its character lends itself to the action necessary to celluloid drama.

"For instance, Ronald Colman in 'Two Cities' will attract more paying customers than Colman in something concocted by the scenarist.

"Although this year has seen the production of many well-known works, the surface, as we all know, has only been scratched."

The list of time-tested stories which Hollywood is filming or preparing to film is imposing. It includes "Silas Marner," to star Lionel Barrymore; "Under Two Flags," for Ronald Colman; Kipling's "Kin" and "Captains Courageous," for Freddie Bartholomew; "Robin Hood" adapted from the Scott poem, for James Cagney; "Romeo and Juliet;" "The Last of the Mohicans;" "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and three completed but unreleased: "Captain Blood," "Crime and Punshment," and "A Tale of Two Cities."

PRODUCTION began this week on "The Voice of Bugle Ann," a story about a Missiouri hunting hound and his devoted master. (The latter is Lionel Barrymore.) In it, Barrymore will deliver the plea made for the life of a dog by Senator George Vest, some 50 years ago, in a court in Warrensburg, Mo.

MacKinlay Kantor, author of the story on which the film is based, uses the Vest plea.

Because censorship restrictions would not permit Samuel Goldwyn to film the play, "Children's Hour," treating of a delicate sex subject, nor even to use the title, he brought its author, Lillian Hellman, here to revamp the story.

A DOCTOR falls in love with a pretty patient, divorces his wife and marries the girl. But the wife wins back her husband. This is the basis of the plot of "The Indestructible Mrs. Talbot"—Ann Harding, Herbert Marshall and Margaret Lindsay—which started this week at R. K. O.

"The Man in the Black Hat," a comedy murder mystery aimed to hit the same level as "The Thin Man," went into work today at Warners, with Warren William as the wise-cracking detective.

Dickie More and Virginia Weidler are featured in "Timothy's Quest," based on the Kate Douglas Wiggin yarn, which Paramount started Wednesday.

Peculiar Sounds Are Recorded by Unusual Quirks

Unique Effects Caught by Unplanned Sound "Situations" at the "Mixer."

Every motion picture studio has its library of sound effects wherein are stored thousands of unique noises for possible use in its films. Each individual sound is separately indexed, the headings of the catalogue ranging from titles such as "man sniffing bowl of soup" to "fire crackling in hearth."

Not all the strange sounds were intentionally recorded, however. Many are there quite by accident, for the studio sound men are an alert group, ever ready to capture a new effect to add to the constantly growing lists.

In one card in a library reads: "Hum of bees swarming."

That one was recorded not long ago on the "I Live for Love" set, when a swarm of bees broke up a synthetic wedding on the studio back lot. The shriek of Dolores Del Rio, as the bees buzzed perilously close to her nose, forms a part of this accidentally recorded effect.

Animal sounds are in the library mostly by premeditation. Sound men found it comparatively simple to record the barks of various breeds of dogs and the meows of feline household pets. But this division also contains its share of accidental recordings. There is the bray of a donkey, for instance, the chirping of crickets and the song of a California nightingale, all obtained by chance and carefully preserved.

Hugh Herbert is responsible for a couple of contributions under the "sleepy sounds" heading. An alert mixer happened to spy the comedian's head nodding between scenes and hastily moved his microphone boom over behind Herbert. He was rewarded with an assorted group of audible yawns and, subsequently, a series of snores.

Another unique sound accidentally recorded falls under the heading of "nails falling on wooden floor." This was captured on the "Captain Blood" set a few weeks ago. It was a costly but unavoidable accident which led to this recording.

During the making of a scene between Errol Fynn and Olivia de Havilland, the mixer heard a noise resembling nails striking the floor of the sound stage. He halted the "take" and went on the stage to investigate, meanwhile instructing the recorder to continue his apparatus in operation.

It took the mixer ten minutes to discover that a couple of pigeons had gotten into the sound stage and were scratching around in the dust of the rafters, knocking an occasional loose nail down onto the floor. The pigeons had to be shooed off the stage before filming could be continued, but the sound department had a new effect for its library.

Perhaps the most unique effect in the library—that of a plane falling—also was accidentally recorded. It happened three years ago while a company was shooting a picture on a back lot. An airplane, undergoing tests, it later developed, persistently flew over the studio, ruining half a dozen scenes. Finally the director looked up at the offending ship.

"I wish that fellow would lose a wing or something!" he exclaimed.

As if in answer to his words, a wing of the ship collapsed and fell away from the plane.

A Thumbnail Sketch of a Man Who Made Herr Max About Face

William Dieterle, Who Started Out to Be a Carpenter, Is Immune to Distraction When Concentrating on the Serious Business of Production.

IN 1918, a tall, handsome German actor named William Dieterle sat at a table with Max Reinhardt, the greatest theatrical figure in Europe.

"I'll give you a contract on one condition," Reinhardt said. "You must promise never to have anything to do with motion pictures."

Dieterle promised. The contract was signed. In 1921 he broke the promise.

On October 9, a motion picture directed by Reinhardt and Dieterle was shown to the world. The picture is Reinhardt's production of Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream."

When Dieterle joined the Reinhardt company as an actor he had the same antipathy as his master toward film work. He meant it when he promised never to act in pictures.

It was E. A. Dupont who changed Dieterle's mind about films.

It was Dieterle who changed Reinhardt's mind about motionpicture work.

DIETERLE started out in life to be a carpenter. That's what his mother wanted him to be. He wanted to act, so he deserted his work bench for the stage. From 1918 until 1921 he was leading man for Reinhardt. In 1921 he broke his promise to the master and played the lead in a Dupont film.

Why did he break his promise? Because he felt that the stage was limited—that the motion-picture camera was the greatest medium for telling the kind of stories he wants to tell.

Dieterle still feels that way. And so does Reinhardt now. But it took Dieterle some time to convince the master that his was the right viewpoint.

Dieterle hasn't changed much in the seven years he has been in Hollywood. He went there to direct and act in three German version pictures.

He stayed to direct American films, including "The Last Flight," "Fog Over Frisco," "Du Barry" and "Dr. Socrates." He still speaks with an accent.

He still wears white gloves when he works—a clean pair every day—a habit he acquired in Germany.

He has an odd way of looking at his work. He feels that a man has accomplished his ambition if he helps to make one great picture in his lifetime. He considers "A Midsummer Night's Dream" such a picture. During the seven months the fantasy-comedy was being put on film, he thought of nothing else. His microscopes, chess board, piano and tiny Salvation Army organ were neglected. Twenty-four hours a day he had only one object in life—to help make "A Midsummer Night's Dream" the greatest picture ever produced.

DIETERLE is a man with boundless enthusiasm. When he's working at anything, he works at nothing else. For the past two months he has been filming the life of Pasteur, starring Paul Muni, which will be released under the title "Enemy of Man." This, too, is a picture he has waited years to make.

Dieterle lives in a big house overlooking Dark Canyon. When he isn't working, he spends his time looking through his microscopes, reading, playing chess, playing the tiny portable organ Mrs. Dieterle—"Charlie"—bought him from a Salvation Army store, or eating his favorite dish, pineapple pancakes.

Dieterle will tell you that "A Midsummer Night's Dream" is a great and beautiful picture because of the Reinhardt treatment of Shakespeare's work. But Reinhardt will tell you that the picture couldn't have been made without Dieterle—without his great knowledge of the camera, of acting, of cutting and lighting—without his artistry and directional skill.

Six Success Rules Given by Stanwyck

Urging Hollywood's would-be feminine starlets from making a mistake common in the film city, Barbara Stanwyck advised her sister Thespians against being seen too often in night clubs and other popular places of entertainment. The star of Reliance's "Red Salute" issued do's and don'ts.

The young player, she asserts, should 1, be considerate to fellow workers; 2, be patient; 3, spend much time alone, planning. Miss Stanwyck says she should not: 1, be seen in night spots; 2, lose her sense of humor; 3, go out frequently with producers, directors and other executives.

DOROTHY WILSON,
featured with Will Rogers in the cast of "In Old Kentucky," the Twentieth Century-Fox picturization of the famous old melodrama of the racetracks, to open soon at the Palace.

Living Composers Look Hopefully to Forum-Laboratory at New York for Public Hearing

WPA Assists Creative Musicians of America

Critic Finds Alfred Einstein Too Pessimistic Over Outlook of Current Artists in His Article in Modern Music.

By Ray C. B. Brown.

What is the future of the composer who has to make a living in competition with the composers of the past? With "popular demand" calling for Mozart, Beethoven, Brahms, Chaikovski and Wagner in our orchestral halls, the living composer is fortunate who secures an occasional performance of his music. Sympathetic conductors may do their best to help him, but they have to consider their audiences and the frequently-expressed desire for music that is already familiar. Alfred Einstein discusses this subject with considerable acumen in the current issue of Modern Music.

"The radio and the talkies," he declares, "are the only economic fields that could offer the modern composer work, big and little tasks, if they chose. For the rest, the composer has become more and more isolated. He stands alone, without ties, confronting the gigantic whole of society. And this society feels that it has no obligations toward him. In a way it is right, or at any rate, justified.

"His only chance is the modern music festival. If he is lucky, his work is accepted by the jury; if he is even luckier, it is carefully rehearsed by a conductor or a string quartet or a pianist, and receives good notices. Then, perhaps, it may even be published. A direct approach to interpretative artists is usually hopeless; for, especially if they are celebrated, they are almost insuperably afraid of novelties. In both hemispheres there are not a dozen conductors, pianists, violinists or singers left who consider it their duty to be pioneers for composers who have not been dead at least 20 years.

"Outside of Italy there are no longer half a dozen opera directors who can risk accepting and producing a new work purely on the basis of its artistic merits. Germany, during the period of 1919-1929, was the country where that was possible; then the economic crisis and later the so-called political revolution demolished German opera so completely, crushed the budding of a modern operatic art so utterly, that a new harvest is out of the question for decades to come.

"What is true of opera holds for all other branches of music as well. The composer's field is narrowing. His customers—church, social, choral societies—are becoming fewer and fewer as the state arrogates more rights. The composer's surest support at the present time would still seem to be private patronage."

It seems to me that Mr. Einstein is unduly pessimistic in his outlook. There is more than one indication in this country that the state is not trying to make the lot of the composer harder, but on the contrary to assist him in the difficult times which concern us all. Take, for example, the composers' formum-laboratory which has been inaugurated in New York by the Teaching of Music and Music Appreciation Unit of the Federal Music Project, of which Dr. Nikolai Sokolov is the director.

The first meeting, held October 30 at Midtown Community Music Center was addressed by Ashley Pettis, in charge of the forum, and by Roy Harris, both American composers of optimistic mind. "We are hoping," said Mr. Pettis, "that through these evenings in intimate contact with composers we may do our part in removing the barrier which has always existed between the composer and the people who are, or should be, the consumers of his goods. Here will be afforded the opportunity to observe the composer at work. We will observe every type of music, written by competent musicians—music expressive of every shade of thought and feeling peculiar to this moment in history."

Mr. Harris expressed his pleasure and that of his fellow composers "at the promise and hope that the American Government will see fit to put their vast economic and social resources behind creative art in America. If education means anything to a people, then certainly the creation of an art must be part of that educational program. Music seems to have the power to awaken and release the emotions and spiritual qualities of people with greater unmistakable clarity than any of the other arts."

Thus far at the weekly meetings, the forum-laboratory has presented programs by Roy Harris, Isadore Freed, Virgil Thomson, Solomon Pimsleur, Goddard Lieberson, and Daniel Gregory Mason. Composers scheduled for participation include Henry Cowell, Harold Morris, Aaron Copland, Arthur Cohn, Marion Bauer, Charles Naginski, Frederick Jacobi, Elie Siegmeister, Charles Haubiel, Hunter Johnson, and Paul Frederick Bowles.

These forum demonstrations of contemporary music, I am informed by Mr. Pettis, have stimulated a public interest which has surprised the musicians themselves. The success of the project, as far as it has been carried, confirms my belief that the time is ripe for a thoroughly organized movement on behalf of living composers. Their music must be performed and they must be given a fair chance to prove the viability of their works.

The only way to understand music, ancient, mediaeval, classical or contemporary, is to listen to it carefully. Music that is significant, and not merely a pleasant succession of sounds, has a meaning which is worth attentive hearing. For the development of creative musical art in this country it is essential that we, as a people, do our listeners' part, and not dismiss a new composition with a shrug or a smile just because we do not understand it at a first hearing.

Music is a living art and not static form. The great composers of the past have altered forms to suit their purposes and have left us their works which we have learned to understand and to enjoy. But masterpieces are still going to be written, and we must realize that they will be different in form from those to which we are accustomed.

Concert at Arts Club.

The fifth annual Christmas concert by the choral group of the Arts Club, under the direction of Otto Torney Simon, will be presented on Wednesday night in the club auditorium. The program includes compositions by Bach, Handel, Cornelius, Vittoria, Praetorius and Franck.

Mme. Flagstad In Debut Here On Wednesday

Metropolitan Soprano Will Appear Jointly With Roman Totenberg.

Kirsten Flagstad, soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, generally considered one of the greatest singers of Wagnerian roles, will make her Washington debut on Wednesday morning at 11:15 in the Mayflower Hotel ballroom in a joint recital with Roman Totenberg, Polish violinist, whose American debut was made as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra on November 7. This recital opens the series of morning musicales in which Mrs. Lawrence Townsend will present many distinguished artists this season.

Mme. Flagstad (in private life Mrs. Henry Johansen, of Oslo, Norway) began her operatic career at 18 on December 12, 1913, in the role of Nuri in D'Albert's "Tiefland." For the next 20 years she was a hardworking singer in Scandinavian theaters, and during that period her roles numbered 39 in grand opera and 30 in comic opera and operetta. Those who heard her gradually spread her reputation abroad, and in 1933 she was invited to sing at Bayreuth, and again the following season.

Edwin McArthur will be accompanist for Mme. Flagstad and Arpad Sandor for Mr. Totenberg in the following program on Wednesday morning:

Air	Bach
Prelude and Allegro	Kreisler
Mr. Totenberg.
An die Musik, Du bist die Ruh', Die Forelle	Schubert
Rich. teure Halle	Wagner
Mme. Flagstad.
Prayer	Handel-Flesch
Guitarre	Moszkovski
Zapateado	Sarasate
Mr. Totenberg.
Eros, En svane, En drom	Grieg
In the Silent Night, Floods of Spring.	Rakhmaninov
Mme. Flagstad.
Dance from "La Vida Breve"	De Falla
Fountain of Arethusa	Szymanovski
Polonaise	Vieniavski
Mr. Totenberg.
Elsa's Traum	Wagner
Isolde's Liebestod	Wagner
Mme. Flagstad.

During the holiday season there will be an intermission of three weeks in Mrs. Townsend's morning musicales, which will be resumed on January 8 with a joint recital by Helen Jepson, soprano, and Richard Crooks, tenor. Thereafter the musicales will be presented weekly on January 15, 22 and 29, and February 5, 12 and 19.

Howard Severe Soloist For "Messiah" Program

Howard Severe, president of the Washington Oratorio Society since its inception three seasons ago, will be the bass soloist next Sunday afternoon when the organization presents its annual performance of Handel's "Messiah" in Central High School auditorium at 4 o'clock. The other soloists are Georgia Byers Campbell, soprano; Kathryn Sale English, contralto, and Wilfrid Smith, tenor.

George F. Kortzenborn will conduct the society's third presentation of Handel's masterpiece. The chorus will be assisted by an orchestra and by Edith B. Athey, organist, and Marjorie Davis, pianist.

Irra Petina, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, who will make her Washington debut this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Constitution Hall as soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra in a program entirely devoted to selections from standard operas.

Miss Petina, who began her stage career with a Russian opera company in Harbin, China, has attained distinction in her adopted country. She will be heard today in an aria from Chaikovski's "Jeanne d'Arc" and four excerpts from Bizet's "Carmen."

Metropolitan Star to Sing With Symphony Today

Mezzo-Soprano Irra Petina to Be Opera Program Soloist.

Irra Petina, mezzo-soprano of the Metropolitan Opera, will be introduced to Washington this afternoon as soloist in an operatic program to be given by the National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall at 4 o'clock under the direction of Dr. Hans Kindler. This is the first concert of a diversified operatic type that Dr. Kindler has arranged.

The first half of the program will open with the overture to "Die Meistersinger von Nuernberg," a familiar and always welcome item. Miss Petina will sing "Adieu, Forets" from Chaikovski's "Jeanne d'Arc," the one aria which has survived from that opera as a favorite concert number for singers whose voices have the depth and color requisite for its proper projection.

The aria will be followed by two intermezzi from Ermano Wolf-Ferrari's opera, "I Giojelli della Madonna." Forsaking the ingratiating and tuneful style of his earlier works, such as "Le Donne Curiose" and "Il Segreto di Susanna," Wolf-Ferrari turned for the subject of "The Jewels of the Madonna" to the verismo school. The plot is an exaggerated melodrama, but presents a colorful picture of Neapolitan life.

The opera was first produced in Berlin December 23, 1911, and its American premiere took place in Chicago the following January. In strong contrast to the generally dramatic character of the music, the two intermezzi are charming numbers. The first is a nocturne with a passionately intense melody and glowing instrumental colors; the second, an orchestral version of Rafaele's serenade, is typically Neapolitan in the impetuosity of its melody, the verve of its waltz rhythm, and the lightness of the accompaniment.

These intermezzi will be followed by the final from Verdi's "Otello," the lovely scene in which Desdemona and the Moor declare their mutual affection. "Otello" is Verdi's dramatic masterpiece, far transcending in power and beauty his more popular operas.

The second half of the program will be devoted to excerpts from "Carmen." Miss Petina will sing the Habanera, the Seguidilla, the Chanson Boheme and the card scene with orchestral accompaniment. The purely orchestral numbers will be the overture and the three entr'actes.

The National Symphony Orchestra returned this week from its Northern tour during which it gave concerts in Hartford, Ottawa, Quebec, Montreal, Saratoga Springs and Boston. Press comments show that the tour accomplished its purpose of demonstrating that Washington possesses an orchestra in which the Nation at large may take pride.

"Not since Toscanini appeared in Quebec," declared the Chronicle-Telegraph critic, "and, according to some, not even then, has an audience in this city offered such acclaim to an orchestra." Isabel C.

Dr. Kindler to Conduct; Orchestra Is Back From Tour.

Armstrong in the Ottawa Citizen wrote: "Curtain call after curtain call and an ovation that left no doubt with regard to its sincerity and enthusiasm were accorded the impressive conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, Dr. Hans Kindler, and his musicians last night on the occasion of their first appearance in Canada."

Said the Ottawa Journal: "The precision of the orchestra's attacks and its responsiveness to its conductor were things the like of which has not been seen here in a long time."

4 Concerts Listed For String Quartet

First Will Be Given Tuesday in Textile Museum.

Four concerts are announced by the Washington String Quartet (Milton Schwartz, Paul Brightenburg, George Wargo and Howard Mitchell). The first will be given on Tuesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Textile Museum, 2330 S street northwest; the second on January 7 in the home of Mary B. Adams, the third on February 18 at the Sulgrave Club, with Alice Clapp as hostess and the fourth on March 24 in the home of Mrs. Edwin B. Parker.

At the first concert the organization will play Haydn's "Gypsy" quartet, Henry Waldo Warner's suite, "The Pixie Ring," and the A minor quartet of Brahms. Tickets for the series or for single concerts can be obtained from Mrs. John Rowland Hill.

The Business and Professional Women's Glee Club of the Y. W. C. A. will sing Clokey's cantata, "The Childe Jesus," at the Women's City Club at 5 o'clock this afternoon. Mary M. Burnett directs the chorus and Riethel Grim is the accompanist.

Yuletide Concert For Public Friday

Gift of Washington Choral Society to the City.

The Washington Choral Society (Louis A Potter, director) will present its annual candlelight Christmas concert on Friday afternoon at 4:45 in the Church of the Epiphany, 1317 G street. This concert, a Yuletide gift to the community, is open to the public. The chorus of 80 voices will be accompanied by a chamber orchestra, Lyman McCrary, organist, and Walter Nash, pianist.

Soloists with the chorus are Helen B. Turley, contralto; Justin Lawrie, tenor, and Charles Trowbridge Tittmann, basso. After an organ prelude by Adolf Torovsky, the chorus will sing "Silent Night" outside the building, and will then enter the chancel singing "O Come, All Ye Faithful."

The program includes selections from Bach's "Christmas Oratorio" and the following numbers: "Come, Emmanuel" (Gregorian), "Carol of the Russian Children" (Gaul), "I Sing the Birth" (Parry), "While Shepherds Watched Their Flocks" (Praetorius), "Bring a Torch, Jeannette" (Traditional), "Comest Thou, Light of Gladness" (Herzogenberg), and "Little Town of Bethlehem."

The music and art sections of the Twentieth Century Club will hold a buffet luncheon tomorrow at the Arts Club. Christine Church, soprano; Gladys Manchester Nalin, contralto, and Marjorie Gilbreath, pianist, will present selections from Handel's "Messiah."

A Bruckner Symphony Recorded for First Time

Composer Was Virtually Persecuted in His Life-Time for His Admiration of Richard Wagner's Works.

We read that Anton Bruckner came to much grief because he committed the crime of admiring Richard Wagner's music.

Heckling and audience walkouts when Bruckner symphonies were played haunted the persistent composer almost to the end of his days. People said Bruckner not only showed a fondness for Wagner, which was bad enough, but actually aped him, and in his day it would be no worse to be charged with plagiarizing the devil—in some camps.

No one feels that way about poor Bruckner any more. In the first place, so many composers have imitated the Bayreuth master by this time it is no longer interesting to point the finger of scorn at individuals. And then it seems that Bruckner wasn't so guilty of the charges anyhow. Someone discovered that in many instances of similarity Bruckner had conceived the idea first.

Even Brahms, once Bruckner's bitterest enemy, came around—although it may have been too late to give the suffering composer much consolation. We are told that Brahms, his flowing hair and beard bared to the breeze, stood at reverent attention outside the church while the dead Bruckner was receiving last rites inside.

So we can play our new recording of the Bruckner Symphony No. 7—mind you, it is the first recording of any Bruckner symphony anywhere—in our home without much fear of vigilantes breaking down our walls and smashing the records. We can park right down in our easiest chair, and with appropriate refreshment settle down for a nice, quiet evening. And that is just what it will be, for Bruckner, burdened as he was with great masses of material, just couldn't pull this symphony together in less space than that covered by 15 record surfaces (Beethoven's take about 10, Mozart's 6 or 7). The symphony is presented by Victor in Album M-276, and the music is by Engene Ormandy and the Minneapolis Symphony.

So, thoroughly relaxed, and with all confidence that Mr. Ormandy will call us to our senses when things get interesting and exciting, we start in on our first "at-home" study of Bruckner.

We are amused at the outset. There is a pretty glorious theme for cellos, and if it doesn't sound like Wagner, then neither does the "Rhine Journey," the "Prize Song" nor the "Faith" motive from "Parsifal." There is even the characteristic fog in the accompanying background. But we promised not to mind this, and soon it is over, for Bruckner, while never avoiding entanglements if he could help it, didn't get involved as dramatically as did Wagner. Bruckner is on his own. Then the first movement goes along at no shuffling gait; rather, it sweeps along to a good, strong climax. There is something of the tremendous in it.

The second movement is another thing. Charles O'Connell, musician and author, who has charge of Victor's recording, says Bruckner's adagio movements are really hymns on a grand scale and that they are not so much music of the world as of the world beyond. He is probably right. There is a feeling of the eternal, both in the spirit and physical longevity of the "Adagio."

Bruckner, however, comes back to earth in his third movement, the "Scherzo." It is light-hearted, rhythmic—a merry peasant dance, we are told. So it seems to be. The composer has his second wind by the time he opens up the "Finale," and if in the first three movements he has depicted phases of inward torment and struggle, he now in no mincing music asserts, like John Paul Jones, "Sir, we have just begun to fight."

Ormandy gets rough here—if the reaction of our phonograph is right—too rough. But Bruckner has composed some wide-awake music and before it's over—and it's not all done in a jiffy—he has put across an unforgettable theme.

Bruckner still isn't presented enough in the concert hall to give the lay listener any leading clue to his music. This new recording will do that and thereby will perform an important piece of service. Bruckner deserves attention. He didn't have a great message. He felt a need for talking about himself a lot of the time. But he wasn't so self-pitying, so sentimental, so on the verge of tears as were one or two of his more famous contemporaries. And he should be given credit.

Dr. Stokowski And Orchestra Here Thursday

Fritz Kreisler Is Soloist; Program Will Include Bach Transcriptions.

A program of Bach and Brahms, with Fritz Kreisler as soloist, will be played by the Philadelphia Orchestra, under the direction of Leopold Stokowski, on Thursday night at 8:45 in Constitution Hall. Dr. Stokowski's transcriptions of Bach, the authorship of which was only recently admitted by the distinguished conductor, will constitute the first part of the program.

The transcriptions listed for performance are the "little" G minor fugue, the passacaglia and three chorale-preludes: "Es ist vollbracht," "Ein feste Burg" and "Komm, susser Tod." Dr. Stokowski's orchestration of these works has received high praise from the critics in Manhattan and elsewhere.

After the intermission Fritz Kreisler will be heard in the Brahms D major concerto. After his performance of this concerto in New York with the Philadelphia Orchestra recently W. J. Henderson wrote: "There has not been such a magnificent proclamation of the splendor and majesty of this work for many a long day."

Lawrence Gilman said: "Kreisler, Stokowski and the Philadelphia Orchestra brought down the house. At the close of the remarkable performance the audience quite lost its head, and bestowed upon its pair of idols an ovation that must have warmed their hearts."

The Philadelphia Orchestra appears here under the management of the T. Arthur Smith Concert Bureau. The remaining concerts in the series will take place on March 12 (Jose Iturbi, conductor) and April 2 (Eugene Ormandy, conductor).

$50,000,000 Frick Art Collection Opens to Public View Tomorrow in New York

His Mansion Is Converted Into Museum

Cultural World Eager to See Fabulous Works of Masters.

Death of Industrial Titan's Widow Permits Release of Legacy.

By Harold Rhodenbaugh.

New York City.—The world-famous Frick art collection will be opened to the public tomorrow in the renovated and reconstructed Frick home on Fifth Avenue. This opening has been awaited by the art world ever since the announcement, soon after his death in 1919, that Henry Clay Frick had left his priceless collection "for the use and benefit of all persons whomsoever."

Their enjoyment of the legacy was postponed by Mrs. Frick, who preferred to remain in residence in the house and, until her death in 1931, the treasures continued, to all intents and purposes, to be private furnishings in one of New York's most palatial homes.

The history of the Frick collection goes back far into the life of one of America's most colorful titans of industry. Henry Clay Frick was one of the group of men who organized American industry at the time when the United States was taking its place in international economics.

Valued at 50 Millions.

His energy and his interest were never completely absorbed by the demands of his mammoth business organizations. He began to collect works of art early in his career and continued with increasing enthusiasm until his treasures were valued at $50,000,000. Moreover, the collection contains many objects that are so important and so dear to the hearts of art lovers that the value in dollars means little to them.

Following the death of Mrs. Frick these treasures were sealed up in a vault, specially built, air-conditioned, burglar-proof, waterproof and fireproof, in the basement of the house. There they remained for two years while workmen took the interior of the house apart and put it together again to make it more suitable for use as an art gallery. Some of the rooms were altered, partitions were removed to make larger rooms, and the whole was redecorated except for one portion which is to remain largely the same as it was when the Fricks lived there.

The trustees have attempted to retain the atmosphere of the home as far as is possible with one of the greatest private collections ever to be made public. Attendance is restricted so the rooms will not be crowded at any time. Visitors must apply for cards which may specify a waiting period of weeks or months before they can visit the gallery.

Some of the Treasures.

The opening of the gallery is significant. It presents the wealth of a man's life, art treasures he used to visit alone at night, things which he selected throughout his life until it was one of the most famous private collections in the country. Moreover it opens to public view many works which have been very limited in circulation for years. Among the 200 paintings it includes are Gainsborough's "The Honorable Francis Demcombe," Titian's "Pietro Aretion," Velasquez "Philip IV of Spain," Turner's "Mortlaked Terrace" and "Early Summer Morning," Corot's "Le Lac," Van Dyck's "The Earl and Countess of Denby and Child," and Rembrandt's "Self Portrait" and "Polish Rider." Also included in this vast collection are examples of Ver Meer, Murillo, Romney, Whistler, Hals, Rubens, Reynolds, Lawrence and El Greco, Ingres and Veronese.

Frick also assembled many bronzes, rare enamels and Chien Lung porcelains. There are two remarkable terra-cotta groups and a unique marble bust of a Neapolitan princess by Laurana. His collection of K'ang Hsi porcelains, known as black hawthornes, is said to be the finest in the world.

The house itself, which was included in the legacy, has been enlarged. Architecturally, it combines French and English influences, and the new portions were made to conform with the lines of the rest of the house. Actually it represents no definite architectural style but, rather, shows the qualities of the turn of the century palaces, which many industrial leaders built.

The opening of the gallery tomorrow is heralded by ecstatical accounts from those who attended the press preview Wednesday, by those who remember the works from the days when they visited the Frick home, and by art lovers who have seen copies but never the originals of the treasures buried underground while the workmen remodeled the Frick home.

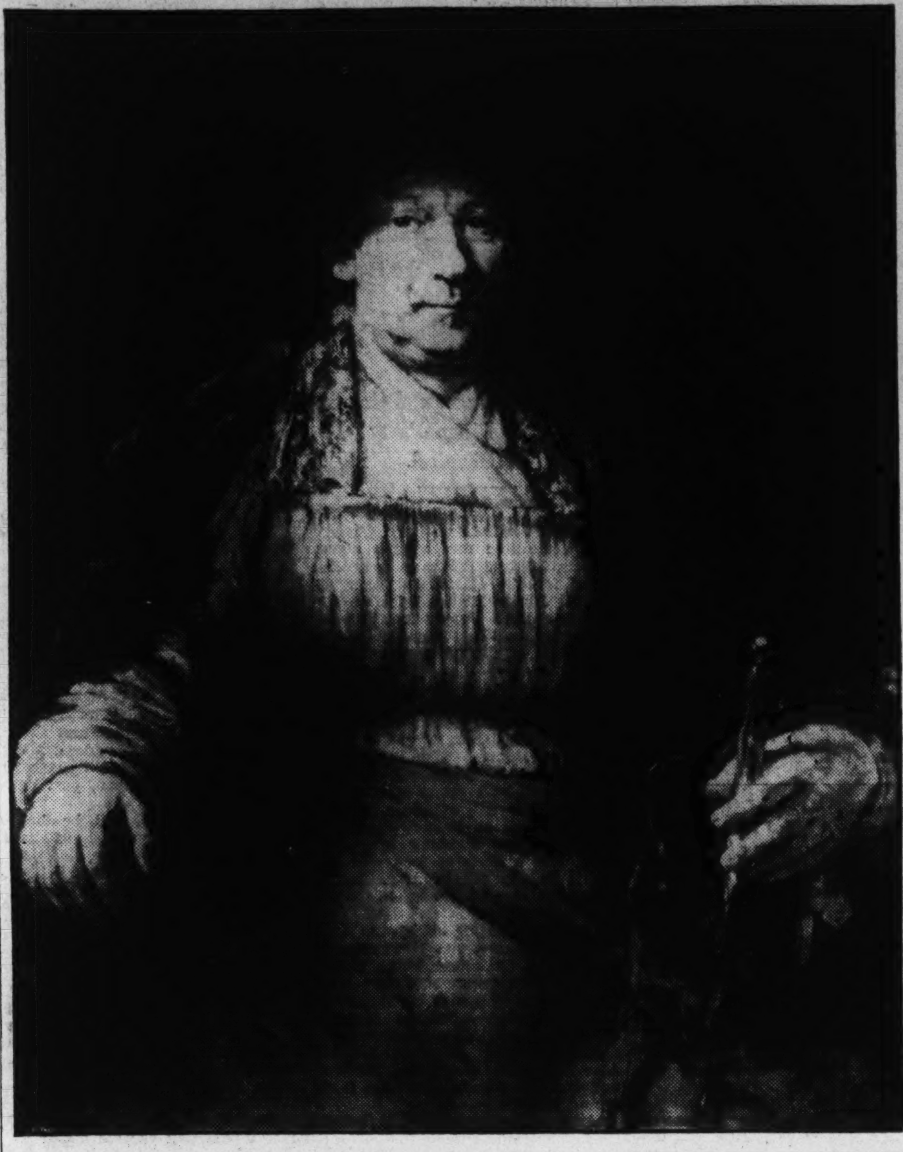
Next week on this page will appear the first of a series of stories of America's outstanding private collections and collectors of art.

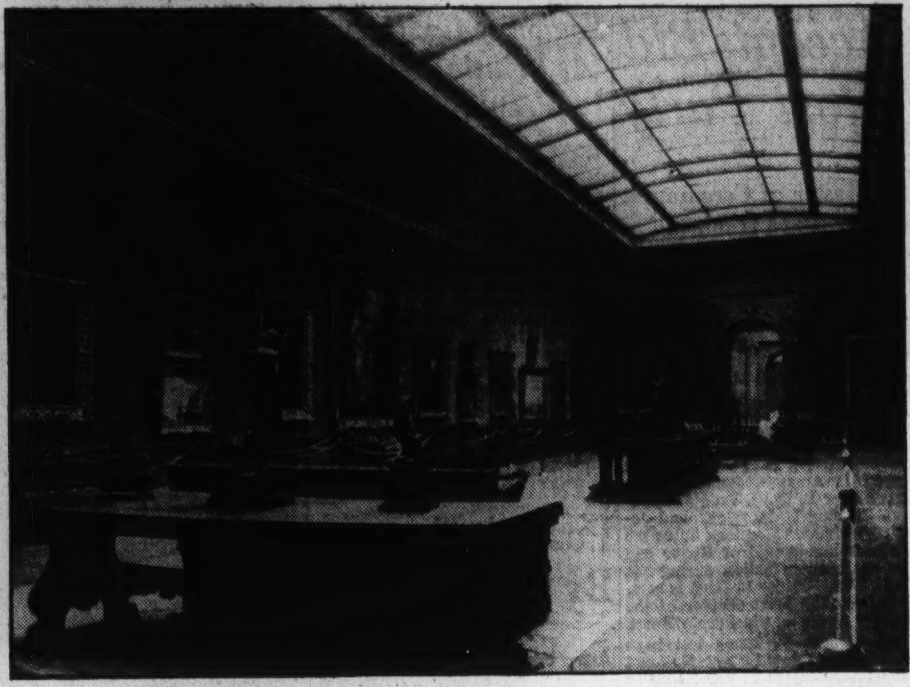
Corcoran Gallery Opens Taylor Exhibit Tomorrow

A special exhibition of lithographs and water colors by Prentiss Taylor, young Washington artist, will be on view at the Corcoran Gallery of Art, beginning tomorrow and continuing through January 5.

In 1927 Taylor had a one-man exhibition at the Arts Club of Washington, and another recently in Charleston, S. C. He was awarded first prize for graphic arts in the Greater Washington Independent Exhibition last April.

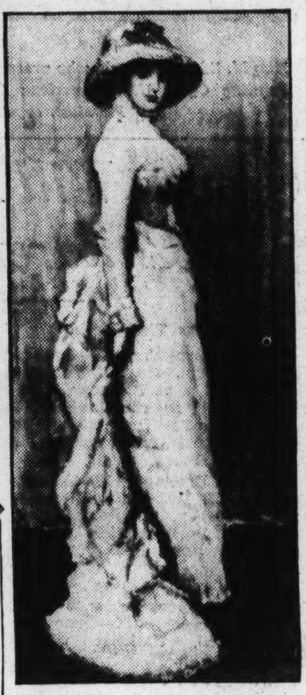
Henry Clay Frick once walked Pennsylvania's dusty roads in his bare feet. When he became one of America's most successful industrialists he turned his resources to the purchase of world-famed art. Now the collection he painstakingly gathered has been given to New York City and will be seen by the public.





Wide World Photos.

Included in the famed Frick collection is the "Ilchester Rembrandt," at left, painted in 1658. Below is seen James Abbott McNeill Whistler's portrait of Lady Meux, dating from 1881. At upper right is a view of the west gallery of the Frick Museum.



Art in Paris

By Andre Vulliet.

Paris.

There may be a lot to say, either good or bad, about art shows, exhibitions, fairs and the like. You may deplore their very principle, which is to reach—and please—the masses. But you can hardly deny that they are an essential part of life in a metropolis and a sure sign of its intellectual vitality.

In this respect, Paris seems to be the "exhibition city" par excellence. A century-old tradition as a cultural center has made it an old hand at organizing expositions and has caused it still to be regarded by the elite almost anywhere as the place where artists and writers must have their fame consecrated if they want it to be of real international standing. The pleasant result for those who live here is that, if they are interested, they can get all the fun and intellectual stimulation offered by an infinite variety of shows, the interest of which is always enhanced by the zest of foreign talents worth their salt.

Indeed, exhibitions of all sorts and description are so characteristic of Paris activity that it is just as impossible for an old Parisian to imagine his city without them as it would for a tourist to think of the French capital without its night life.

Refuge for Misunderstood.

With about a score of American artists and more than 2,000 canvases by French and foreign artists, the Salon d'Automne, the most important art exhibit of the Paris fall season, opened its doors a few days ago. Conceived some 40 years ago by the revolutionary architect, Frantz Jourdain, as a refuge for misunderstood genius, the Salon d'Automne helped put to the fore such names as Carriere, Cezanne, Gauguin, Bonnard, Renoir, Redon and Vuillard, whose talent Frantz Jourdain was among the first to recognize.

Today, after so many years of existence, the most outstanding picture on show, that which sparkles with more youth, again is one by the veteran Pierre Bonnard. His "Dining Room in a Country House," with a violet dinner table, a cup of fruits and a window opening out on bright skies and verdant trees, is in the best Bonnard tradition.

American exhibitors show sincerity and depth of feeling. Theodore E. Butler has nice autumn landscapes; Harold English shows a girl smoking a cigarette; Cornelia Chapin and Wilmer Hoffman offer their sculptures; Lillian Cotton, Philip Perkins and Dixie Watkins exhibit interesting portraits, while Lily S. Converse, Gerald V. Davis, Eloise Egan, David Humphreys, B. Jackson Humphreys, Lendall Pitts, Antoinette Schulte, Maud Squire, Waldo Wallis and Mary Day Watrous display their talent with landscapes and flowers.

The annual photography salon made it clear to connaisseurs that the art of the camera is carving deeper and deeper into the clear-cut black and white and is slowly but surely finding its way out of the blurred and so-called "pictorial" effects of a few years ago. Moreover it brought to light again the marvelous contribution of Soviet Russia in this line of art. A few steps further, in the same street, those who were interested in the Soviet regime could loiter around an exposition devoted entirely to the "activities and achievements" of present-day Russia.

600,000 French Abroad.

Much in the same spirit, it was easy to get an idea of the French activity abroad, as a special exhibition covered the subject with photographs, diagrams and graphic drawings. We thus learned that the French population abroad numbers about 600,000, of whom roughly 100,000 live in the United States; that not more than 1,136,000 Frenchmen are established in the huge French colonial empire; that the French have a knack for being firemen and that they have organized efficient fire units in nearly every large town in South America; that they have created all the textile industry in Mexico; that the French Seminary in Rome has given four bishops to the United States; that about 124,000,000 French newspapers and magazines and more than 11,000,000 French books were sent abroad in 1934, as against 15,000,000 in 1929, 14 per cent of which went to Belgium and 4.75 per cent to the United States.

Statistics would tell you just as accurately the success of Paris fashions in North America or the expansion of French virtues in Asia or Africa. Pictures would show that Saint Teresa of Lisieux is worshipped in China almost as much as in Brittany and figures would stand to prove that the proportion of French missionaries to the whole missionary force throughout the five continents has decreased from about 60 per cent in the course of the nineteenth century to 35.7 per cent in 1930 and 25 per cent in 1934.

For fun and color, instead of cold statistics, you could then go to the "West Indies Exhibition," organized for the tercentenary of their reunion with France. With plenty of rumba music, creole costumes and tropical charm, you could spend an afternoon evoking those distant colonies, which gave France an empress in the person of Josephine, Napoleon's wife, a great novelist, Alexandre Dumas, and the present secretary general of the foreign office, Alexis Leger.

To finish up this long list, let us just add that, should you have been looking for ideas as to how to light your home, you would have found more than you could use at the "Light Salon," where decorators and engineers put their talents together to devise new ways of making the home bright.

So many shows were enough to make one dizzy. To get a sense of repose, we could do no better than spend a few minutes at "L'Orangerie," where Claude Monet's soothing "Nympheas" are on permanent view. But, in getting out, we could not avoid another exhibit devoted to seventeenth and eighteenth century "Women's Portraits." Paris life was just keeping true to tradition.

Two Exhibits Displayed.

The Marie Sterner Galleries, 9 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, are showing two interesting exhibitions to December 21. They are of the paintings by Caroline Durieux, made recently in Mexico, and foreign scenes by Raymonde Heudebert.

Bignon Gallery Opens Showing Of Renoir Art

Exhibition Includes Sixteen Oils by Famous French Impressionist.

By Alice Graeme.

Following immediately on the exhibition of Cezanne and the Impressionists, the Bignou Gallery in New York is now showing the work of another great painter of the same school, Auguste Renoir.

In these two related exhibitions Mr. Bignou has been able to present a well-rounded picture of this significant time in the history of art. Renoir was by far too important an artist to have been dismissed by representation only in the group showing, and the current exhibition of 16 of his oils, though not a chronological or exhaustive study of his periods, is a fine display of his work.

"La Toilette," which was in the first of the two exhibitions, has remained to form the nucleus of the present one-man show. This large canvas, painted in 1879, is a magnificent example of the rhythmic flow of line that Renoir could achieve in his painting. The figures of the two women, an attendant combing the long auburn hair of a seated nude, are composed with charming dignity.

Flesh Tones Rich.

The flesh tones of the nude figure painted in rich, lush color, glow against the tomato-red of the attendant's blouse and the soft greens of the leafy background. Renoir took obvious joy in his painting and seemed to work often for the sheer pleasure of expressing beauty through color and light.

In the "Baigneuse Assise," painted six years later, the transparent radiance of his color has reached a climax of luminosity which Renoir never surpassed. This, "Bather" has all the sumptuous quality of a Rubens and all the glory that a master colorist could endow it with.

Renoir has filled his canvas with a light radiance, and a beauty of softness, of delicate blending, of elegant and mundane luxury. His sense of what he felt beauty should be was strong in Renoir, and in order to express his feeling he often transposed the facts of his subjects to throw into his work more of an ideal richness.

In the enchanting "Rose et Bleue," the portraits of two very young ladies, one feels Renoir's logical growth from the best traditions of French painting. The two little figures in fussy, light, party dresses are holding hands, posed against a rich background of mahogany and garnet reds. The bright Persian carpet, on which they stand, has a daring combination of jewel-like colors. The naive personalities of the sitters must have charmed Renoir, for he seems to have called forth all his inventiveness to make a gay and brilliant picture.

Flowers in Chartreuse.

His still life, "Roses at Glaieuls," is a flower piece with a delicious flavoring of colors. Palest chartreuse is the tone of the lower background, with a limped gray blue for the upper part, which softly reflects the gayety of the flowers' colors. His small "Bouquet de Roses" has the pleasant association of having been painted at the little restaurant of Pere Fournaise on an island in the River Seine. It was here Renoir painted his great picture, "Le Dejeuner des Canotiers," which is owned by the Phillips Memorial Gallery. The "Bouquet de Roses" was a present for the proprietor of the popular little cafe and is still owned by his family.

The "Two Sisters," a small simply expressed canvas, is surely one of the most appealing in the show.

The subject of the two children's heads, in amusing, top-heavy bonnets, is delicately painted. In this picture, particularly, one feels the evident sympathy Renoir always had with his subjects His antipathy to ugliness made him choose only the models he liked and he was ever ready to paint what was elegant and charming.

Although Mr. Bignou has necessarily been limited to showing only a small number of Renoir's paintings, the choice has been distinguished. The nudes are certainly among the finest of his work and alive with the glorious color radiance of which he was master. The exhibition is one of great elegance and gives again the assurance of Renoir as a painter of exquisite genius.

Art News in Brief

The First Isochromatic Exhibition sponsored by the Research Division Grumbacher opened at the Grand Central Galleries in New York on Monday. Among the artists in the show are Gordon Grant, Yarnall Abbott, George Elmer Browne, Wilford S. Conrow, Leon Dabo, Eugene Higgins, Nils Hogner, W. R. Leigh, Jerome Myers, Frank Nankivelli, Stanislav Rembski, Chauncey F. Ryder, Margery Ryerson, Clyde Singer and F. Ballard Williams.

After preparations that have taken months to complete, a large exhibition of Japanese screens will open December 17, at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, continuing through January. The collection of screens forms an important part of the great collection of Japanese art in the museum, which has been in process of being collected for many years. It is now made public for the first time. The Boston collection is second only to those in Japan, hence the show is a most noteworthy event.

Stow Wengenroth is exhibiting his newest drawings and lithographs at the Macbeth Gallery, 11 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, during the month of December.

Theodore Dahl, of Baltimore and Washington, opened a one-man show of paintings at the Baltimore Museum last week. The show includes portraits, landscapes and flower pieces.

. . . Camera

Conducted by Rho.

"Manana" is a swell word in Mexico where there isn't much to do and a lot of time to do nothing in—but it won't help much in solving the problem of the Christmas cards.

Every year we come up against the same Gordian knot—what to do about a Christmas greeting. And almost every year we wait until all is lost, and in the last-minute rush just before the twenty-fifth we hastily don the muffler and galoshes and hike to the nearest drug store to buy a load of very dull greeting cards, most of which are tossed into wastebaskets as soon as received.

So this year—while there is still time to do it—get busy and turn out a Christmas card worthy of your reputation—something that the friends will put on the mantelpiece for everyone to admire.

As a photographer, even if you operate a Brownie, you can get a picture that will make a topping Christmas card, and it will be something absolutely unduplicated and highly individual. For instance, you can use a picture of the children playing in their winter togs. Or a picture of the family cat or dog—a close-up showing a good expression. Or a time exposure of the family fireplace, with a row of stockings draped from the mantel. Or the Christmas wreath in silhouette in the front window.

If you have a candid camera. such as a Leica or Contax, you can get an indoor picture of the family group during the after-dinner hour, when little Susie is reading her book, Jack is building a bridge for his electric train to thunder over, and mother and dad are with their magazines, with a friend releasing the shutter after the camera has been set up on a tripod. Or the friend can "blow a flashbulb" to get a picture with any type of camera. Or a couple of photofloods, judiciously placed, will provide sufficient illumination.

After you've gotten the negative, you can ask the photographic store to do your greeting cards with their special equipment. Or you can make a bunch of prints and mount them on individual cards, and you can letter the message if you are clever at that. The latter makes a very personal card, and a very clever one, too, if done well.

The opportunity for unusual and beautiful cards is almost without limit. It offers you a big chance to show just how clever you really are. Above all, see that your snapshot tells a story. Anyone can point his camera at a subject and snap the shutter, but it requires exercise of the gray matter to get a real story-telling picture.

Above all, don't let your imagination run away with you in trying for an elaborate setting. Simplicity is the keynote, even if you get a photograph of nothing more than a candle flame casting a soft, luminous glow on a small figure of Santa Claus on the family dining table, appropriated for the setting.

Incidentally "table top" photography is something highly suitable for Christmas cards. You could make a Bethlehem scene of objects purchased at the dime store, and incorporate the family greeting by use of tiny wood letters set inconspicuously in the background. This idea would make it possible to use the photographic print itself as the greeting card, and be a highly interesting effect.

In any event, forget about putting off the business of making the Christmas cards and thus cheating yourself of a lot of sport getting them done. You might start today while the family is at home and relaxed and get the picture for the cards. And in a few days you will have some greetings to be proud of to send to your friends and relatives, carrying a message of cheer that shows distinctive originality and are an expression of your personality.

Leica Work Displayed.

Everyone remembers the first international Leica exhibit of last year that set a rapid pace for photographic salons. Now the second international has been assembled by enterprising E. Leitz, Inc., and is being shown at the Rockefeller Center, New York City.

A noteworthy feature of the exhibit is a series of illustrated Leica lectures, with such speakers discussing their work as Thomas McAvoy, news and candid cameraman of Washington; Burton Holmes, noted world traveler and lecturer; Manuel Komroff, author; Robert Disraeli, photographer of notables; Ivan Dmitri, traveler and candid cameraman; Henry Lester, photographic expert and author; Morris Hindus, author, and Rudolf Hoffman, stage and radio candid cameraman, formerly of Washington.

Two lectures are to be given the evenings of December 18 and 19, and are well worth a trip to New York City to hear.

As for the Leica exhibit, it contains some 600 highly unusual photographs, all of them enlarged from negatives an inch by one and one-half inches. It is expected that the show will come to Washington soon.

G. W. U. Club Lively.

Another group of camera-minded people are members of the George Washington University Flying Club, who gather on week-ends to fly, sail and take pictures. The club members meet at the airport and fly in various planes to a landing field on Chesapeake Bay, near West River. There they go sailing, either up the South River or on the bay, later going to the Edward C. Wilson Cottage for lunch.

They return later in the day by boat and plane to Washington, and most of those participating take pictures of the good times they have. The club is made up of members of the alumni, faculty and students of George Washington University, as well as others from the Department of Commerce and Army and Navy officers.

Horace W. Pote, of Hyattsville. Md., who modestly says he is an amateur not a member of a camera club, offers a good suggestion and it is to be adopted forthwith. The idea is to have this column (starting next Sunday) pass on the experiences of Post photographers in getting their outstanding news and pictorial pictures of the preceding week, with the salty and pointed comments which are part of the constant vocabulary of the news photographer. The "info" will include a description of how and when the picture was taken and the bits of adventure or discomfiture acquired during the shooting of the picture. Thanks, Mr. Pote.

Danish Artist Paints Portrait Of Roosevelt

Ruth Bryan Owen Arranges White House Sittings for Saltoft.

President Roosevelt will have his portrait painted by Edward Saltoft, noted Danish artist, who arrived in Washington for that purpose this week. The sitting will be held in the White House.

The Minister to Denmark, Ruth Bryan Owen, first interested President and Mrs. Roosevelt in the work of this artist, who has painted many of the most important personages in Europe. Mrs. Owen and the Danish Minister to the United States, Otto Wadstead, secured an opportunity to present M. Saltoft to the President and accompanied him to the White House at which time arrangements for the sittings were made.

Mr. Saltoft presented President Roosevelt with two of his paintings of the ancient quarters of the City of Copenhagen, where the President had visited 30 years ago. The paintings were the gift of Thorval Stauning, Prime Minister of Denmark.

The Charcoal Club of Baltimore opened its annual exhibition at the club galleries and on the sidewalk fronting the club on Linden avenue, Baltimore, on Tuesday. Many Christmas shoppers paused to admire and to purchase. The exhibition is similar to the annual sidewalk show held in Washington Square in New York. Some of the pictures are hung on the railing about Lehmann Hall, while others are placed on the sidewalk. Among the artists exhibiting are Lawrence Sagle, Charles Walther, Anna Chandlee, John McGrath, Philip Knatz, Marie Bahr, Erna H. Davis, Stuart Hollis, I. E. Dickert, Donald Coale, Marie Barrett Alain, Minnie J. Pechin and Samuel Philpot. Most of these artists are well known in Washington and have exhibited in sectional shows.

Washington's art colony is much interested in the pastels by Lucille Douglass, which have been placed on view at the Montross Gallery in New York. Miss Douglass died last spring. She held a number of exhibitions in Washington galleries and frequently came to Washington for art events.

Much of her life had been spent in China, especially in recent years. Art authorities describe Miss Douglass' technique as very sound in the very difficult pastel medium. In the New York show ten of the Angkor etchings commissioned by the French government are on view.

Recent oils, water colors and drawings done by Gertrude Schweitzer are at the Macbeth Gallery, 11 East Fifty-seventh street, New York City, to continue until December 31.

Franklin Made Post Adjutant By Costello Unit

American Legion Leader Chosen Unanimously by Members.

Unanimous approval of the membership of the Vincent B. Costello Post was voiced to the action of Commander Mack Clark in appointing William F. Franklin as post adjutant. "Bill" Franklin, perhaps one of the most widely-known legionnaires in the country, has since its infancy been prominent in the affairs of the American Legion. Franklin, together with Maj. Dan Donovan, auditor for the District Government, organized the Costello Post in September, 1919, serving as its first adjutant, later elected post commander in 1921 and 1922. Some time later he was called again into office, serving as post adjutant in 1926 and 1927 under Post Commanders Gen. "Billy" Mitchell and the late Detective Sergt. "Tom" Walsh. Serving on numerous local department and national committees, Franklin has traveled from coast to coast preaching the gospel of the legion and aiding downtrodden veterans in sickness and distress. Raymond J. Queenin, former adjutant, was compelled to relinquish the position owing to pressure of business.

At its next meeting, on Tuesday evening in Musicians' Hall, 1105 Sixteenth street, several prominent veteran officials will be on hand to welcome "Bill" Franklin back to the field of legion activity.

Among veterans recently admitted to membership in the post were George W. Gunter, Ninety-fifth Company, Sixth Marines, Second Division; Joseph B. Irvine, 836th Aero Squadron; Alpheus E. Tavenner, 328th Motor Supply Train; John DeWitt, 116th Ambulance Company, and George Briggs, Company E, Second Engineers, Second Division.

Groups Will Play Santa To Children and Needy

Meetings This Week.

Monday, December 16—Quentin Roosevelt Post, No. 11, Potomac Boat Club, 8 p. m. Advisory Council, Room 314 Denrike Building, 8 p. m. Costello Post Drum and Bugle Corps, National Guard Armory, 8 p. m.

Tuesday, December 17—Costello Post, No. 15, 1105 Sixteenth street northwest, 8 p. m. Americanism Committee, Post Americanism Officers, Department Headquarters, 8 p. m.

Thursday, December 19—Dedication, Calvert Street Bridge, 7 p. m.

Friday, December 20—Guard of Honor Drill, National Guard Armory, 8 p. m.

The American Legion will celebrate this year what may be the largest collective Christmas party in the Nation. Virtually every one of the 11,204 posts, the 8,638 units of its auxiliary, the 700 voitures of its fun and honor society, the Forty and Eight, and many of its 1,676 squadrons of the Sons of the Legion will participate in a practical application of the legion's ideal of "mutual helpfulness" during the holiday season by providing Christmas cheer for uncounted multitudes of the sick and needy.

Into the homes of thousands of underprivileged children, to the bedsides of thousands of hospitalized World War veterans, into hundreds of orphanages, civilian conservation camps and transient shelters and other institutions, the legion Santa Claus will bring joy and good will.

Parties Planned Here.

Santa Claus will be at his best at the legion Christmas parties for the children. Immense stores of reconditioned toys, clothing, candy will be distributed by the legion. As far as possible very child's stocking will be filled and baskets will be distributed to their needy parents. Reconditioning toys for these parties is rapidly becoming a major legion activity as more and more posts each year adopt the plan of collecting old toys and making them new again. One post alone in Dayton, Ohio, during the past year collected 12,858 used toys and distributed them among more than 500 needy families, in addition to what was distributed to hospitals, orphanages and other institutions.

The Advisory Welfare Council of the legion will give a Christmas party to several needy families Saturday afternoon in the Investment Building. An entertainment will be a part of the program. Santa Claus will distribute stockings to the children and baskets of food to the parents.

This work is under the direction of the chairman of the advisory welfare committee, Dr. R. F. Guynn, who has been working for some time together with the other members of the committee to make this event an outstanding one in legion history.

The national commander, Ray Murphy, will deliver a personal Christmas message to all World War veterans who are patients in the various hospitals throughout the country over the National Broadcasting Co.'s red network on December 24. The Program will emanate from Omaha, Nebr., and will be heard in Washington from 6:35 to 6:45 Eastern standard time.

The Department of the District of Columbia, American Legion, will take a very active part in the ceremonies in connection with the opening of the new Calvert Street Bridge on Thursday. The department commander, Joseph J. Malloy, has been appointed by the District Commissioners as chairman of the patriotic organizations.

Commander Edward K. Inman, of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, is cooperating and has agreed to have the Veterans of Foreign Wars Overseas Band, Drum and Bugle Corps to be in the line of march. The Detachment Drum and Bugle Corps of the Sons of the Legion and the Fort Stevens Sons of the Legion Drum and Bugle Corps will also take part in the parade.

The department musical director, Richard A. Viancour, requests the various musical units, including the Government Printing Office Band, Fort Stevens Post, Costello Post, Columbia Post and the James Reese Europe Post Drum and Bugle Corps to be present on this occasion. Commander Joseph J. Malloy will be escorted in the parade by the department guard of honor under the command of Capt. James Pistorio.

Present plans for the parade call for formation on Florida avenue between Sixteenth and Eighteenth streets northwest and the intersecting side streets. Starting at 7 p. m., the parade will proceed north on Eighteenth street to Calvert, thence across the new Calvert Street Bridge to Connecticut avenue and north to Woodley road, east on Woodley road to Cathedral avenue and from there to the point in the park directly underneath the bridge where the ceremonies will be held. All legionaires are requested to turn out for the parade.

Horace Lineburg, the department Americanism officer, has called a meeting of all post Americanism officers to be held in the department headquarters rooms in the Bond Building on Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock.

Plans Completed For Benefit Ball By Lincoln Post

C. W. Garlock has succeeded in making final arrangements for a benefit dance Tuesday at Arcade Auditorium. Every comrade of the Lincoln Post, No. 17, is eager to see that this gala event will be a profitable one.

Commander Phillips and Second Vice Commander H. D. Shapiro, who are in charge of selling tickets, reported already good results. It is a pride of Lincoln Post to make a Christmas party for poor children a happy one, therefore all the proceeds of this dance will be used for this event.

Sergeant Jasper Auxiliary Plans Christmas Fete

Mrs. Goodacre's Group Holds Bingo Party at Hospital.

The Sergt. Jasper Unit, No. 13, American Legion Auxiliary, Christmas committee met at the home of Mrs. Mildred Eckles to complete plans for the Christmas party at Powell Junior High School Friday at 7:45. Post Commander Frank McCarthy and Post Finance Officer Harold D. MacLaughlin represented Sergt. Jasper Post. Committee members present from the unit were Miss Ethel Hodges, Miss Clara Humphries, Mrs. Louise Goodacre, Mrs. Mildred James, Mrs. Clarkson and Mrs. Donner, with the president, Anna E. Elliott. A special feature will be a group of talented children who will entertain. Santa Claus will be on hand with a toy and Christmas stocking for each child, and baskets of food will be distributed to families who come under the care of the legion's welfare department.

The rehabilitation chairman, Mrs. Louise Goodacre, and her committee gave a Christmas bingo party to some 100 veterans at Mount Alto Hospital last Thursday evening, and in co-operation with the department auxiliary this committee will distribute Christmas gifts at Mount Alto Hospital. Other rehabilitation activities are scheduled for the 1936 spring months.

The social feature of the evening will be in charge of the entertainment committee, Mildred Gould James, chairman; Irene Lyons, Gladys Marthill, Marguerite Combs, Clara Humphries, Mary Gardner, Margaret Hammer, Ora Kissock, Ellen Louise Warren, Alice Beale and Mildred Eckles.

Party Chairman

DR. RAY F. GUYNN,

chairman of the Advisory Welfare Council of the American Legion, who is in charge of arrangements for the council's Christmas party for needy families on Saturday afternoon.

Party Planned Wednesday At Walter Reed Hospital

Soldiers and Sailors Home Will Be Scene of Entertainment Friday Under the Auspices of Victory Unit.

While most American Legion posts will emphasize Christmas welfare work for needy children and families, the auxiliary will carry the Christmas spirit into veterans' hospitals. This is one of the most important activities of the auxiliary's Nation-wide rehabilitation program.

The extent of the auxiliary's annual Christmas hospital program is illustrated by the fact that the auxiliary spent more than $100,000 for Christmas gifts and entertainment of veterans confined in the Nation's veterans' hospitals. The slogan of this program is "A Christmas gift for every veteran in every hospital."

Mrs. Ada Riley, the local department's rehabilitation chairman, has announced that every veteran forced to spend Christmas in a hospital will receive a remembrance from this department. Auxiliary members will visit the families of hospitalized veterans and needs for a happy Christmas will be provided.

The Christmas parties have already started, the first being held at the Naval Hospital Monday by the James Reese Unit, No. 5. A program of music and dancing was furnished and the department president, Miss Nicie Perrell, extended the greetings of the department. Other department officers in attendance were Mrs. Margaret Carrol, department vice president; Mrs. Ola D. Lee, department treasurer, and Miss Lillian Reagan, post department secretary.

An entertainment will be held Wednesday afternoon at the Walter Reed Hospital under the direction of James Reese Unit No. 5; Friday at 7:30 p. m. at the Soldiers and Sailors Home, Ninth and Pennsylvania avenue southeast, under the direction of the Victory Unit, No. 4, and at the Naval Hospital at 7:30 p. m. under the direction of the Vincent B. Costello Unit, No. 15, Stephen P. MacGroarty Unit, No. 27, and G. P. O. Unit, No. 33.

Reports on a canvass of the various hospitals show 100 veterans in Walter Reed, 60 in Naval, 835 in St. Elizabeths and Mount Alto 300 men and 40 women veteran patients, all of whom will receive a Christmas package together with an appropriate Christmas card.

The next department executive committee meeting will be held at the American War Mothers Home 1527 New Hampshire avenue northwest, Thursday at 8 p. m.

George Killeen Unit.

The monthly meeting of George E. Killeen Unit No. 25, Legion Auxiliary, was held Wednesday evening at the clubrooms. The president, Mrs. Catherine Waters, presided.

The unit had a baby shower after the meeting to help the child welfare chairman, Mrs. Isabelle Steinbraker, get layettes for two families in financial distress. A Christmas party for the children of Killeen Unit and veterans will be held at the club during the holidays. Mrs. Steinbraker is in charge.

Columbia Post Meets.

The Columbia Post, No. 34, met at the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club last Tuesday.

Comrade Hammer informed officers and members that the Sons of Legion group is shaping up well. The Junior Drum and Bugle Corps has been holding rehearsals under his leadership.

The post members accepted a resolution to organize an auxiliary and voted its approval.

Sergt. Jasper Post.

Commander Frank McCarthy presided over a meeting on December 6, which was attended by 150 members of Sergt. Jasper Post. Commander of the department, Joseph Malloy, was present.

A committee was appointed by the commander to work with the auxiliary in arranging the Christmas party to be held for 50 children of needy veterans. Christmas baskets will also be given to numerous needy families. Comrades Goodacre, Baker, Grenfell, Money, Catanach and James White were appointed on the post Christmas committee of which Jess Chaillet is chairman.

Announcement was made by Commander McCarthy of the following post appointments: Joseph Idler, veterans' preference officer; Frank Krattenmaker, publicity officer, and Robert Hetzer, cap and emblem officer.

The post initiated 22 new members at the December 6 meeting. The initiation ritual was conducted by the Forty and Eight degree team under Chef de Gare Martin Dyer.

Comrade McCartney, of the post hospital committee, reports a need for current magazines and jigsaw puzzles in the local hospitals.

G. P. O. Post Meets.

The monthly meeting of Government Printing Office Post, No. 33, was held last Monday evening in the green room. The post indorsed Col. William Peak for superintendent of District penal institutions.

Arrangements are being made to install a large Christmas box in the cafeteria for the reception of clothing and toys for the poor. The toys will be put in shape by members of the Fire Department and will be distributed by the department welfare committee.

On Thursday the post will participate with the department in the parade and dedication of Calvert Street Bridge.

A class is being prepared for initiation into the Forty & Eight in the near future.

Winter Season Brings Many Activities in Army, Navy, Aviation and Reserve Circles

Program Is Announced For Cavalry Reserve

Maj. J. C. Mullenix Lists Training Schedule for 306th Regiment; Regular Army Experts to Deliver Lectures.

By A. S. De Agro.

Maj. John C. Mullenix, in charge of Cavalry Organized Reserve training in the District of Columbia, last week made public the schedule of training to be followed by reserve officers of the local 306th Cavalry regiment. The schedule, which covers the period from December 19, 1935, to February 23, 1936, has been approved by Col. W. W. McCammon, senior instructor in Washington, who has designated the first and third Thursday of each month for the meetings of the regiment. The remaining part of the schedule to include June 30, 1936, will be based on the training program to be announced by the headquarters of the sixty-second Cavalry division, of which the 306th Cavalry is a part and is expected to be published the first of the year.

Among the regular Army experts announced to give lectures, many District reserve officers have been named as instructors. The training objective announced by Maj. Mullenix for the current school year will be to prepare the reserve officer to perform efficiently the duties of his assignment, to prepare him for promotion, and especially prepare the officer for active duty training next summer.

Equitation Classes Slated.

The schedule calls for five equitation classes and a like number of conferences, including one lecture by Maj. Gen. Leon B. Kromer, the chief of cavalry. The first conference of the schedule will be opened by Lieut. Col. Allan C. McBride, of the office of the chief of field artillery, who will lecture on the Field Artillery, and outline its relation to the Cavalry. The meeting will be held on December 19 and will include reconnaissance instruction by Capt. E. R. Kane and First Lieut. D. C. Fahey, jr., of the 306th Cavalry.

Maj. Gen. Kromer will speak at the conference scheduled for January 9. On January 23, a lecture will be presented by Maj. Charles A. Willoughby, Infantry, of the Army War College, on "The Palestine Campaign." Other speakrs at this meeting include Maj. G. F. Eppley, commander of the second squadron of the 306th Cavalry, and First Lieut. J. C. Boggs, Cavalry Reserve. The speakers for the February conferences will be headed by Maj. Rosenham Beam, of the office of the Chief of Air Corps, who will discuss the Army Air Corps and explain its relation with the Cavalry, and Lieut. Col. Joseph D. Stout, of the Military Intelligence Reserve. The meetings are scheduled for February 6 and 20, with the following reserve officers designated to assist in the instruction: Capt. K. M. Uglow, Capt. H. P. Ames, Capt. J. F. Claggett and First Lieut. H. S. Hartley.

To give the officers of the regiment instruction in accordance with their respective grades and experience, the classes will be divided into two groups, A and B, the latter consisting of field officers, captains and first lieutenants.

Practical instruction in equitation will be held at Fort Myer, Va., on Sunday mornings following each Thursday night conference.

Appointments Announced.

The War Department announced appointment of the following in the Officers' Reserve Corps: Daniel F. Boone, of the Mayflower Hotel, first lieutenant quartermaster; Max H. Cohen, of 1314 Decatur street northwest, first lieutenant, Medical Corps; Carl H. Hill, of 230 C street northwest, second lieutenant, Corps of Engineers; Morris Kleinerman, of St. Elizabeths Hospital, first lieutenant, Medical Corps; Walter L. Brown, of 1312 Sixteenth street northwest, second lieutenant, Field Artillery, and Emerson R. Parker, of 2231 Thirteenth street northwest, second lieutenant, Infantry Reserve.

The following reserve officers from the District were relieved last week from assignment to units of the Organized Reserves: 1302d Service Unit—Majs. Milton J. Landvoigt and Welton A. Snow, Field Artillery, and Second Lieuts. Edward G. Browers and Jesse W. Snyder; 1303d Service Unit, Lieut. Col. George Dobert, F. D.; First Lieut. Myer Alpher, Medical Corps, and Second Lieut. G.; Adam J. Hofman, Q. M. C.; Tracy E. Huber, M. A. C.; Alfred B. Hurley, Q. M. C., and John B. Rooney, Q. M. C.; First Lieuts. Leo I. Donovan, Frank W. Govern, Malcolm D. Harrison, James P. Kane, Howard Katzman, Medical Corps, and Second Lieuts. Joseph W. Crim, M. A. C.; William N. Martin, Ernest L. Minott, Manual Read, Max L. Shulman, William B. Smith and Alson H. Wheeler, Quartermaster Corps; 1312th Service Unit, Curtis L. Hillyer, Q. M. C.; 1314th Service Unit, Lieut. Col. Clifton A. Brode, Q. M. C.; Majs. Hugh A. Allen, Q. M. C.; Harry A. Bernard, F. D., and Leslie A. Nickerson, Signal Corps, and Capt. Frank B. Schlosser, F. D.; 1315th Service Unit, Maj. Ernest T. Hiele, F. D.; 1316th Service Unit, Capt. Donald O. Woolf, A. C.; 1317th Srevice Unit, Maj. John F. Thompson, Q. M. C.; Second Lieuts. Jacob P. Dempsey and George Leissler, Quartermaster Corps.

Classes Next Week.

Six meetings for reserve officers will be held during the coming week, as follows: Tomorrow evening, 428th and 429th Infantry Regiments; Tuesday, 320th Infantry and Chemical Warfare Service; Wednesday, Field Artillery, and Thursday, Cavalry and Signal Corps.

First Div. Men Of Air Reserves Hop to Langley

Six Planes Carry Officers From Naval Station at Anacostia to Post.

Langley Field, Va., was the destination of six planes from the United States Naval Air Station, Anacostia, last Sunday, carrying a group of officers and men of the First Division, VN-6R, United States Naval Air Reserves, on an extended flight and squadron maneuvers.

The party, under command of Lieut. Comdr. E. W. Rounds, U. S. N. R., division commander, and Lieut. (J. G.) J. W. Johnson, U. S. N., officer in charge of reserve affairs at the station, were guests at Langley Field of the engineers in charge of the laboratories of the National Advisory Committee for Aeronautics for a tour of inspection of the work and the tests now being conducted there.

Reid Makes Speech.

On arrival at the Langley Field hangars the group was welcomed by the engineer in charge, Mr. H. J. E. Reid, who gave a short talk on the work and accomplishments of the advisory committee.

Other members of the N. A. C. A. staff who spoke to the reservists were R. V. Rhode, Starr Truscott, C. H. Zimmerman, C. E. Buckley and Robert Spencer.

This trip which was made in connection with the December schedule of operations for the First Division, United States Naval Reserves, left the Anacostia Field in the early morning and returned shortly after 2 o'clock.

A Navy transport, a Navy amphibian, and four observation planes assigned for reserve use were used in the flight. Lieut. Comdr. E. W. Rounds, U. S. N. R., piloted the transport with a crew from the regular Navy, consisting of Chief Aviation Pilot Franks, Aviation Machinist Mate Morton, and Radioman Cole.

The transport carried the following passengers: Lieut. Comdr. Kennedy, M. M. Boyles, C. W. Boyles, Bardsley, Aiken, Wall, Bury, Pettit, Dewey, Golladay, Jenkins, Dooley, Geilich and Spicer. Lieut. Wagner piloted the amphibian, RD 3. His passengers included Brown, Clarke, Carrick, Wyatt and a regular Navy crew consisting of Chief Aviation Pilot Wrzniski, Aviation Machinist Mate Guyer, and Chief Radioman Sandifer.

Observation Pilots.

The observation planes, OJ-2s were piloted by Lieut. (J. G.) J. W. Johnson, U. S. N.; Lieut. Klak, U. S. N. R.; Lieut. Lucas, U. S. N. R., and Ensign Dalton, U. S. N. R., with the following passengers in the order named: Ensign Lamar, U. S. N. R.; Lieut. Blackiston, U. S. N. R.; Randall and Gerwig.

The Naval Air Reserve division drills and flys every other Saturday afternoon and Sunday morning. Lieut. Comdr. E. W. Rounds, commanding officer, is now receiving applications for enlisted positions in the division. Interested candidates are asked to contact him at the Anacostia Air Station.

League Fearful About Diseases From Airplanes

Hygienists There Declare Germs of Yellow Fever Travel With Ships.

By the Associated Press.

League of Nations hygienists in Geneva fear that long-distance air travel may spread yellow fever into regions hitherto free from the disease.

That it is possible for stegoymia mosquitoes, carriers of the disease, to be transported by airplane over long distances and in spite of several stops en route is one of the conclusions reached in a report issued by the health section of the League secretariat.

The report cites British India as an example. Although British India thus far has been spared from the ravages of a yellow fever epidemic, that country is highly infectible, according to the League hygienists.

Not only are carrier-mosquitoes numerous there, but a large population of certain types of monkeys susceptible to the yellow fever virus has been discovered, increasing India's danger.

The League hygienists point out that yellow fever might spread to India from the southern portion of the Anglo-Egyptian Sudan, where cases have been frequently reported, to the Indian city of Karachi, five days by air from the Sudan. An air traveler might make the journey during the incubation period of the disease and thus infect the mosquitoes in his hotel room at Karachi before a diagnosis of yellow fever could be made or prophylactic measures taken.

An epidemic of yellow fever in India would be followed by a rapid spread of the disease throughout the Far East, with the loss of millions of lives, the hygienists warn.

Truck Order Placed.

Maj. Gen. Louis H. Bash, the quartermaster general, has approved a contract for 69 trucks to the Federal Motor Truck Co. of Detroit. The Government will pay $105,458.22 for the 2½-ton cars.

March Sees Little for Us To Learn in African War

By Melbourne Christerson,

Associated Press Staff Correspondent.

The man who discovered at the turn of the century that Japan had risen to a first-class military power doesn't believe American Army officers will learn much from watching Italy and Ethiopia fight.

Gen. Peyton C. March, former Army chief of staff, went into Manchuria in 1904 to se Japan's mighty forces in deadly combat with Russia and came away with military information that led to vital changes in the American war machine.

Two on African Duty.

Last month the War Department sent Capt. John Meade and Maj. Norman E. Fiske to follow the Italian and Ethiopian armies and obtain first-hand information of their tactics, strategy and types of weapons.

"I imagine the fight in Ethiopia," Gen. March said, "is much like the Philippine campaigns in which I participated.

"All hills and rocks. The observers can see as much as they want, but you can't run tractors and heavy field pieces up mountains pierced with crags. The Army men want to see how those new weapons operate."

Tall, straight and active at 70 March, who served in France and was named chief of staff of the American Army in 1918, said the life of an observer was not one of hardship and that he had encountered only those dangers which he invited.

In 1904 he was close to the Japanese lines which faced the Russians, studied the weapons and methods of fighting, rode thousands of miles on horseback and later made maps that still would prove valuable to the United States.

Fearful of Spread.

GEN. PEYTON MARCH.

The general, now retired and living in quiet simplicity, was asked about the 125 Italians who were reported to have pledged themselves to dive with bomb-loaded planes onto enemy warships if attacked.

"Those human bombs," he replied, "would have to get there first. Don't think the warships wouldn't fill the air with all kinds of antiaircraft and machine gun fire."

Will the Italo-Ethiopian conflict spread?.

"Europe is a tinder box and anything might happen," the general opined.

Miller Cautions Fleet Reserves About Courses

Major Speaks to Officers on Correspondence Work and Its Significance.

Following the annual mobilization ("M" Day) formation of the Fifth Battalion, Fleet Marine Corps Reserve, last Tuesday evening, a conference of all officers was held.

Addressing the officers of the battalion, Maj. Harvey L. Miller, commanding, stressed the absolute necessity of all Marine Corps Reserve officers attached to combat units of the Fleet Reserve, making proper progress in the various correspondence courses assigned them by the director of the Marine Corps Schools, Quantico, Va.

Efficiency Required.

The training policy, Maj. Miller explained, as directed by the major general commandant, calls for efficiency of Reserve units on a parity with the regular corps.

Newly enlisted men for the first few weeks of their affiliation with the Fifth Battalion are attached to the recruit platoon in command of Second Lieut. James A. Hennessy. Only after showing proper proficiency and making proper progress are the newly enlisted men assigned to form with the regular companies for which they were enlisted.

There are vacancies for newly enlisted men in Companies A and B, applications for which are received every Tuesday and Wednesday night at the armory, 458 Indiana avenue northwest. The age limits are from 17 to 35. Previous military training is desirable, but not at all essential.

Private Karl F. Haworth, who served for three and one-half years as a midshipman at the Naval Academy, last week received a commission as second lieutenant. He was assigned to duty with Company B.

First Lieut. Winslow H. Randolph, jr., will shortly be assigned from the Eastern Reserve Area to the Fifth Battalion to fill an existing vacancy.

Huge Exposition for Aircraft Opens Shortly in California

Colorful Array of Planes and Parts Promises to Be Most Imposing Since Depression Set In; Dates Are February 1 to 9.

Colorful array of the latest airplanes from America's foremost aircraft factories will be combined with the newest aircraft materials, accessories and aids to flight, in producing in February the largest aviation exposition since pre-depression days.

This prediction was made in behalf of the National Pacific Aircraft and Boat Show to be conducted next February 1 to 9 in the mammoth new Pan Pacific auditorium, Los Angeles, under the sponsorship of the California Air Industries Association.

Many Participating.

Participation in the Western show has been assured by the Nation's leading aircraft, engine and accessory manufacturers, it was reported by Clifford W. Henderson, managing director, following a six-week tour of the principal aviation centers throughout the United States.

New and distinctive "show models" are being prepared by several airplane manufacturers to make a special appeal to the private market, while accessory manufacturers are formulating plans for animated demonstrations to inject "action" in their displays.

The Henderson brothers, Cliff and Phil, will actively manage the National Pacific Exposition for the California Air Industries Association. Recognized as aviation's master showmen, the Hendersons first attained national recognition as directors of the 1928 National Air Races in Los Angeles.

Sponsoring Group.

The Air Industries Association consists of a group of leading Southern California manufacturers, distributors and operators. The group was organized in 1929 to sponsor the successful Western Aircraft Exposition, which was managed by the Hendersons.

Harry W. Wetzel, vice president and general manager of the Douglas Aircraft Co., is president of the California Air Industries Association. He has appointed a show committee to work with the management in conducting the affairs of the exposition.

The show committee consists of Palmer Nicholls, president of Pacific Airmotive Corporation, chairman; Carl B. Squier, vice president and sales manager of Lockheed Aircraft Corporation, and Walter P. Balderston, president of Pacific Scientific Co.

First Battalion Inspection Scheduled for Tomorrow

Capt. John A. Schofield Will Be the Ranking Officer of Naval Reserve for Whom Unit Will Be Presented.

Captain John A. Schofield, United States Naval Reserves, will be the ranking officer in whose honor the First battalion, United States Naval Reserve, will hold a battalion inspection at the Washington Navy Yard tomorrow evening, an official announcement from the battalion headquarters has stated. The three fleet divisions of the battalion will muster at quarters at 7:45 p. m. for an 8 o'clock inspection and review.

Captain Schofield, who is one of the ranking ten officers in the Naval Reserve, is now on active duty at the Navy Department, assigned as materiel and finance officer and Naval Reserve representative in the Bureau of Navigation. Captain Schofield, a graduate of the United States Naval Academy, has long been one of the most prominent officers of the Reserve. His outstanding work has contributed a great deal to the development of the Naval Reserve, particularly since the Naval Reserve Act of 1925.

Captain Schofield's inspection of the battaloin will recall many previous inspections of the Washington unit. Before his retirement from the regular establishment, Captain Schofield served a tour of duty as officer-in-charge of Naval Reserve affairs in this district on the staff of the commandant of the Washington Navy Yard. At one time he was commanding officer of the local battalion.

Yule Dance Follows.

Following the battalion inspection, officers of the outfit will be hosts to the enlisted men of the battalion at an informal Christmas dance which will begin at 9:45 p. m. Music for the dance will be furnished by a Navy orchestra. Admission will be through the Eleventh street entrance of the Naval Reserve building. The committee in charge of the dance includes Lieut. C. H. Williams, Ensign H. Arthur Lamar and Ensign John Shultz, battalion supply officer, together with Chief Boatswain Mate Joseph Slattery.

Lieut. James E. Sullivan, battalion commander, this week announced the acceptance of a machine gun which has been presented to the battalion by Lieut. Comdr. F. P. Quigley, E-V (S). Commander Quigley's gift will be mounted in a case and used as an exhibit at the armory. The gun, built at the Springfield Armory during the late World War, is of the Bene clip-loading type.

Battalion officers are congratulating Dr. John Leland Cardwell on his recent promotion to the grade of lieutenant. Dr. Cardwell is now serving as battalion medical officer. Lieutenant Cardwell, a native of Washington, is a graduate of the University of Maryland and the George Washington Medical School.

He is a member of the George Washington Medical Society and has practiced in Washington since graduation. Lieut. Cardwell served a tour of duty as an officer in the United States Navy during the years 1930-31 and was assigned to the Naval Hospital here before being commissioned in the Naval Reserve.

Plans for the convention of the United States Naval Reserve Officers Association, which will be held here at the Willard Hotel on January 9, 10 and 11, are rapidly nearing completion. All members of the association are welcome to attend the convention.

One voting delegate is allowed for each ten members or fraction thereof. Subscriptions to the banquet which closes the convention on the evening of January 11 will be open to all officers of the Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve, regardless of whether they are members in the association or not.

One of the important items coming before this convention will be consideration of action to be taken on the invitation received from the Naval Affairs Committee to submit to it the ideas of the members of the association to be included in a new basic Naval Reserve law. Election of national officers will also take place this year.

Repair Job Approved.

Acting Secretary of War Woodring has approved an allotment for $51,000 for emergency repairs to jetties and bulkheads protecting a deep-draft entrance channel extending from the Gulf of Mexico to St. Andrews Bay, Fla. Recent storms caused damage necessitating the repairs.

Chaplain Smith, Of the 121st, Rated as Major

His Recognition Announced by War Department; Engineers in Parade.

Chaplain Arthur Lewis Smith of the 121st Engineers, District National Guard, has been extended Federal recognition as a major, it was announced at the War Department last week.

"This officer has qualified for his Federal recognition by passing the thorough mental, professional and physical examinations required by law," the announcement said.

"Chaplain Smith, who gives as his permanent address 1809 Oak street, Rosslyn, Va., attended Guilford College after graduating from high school. He began his long and distinguished military career in 1899 when he served for three years in Puerto Rico with Battery G, Fifth Artillery.

"When the Third D. C. Infantry was ordered to Texas in 1916 he was appointed regimental chaplain and served with them on the Mexican border.

Served Overseas.

"He went overseas as a member of the A. E. F. with the Twelfth Field Artillery and joined the Forty-second (Rainbow) Division at Chatenoir five days after landing at Le Havre. He has been identified with his present organization since 1924 and has held the rank of captain till his present promotion," the War Department stated.

The 121st Engineers, the 260th Coast Artillery and special troops of the Twenty-ninth Division will take part in the parade incident to the opening of the Calvert Street Bridge on Thursday.

The parade will start at Eighteenth and U streets at 7 p. m. Searchlights of the 260th Coast Artillery will be placed on the Taft Bridge so as to light the Calvert Bridge completely during the formal ceremonies.

Sergeant Discharged.

Master Sergt. Herbert Mitchell has been discharged from Battery A of the 260th Coast Artillery in order to enable him to accept an appointment as a second lieutenant. He has been reassigned to Battery B.

Private Kemper L. Mills and Private George W. Windsor have been transferred to the inactive list because of temporary removal from the District of Columbia.

Private Sam Sesso, Battery B. of the 260th Coast Artillery, has been promoted to the grade of sergeant. Corpl. Robert Stevens, Battery E, of the Coast Artillery, has been promoted to the grade of sergeant.

Private Lansing Peele and Private Sam Lerner, of Battery B, of the Coast Artillery, have been raised to corporals. The Medical Detachment of the 260th Coast Artillery led the organization's attendance record for November with a rating of 84 per cent.

Privates Edwin Tansill, Richard Richter and Thomas Thornhill have been transferred to the active National Guard from the inactive list.

Soldiers Transferred.

Privates Hugh Brooks, Byron Ford and Henry Edgerton have been transferred to the inactive list. Private Joseph Denman, of the inactive guard, has been assigned to the active list.

The appointment of Maj. George Allen, of the Medical Corps, State staff, District of Columbia National Guard, as lieutenant colonel on the retired list, has been announced. Maj. Allen is relieved from further active duty.

Private William Putnam has been promoted to first sergeant in Company E of the 121st Engineers. Private Joseph MacPherson will become a sergeant and Privates James Alderton and Edward Finlayson will become corporals. The men are members of Company E of the 121st Engineers. Private Harry Janzig, of Company F of the 121st Engineers, has been promoted to the grade of corporal.

Gen. Leach Places High Value On Service of National Guard

Annual Report of Chief of Bureau Pictures Organized Reserve Force as Powerful in Peace or War Emergency.

By the Associated Press.

The National Guard was pictured last week by its chief as a powerful and growing force upon which the Nation can count in both peace and war.

The annual report of Maj. Gen. George E. Leach, chief of the National Guard Bureau, summed up the organized reserve arm of the Regular Army in these words:

"The National Guard has shown that it is possible to produce on the basis of an evening drill a week and a fortnight's field training at relatively small cost, a military organization capable of rendering useful service to the State and to the Nation.

Called Real Asset.

"As a State force the National Guard has come to be recognized as a real asset in time of disaster or public distress, while as the National Guard of the United States, it is capable of serving, with moderate additional training, as a combat force in time of war."

Total strength of the National Guard at the close of the 1935 fiscal year was placed at 185,915, of which 13,571 were officers. This was 3,520 below the authorized personnel.

The report said that National Guard troops were called upon in 33 States to relieve distress or to uphold public authority during the year.

"The troops," it added, "acquitted themselves so well as to leave, on the minds of civil officials and of the public, confidence in their effectiveness for State needs and to create in the minds of military officers an increased respect for their discipline and training for war."

Improvements Noted.

Reports from corps area commanders reflected general improvement in National Guard organization, administration, command and training. Its chief weaknesses were ascribed to lack of funds, shortage of equipment and lack of armory or field training facilities in some sections.

The report added that thefts of small arms and equipment had been reduced but that there still were a number of armories where the safeguarding of Government property "leaves much to be desired."

On the whole, Maj. Gen. Leach said, "the progress of the National Guard has been so much greater than was expected by even the most optimistic, that the best informed soldiers hesitate to predict the limits of its military effectiveness in the future."

Washington Philatelic Society Celebrates 30th Anniversary With Banquet in Carlton

Alvin Hall of U. S. Bureau Of Engraving Honored

Main Guest Presented With a Membership Card at Informal Function Conducted by Albert Kunze as the Toastmaster.

The Washington Philatelic Society observed its thirtieth anniversary on Wednesday evening at the Carlton. The feature of the celebration was a banquet. The informal manner of the occasion was well appreciated.

The guests of honor were Alvin W. Hall, Director of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; S. A. Cisler, general superintendent of the Railway Mail Service, and Charles P. Graddick, superintendent of the Air Mail Service of the Postoffice Department.

Hall Enrolled.

Albert F. Kunze was toastmaster and his apt remarks were both timely and enjoyable. Mr. Hall was presented with an honorary membership for his work in connection with the philately, the presentation being made by Dr. Ellis Haworth, president of the Washington society. Mr. Hall, in reply, dwelt upon some features of the work of the bureau as related to stamps and philately.

Superintendent Cisler made an address on "The Railway Mail Service," and Mr. Graddick was presented to the members and guests.

Secretary C. H. Vaughan opened the speechmaking by telling about the first board of officers elected at the time of organization on December 11, 1905. These included: President, Cyrus Field Adams; vice president, Prof. Milton Whitney, whose son is now a member of the society; secretary, J. Finney Engle; treasurer, John W. Dye; superintendent of exchange, Arthur E. Woodward; superintendent of auctions, Philip H. Ward, jr.; librarian, H. F. Coleman; governing board, John H. Clapp, the Rev. Samuel R. Croft, C. D. Mecutchen and Lutherford Wysong.

Among the Speakers.

The other speakers were Harry F. Dunkhorst, A. H. Whitney, J. W. Fawcett, William M. Stuart, Maurice S. Petty, Michael L. Eidness, jr., H. M. Southgate, G. T. Beeckman, William C. Bond, Alvin R. Meissner and Victor S. McCloskey, jr. Toastmaster Kunze presented to the gathering Mayo Dudley and Judge David D. Caldwell. He also introduced Mrs. Catherine L. Manning, curator of the Smithsonian stamp division, now one of the vice presidents of the A. P. S.

At the head table were, besides Dr. Haworth and Mr. Kunze, Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Hall, Mrs. Manning, Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Warren, S. A. Cisler, C. P. Craddock, Secretary C. H. Vaughan and H. M. Southgate.

The committee in charge of the banquet follows: J. O. Peavey, chairman; Svend Yort, Herman Bocorselski, Clyde V. DeBinder and W. Hayden Collins. The menus were very attractively prepared by Mr. Bocorselski, an array of stamps being reproduced (within the law, of course) and a 1935 Christmas seal.

The meeting on Wednesday evening will be held at the Carlton when an exhibit of German stamps will be the feature. F. A. Bickert and Carl H. Spriegel will display and speak on many of the stamps from their collections.

Christmas Seal Fast Becoming Item of Albums

New South Wales Was First to Issue Stamps for the Tuberculars.

The collection of Christmas seals is fast becoming general. With the advent of the 1935 seal of the National Tuberculosis Association it means another variety. As these seals are catalogued they rightly have a place in stamp collections. While foreign nations using seals for health and charity place a postal value on such issues, the United States has never resorted to that method.

It will be recalled that it was New South Wales that issued the first stamps to raise money for the support of tuberculosis sufferers. In 1897, on the occasion of the sixtieth anniversary of the accession of Queen Victoria, two semi-postal stamps were issued. One stamp was of the postal value of 1 penny plus 1 shilling, this amount going to a fund for the establishment of a home for consumptives. This value is in green and brown, watermarked with the large crown and N. S. W. It depicted an allegory figure expressive of charity. The other value was 2½ pence plus 2 shillings 6 pence. This stamp is rose, blue and gold, with an allegorical figure.

In 1904 Einar Holboell, of Denmark, conceived the idea of issuing a postage stamp for raising funds to assist in the anti-tuberculosis work. Since that year 40 nations have each year issued such stamps. Sweden followed Denmark, then Norway in 1906, and also The Netherlands, and in 1907 the Unjited States seals first appeared. Since then the Danish West Indies (the Virgin Islands), Canada, Finland, Italy, Switzerland, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil Chile, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Danzig, Estonia, France, Germany, Great Britain, Iceland, Ireland, Japan, Korea, Latvia, Poland, Portugal, South Africa, Syria and Surinam have issued such seals or stamps.

Many of the stamps are handsome and issued in honor of some benefactor to humanity of their respective countries. In the United States the seals are exclusively handled by the tuberculosis associations, while in most of the other nations the stamps are semi-postal, thus being sold at postoffices and a part of the revenues given over to the work of private charity.

Stamps Course On Curriculum Of Mass. U. E.

First Ever Offered in New England Conducted on Harvard's Campus.

Massachusetts University Extension has a new course on "stamp classification" meeting Thursday evenings at Sever Hall, Harvard University, in Cambridge. The first session opened November 14 and will close on January 23. The course leader is E. Wendell Hoffman, formerly president of the Brookline Stamp Collectors Club.

Outstanding philatelists have been secured for the lecture so that those participating will have a well-rounded view of stamp collecting. This is the first such course offered in New England and is sponsored by the Brookline Stamp Collectors Club and the Middlesex Philatelic Society. The work of preparing the program was by Houghton Sanguinetti, stamp editor of the Boston Transcript.

Coes Delivers Opener.

The first lecture held on November 14 was by Col. Frank L. Coes, of Worcester, secretary of the Society of Philatelic Americans. His subject was "Intelligent Collecting; Story of Philately; First Postage Stamps and Collections; Tools of Philately, and Growth of the Hobby."

On November 21 the second lecture was given by F. S. Eaton, a well-known authority on cancelations, whose subject was "Prestamp Covers; Early Posts Before Stamps, and Letter Sheets."

Other speakers and subjects follow:

December 5—Tom Binmore, former president, American Stamp Dealers Association, "Paper, Separations and Printing Processes."

December 12—Thomas E. Penard, authority on early United States stamps, "Early American Stamps and Grills; How to Distinguish the Varieties."

On Stamp Forgeries.

December 19—R. C. Bartsch, member of committee on expertising, Middlesex Philatelic Society, "Stamp Forgeries, How to Detect Them."

January 9—H. P. Atherton, former official of national philatelic societies, "Postmarks and Cancelations; Their Collection and Display."

January 16—Edward L. Bell, designer and cartographer, "Arranging and Collecting; Planning the Blank Album."

January 23—Ross Y. Furman, sales manager of Harris & Co., Boston, "Value and What Makes It; Dealing in Stamps."

Philatelic Notes

The annual meeting of the Washington Air-Mail Society will be held tomorrow evening at the Hotel Lafayette. Officers will be elected.

Warren H. Colson, of Boston, has just disposed of a magnificent pair of the 600 reis, Brazil, 1844-46. Single copies are listed at $350 each, unused.

The air-mail service between Mexico City and Los Angeles has been resumed but the service between Mexico City and El Paso, Tex., remains suspended.

The mid-winter auction of the Atlantic City Stamp Club will be held on Wednesday evening at the Madison Hotel, Atlantic City, N. J. This club maintains a permanent stamp exhibition at the Convention Hall on the Boardwalk.

The Department of Commerce Stamp Club will meet tomorrow evening at 8 o'clock in room 2830-A, Commerce building.

A leading dealer advertises: "1935, 7-cent Park imperforate vertically, mint block only pane of 50 found, the rarest of them all, $750."

Claude W. Parker, of the Washington Air-Mail Society, has an excellent albino envelope of the six-cent air post. This stamp is orange on white in its original printing, Scott 2902. The Standard Catalogue of Air Post Stamps does not list this albino variety.

A. W. Batchelder, of Salem, Mass., American Philatelic Society No. 526, spent a day in Washington en route to St. Petersburg, Fla. He visited the Philatelic Agency and the exhibition room and called on old friends.

Supt. Robert E. Fellers, of the Division of Stamps, addressed the students of the Langley Junior High School instead of Third Assistant Postmaster General C. E. Eilenberger, who was unable to be present. During his remarks Mr. Fellers asked his audience of about 2,000 boys and girls how many were stamp collectors and fully 90 per cent raised their hands.

The unusual collection of United States stamps of Clarence W. Brazer, of Chester, Pa., is being disposed of privately. Among the items in this lot are the famous Baltimore and St. Louis postmasters' stamps, including several unusual varieties, the St. Louis 10-cent pelure or Steinmetz copy.

Christmas Covers Much in Demand

Cancellations Also Wanted by the Collectors.

Covers and cancellations suggestive of the Christmas season are being eagerly sought by many collectors. Scores of cachets in keeping with the holiday season are in course of preparation. The most popular holiday cover is that from the famous postoffice at Santa Claus, Ind. Each year thousands of covers are mailed from this postoffice. It is the only postoffice thus named in the United States, but there are many others that are very popular for cancellations and cachets.

Christmas, Fla., and Christmas, Ky., with Christmas Cove, Me., are well known this month. Then there are postoffices of Holly in Colorado, Michigan and West Virginia, while Mistletoe is found in Kentucky.

Bethlehem is in Connecticut, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, New Hampshire and Pennsylvania. Then there is Nazareth, Kentucky, and also in Michigan, North Carolina, Pennsylvania and Texas. Jerusalem is found in Arkansas and Ohio.

Interclub Results.

The results in the Interclub Bridge Federation matches Wednesday night at the National Press Club were as follows:

Washington Golf and Country Club, 25½ boards against Congressional Country Club, 22½; Capital City Chess Club, 24½ boards against Manor, 23½; Army and Navy, 17 boards against Columbia Country Club (one team) 7; National Press Club, 48 boards against Woodmont 7 (forfeit).

The Washington Philatelist

By William M. Stuart.

The condition of a postage stamp is most important to the collector. It should be in the best possible condition before being placed in a collection. Generally speaking "condition" means clean, clear, lightly canceled, original gum and free from blemish; stamps of this description are considered well-conditioned for any collection. A torn stamp should never be used. The effect of an otherwise excellent appearing page is often spoiled by the use of a poor specimen. Purchasing a rare stamp at a low price just for a space filler is not good policy. When such a stamp is mutilated, heavily canceled, soiled, repaired or otherwise disfigured, it should not be added to the collection of the philatelist.

Only stamps fulfilling every condition required by the collector are acceptable. Copies of stamps, perfect as is possible to obtain, form the basis of condition. The buyer inspects his purchase and pays accordingly. The counterfeit stamp is always a bad specimen and should never be placed in any collection. This is inexcusable.

Every collector should know that at times rare stamps are found in imperfect condition. However, the fussy collector who demands perfection to a superlative degree is more of a nuisance than a harmful one. His extreme desire for perforations and centering, among other things, often thwarts his purpose of collecting. His critical ideas of a stamp should not be accepted as authoritative. Fault finding of stamps in general will always continue, but the collector satisfied with his stamps as being the best copies obtainable will derive the pleasure desired by the true philatelist. He knows the condition and accordingly accepts the stamp.

There are many factors to be considered in stamp collecting, condition being one of the most important. No catalogue could be arranged to give each stamp an individual opinion. Copies classified as good, excellent or superb simply record a personal opinion. The collector may disagree, yet he alone must be the judge. The value, as well as the appearance, of all stamp collections depend on the stamp itself and is largely due to its true condition.

Readers' Club to Meet.

The Washington Readers' Club will meet today at 8:30 p. m. at All Souls Church. Mrs. Constance Goodman presided.

The program will include Violet Warren Pierson, Harriet Bryant, Alida W. Brooks, Ina Boltzchiter, Mrs. Frank Byram, Margaret L. McMullen and Anita Schade.

The club held its first recital for the year at Thompson School December 5. Those taking part were Violet Warren Pierson, Virginia Bayey Blassingham, Louise Osterwald, Eva Hurd Willis and Ada Louise Townsend.

Two one-act plays were enacted by Rosemary Arnold Elliott, Agusta Machen, Margaret L. McMullen, Harriet Bryant, Gardner Crabbe and Clarence E. Ruebsam.

Game Transferred.

The duplicate game conducted by Roy Astleford and Sam Groves has been transferred from 2400 Sixteenth street to the apartment of Miss Mazie Buie in the Argonne, beginning on Friday night.

Hyattsville Forms Club for Students

Elementary School Elects Officers at Meeting.

A stamp club has been organized in the Hyattsville Elementary School, Hyattsville, Md. More than 50 students attended the preliminary meeting when plans for the season were discussed and officers selected.

Mrs. Mary A. Petty is principal of the school and is very much interested in the activities of her pupils in all of their outside activities. The supervisor of the stamp club is Mrs. Evelyn Jarrell. The following officers were selected for the present term: President, William Munch; vice president, Charles Cook; secretary, Kenneth Wherley, and librarian, Betty Lee Gouff. At the next meeting the various committees will be appointed.

All stamp collectors in the school are invited to join the club. From time to time talks will be given and sales and exchange circuits formed. The club will be called the Hyattsville Elementary School Club.

Mrs. Love of Relief Corps On Dedication Program

Mrs. R. V. Love, of Louisville, Ky., national president of the Woman's Relief Corps, who left Washington Thursday for Minneapolis, will be on the program at the dedication of the new $250,000 hospital connected with the Minnesota Soldiers' Home in Minneapolis on Tuesday afternoon.

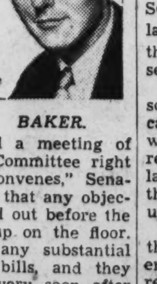
Mrs. Emma W. Campbell, national secretary and a member of the board of directors of the home, will be tendered a reception by the Department of Minnesota tomorrow evening at the Hotel Radisson.

The Federal Diary

Registered U. S. Patent Office

By Morgan Baker

THE government employes' 30-day vacation and sick leave bills, which ran into a legislative snarl in the Senate at the close of the last session of Congress, will be pushed through very early in the approaching session, Senator William J. Bulow, of South Dakota, chairman of the Senate Civil Service Committee, predicted yesterday.



BAKER.

"I intend to call a meeting of the Civil Service Committee right after Congress reconvenes," Senator Bulow said, "so that any objections may be ironed out before the bills are brought up on the floor.

"I don't expect any substantial opposition to the bills, and they should be passed very soon after January 3."

Sponsors of the legislation expect to ask that the measures be amended so government workers will be able to start accumulating the 30-day vacation January 1 instead of July 1 next, when the new fiscal year begins.

As the bills now stand the leave would begin July 1, 1935, but the legislation will not be made retroactive.

Senator Kenneth McKellar (Democrat), of Tennessee, father of the famous "patronage rider" which threw hundreds of Alcohol Tax Unit employes out of jobs until Congress remedied the situation, blocked passage of the bills at the close of last session.

After the measures had been passed by an overwhelming majority in the House and favorably reported to the Senate by the Civil Service Committee, Senator McKellar objected several times when they were brought up on the consent calendar.

Because of the lack of time sponsors of the leave bills could not call for a roll-call vote, an action which unquestionably would have resulted in their passage. If McKellar renews his objection this year, the bills will doubtless be brought up for debate and regular vote.

The vacation bill will increase the annual leave of Government employes from 15 to 30 days a year, returning it to the pre-depression basis.

The sick leave bill would reduce from 30 to 15 days the amount of sick leave allowed Government workers each year, but it would permit accumulation of the leave up to 120 days, a benefit now denied. Moreover, administrative officers would be authorized to advance 30 days' sick leave with pay beyond the accrued leave in cases of serious disability or ailments.

The United States Army Air Corps is accepting enlistments at Bolling Field. The applicants need not be residents of the District, but they must be graduates of accredited high schools, must have passed required physical examinations and must have reached their eighteenth birthdays.

George M. Wright, chief of the wild life division of the National Park Service, will give the next park series lecture in the connecting wing auditorium between the Labor Department and the Interstate Commerce Commission Thursday at 8 p. m. Describing Yellowstone Park's wild life, he will discuss "The Wilderness That Did Not Vanish," and will show slides, some of which were taken from early prints and woodcuts.

Wright was a co-organizer of the wild life division with Joseph Dixon. He is also co-author of the fauna series on wild life published by the Government. As a scientist, he is noted as discoverer of the nest of the surf bird in Mount McKinley National Park in 1926, a discovery ornithologists had been hoping for for years. His lecture will be free.

Diary Guest Tickets.

IF F, P or C appears after your name in this column call in person on the Federal Diary Editor tomorrow between 3:30 and 5 p. m. You will receive two tickets to one of the following Loew's theaters: F, Loew's Fox (stage, Duke Ellington and his band and other acts; screen, Myrna Loy and Spencer Tracy in "Whipsaw"); P, Loew's Palace (Dick Powell, Ann Dvorak and Fred Allen in "Thanks a Million"), or C, Loew's Columbia (fourth week of Clark Gable, Charles Laughton and Franchot Tone in "Mutiny on the Bounty").

Shelter Belt Progress.

Q.—What has happened to the shelter-belt project of the Government that we heard so much about several months ago?—May D. Burton (F).

A.—According to the report of the chief of the Forest Service, just issued, the Great Plains shelter-belt project is showing tangible progress. Planting has been completed, he says, on 125 miles of shelter-belt and on about 4,800 farmsteads.

CCC and Forest Service.

Q.—How is the CCC connected with the Forest Service?—Adrienne Moreau (P).

A.—The Forest Service has planned and supervised about 70 per cent of the work of the CCC, which by July, 1935, had reached a total of over 38,500,000 man-hours.

Q.—Are G-men permitted under the Government's travel regulations to ride in Pullman compartments?—William Carr, sr. (P).

A.—Under a recent ruling of Comptroller General McCarl, agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation will be permitted to use a Pullman compartment or drawing room when traveling heavily armed. This ruling is a reversal of a previous decision requiring them to travel "at the lowest first-class rate."

Postal Men Complimented On China Clipper Service

Collectors Here Speak Highly of Covers Which Have Just Come in Large Numbers and in Excellent Condition.

Covers from the Philippines carried on the return flight of the China Clipper that left San Francisco November 22 have been received in great numbers by Washington collectors and dealers. For the most part all of the covers are fully up to expectations and it bespeaks well of the postal authorities for having performed such a difficult task in so fine a manner.

All during the past week covers arrived daily from Hawaii, Guam and Manila. One collector received a cover from Hawaii canceled December 5, backed stamped San Francisco December 6 and was missent to Seattle, Wash., and stamped December 7. This is a mistake that collectors really appreciate.

Philippine Cost 78 Cents.

The Philippine stamps affixed to the covers cost, with extra charge of three cents, 78 cents each. But some covers carried blocks of stamps and the cost amounted to dollars. All manner of varieties were used, but in all cases only the Philippine stamps were used.

On the Philippine stamps used the lower values were overprinted in gold. The inscription read: "P. I.-U. S. Initial Flight" and below an outline of the China Clipper and below "December, 1935." On many of the covers received the lower outline of the overprint is so light that it appears not to exist. At first sight it looks as if the overprint was of two lines only, but upon close examination the entire overprint is to be seen. This lack of stronger overprint is practically the only real criticism of the stamp. The 1-peso is not overprinted nor the 6-cent centavos used, only on the high values of centavos, as the 10 and 30 denominations.

President Got Many.

President Roosevelt received a number of the covers elaborately gotten up. W. T. Marshall, of the White House staff, a member of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., received one cover that was very fine. All of the covers had the cachet placed at Manila as well as a small cachet in black showing the route of the clipper.

Felix Morley, editor of The Post, received one of the finest covers from Manila. It had the map cachet in black with the notation: "Via China Clipper's Inaugural Flight." The Manila cancelation of December 2 was used six times on the front of the cover and four times on the stamps used on the back of the cover.

On the front of the cover were five of the 10-centavos in a strip, five of the 30-centavos, one 20-centavos and one 4-pesos. The smaller values are overprinted with the "initial flight" inscription but on most of the stamps it is so faint that it is hard to make out. On the back of the cover is a strip of five of the 36-centavos, green, and a pair of the 50-centavos, green, of the issue of November 15. The back-stamp "San Francisco, Calif., Dec. 6, 1935," is on one of the 50-centavos stamps. The cover is a most unusual one and of a variety rather scarce.

On Regular Schedule.

The service is being carried on between San Francisco and Manila via a regular schedule but it will not be until late in January before the service is extended to include China. At that time it is anticipated a new set or at least new air-mail stamps may be expected. The service to China may be $1 or even more.

The overprinted stamps will be handled by the first of the year at the office of the Philippine Trade Commission in the Barr Building.

Revised figures as to the mail carried from San Francisco are as follows: Weight of mail from the San Francisco Postoffice, 1,837 pounds; number of mail bags, 58; number of covers, 110,865; for Honolulu, 46,561; for Guam, 19,958; for Manila, 44,346; number of stamps sold, 206,414; first day covers, 8,696; receipts from first-day cover sales, $51,603.50.

Sales at Agency.

Sales at the Philatelic Agency during November, 1935, amounted to $97,237.87 as against sales of $71,502.11 for October, 1935.

Collectors Club Meets; C. H. Just Exhibits Stamps

Hoppe and Galloway Are in Charge of Circuit Book Sales.

The Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., met at the Thomson School on Tuesday evening, Vice President E. V. Haines presiding. There was a good attendance and the evening was passed in viewing the exhibition and in buying and selling from the circuit books in charge of Managers Hoppe and Galloway. Two new members were elected.

Secretary C. H. Just exhibited 15 frames of his United States and Canada stamps. Many interesting specimens were shown, among the United States being an 1847 5-cent brown on cover, the 1-cent blue, 1861, and an excellent copy of the 3-cent pink, 1861, No. 64. In his Canadian display, Mr. Just exhibited many early issues, notably copies of 1857 and 1859. The ½-penny rose No. 8 was especially fine.

The lots for the auction at the meeting on Tuesday were on display. This will be an unusual sale, the final one of the year, and Auctioneer W. E. Kingswell says that it will be worth while. Lists of all lots will be mailed to members.

There will be no meetings during the holidays and the first session in 1936 will be on January 7.

'Bond Street's Stamp Auctions' Valued Volume

Copy Received by C. H. Vaughan Specially Interesting for U. S. Entries.

The tenth annual resume of prices, for the season of 1934-1935, of the "Bond Street Stamp Auctions," as conducted by H. R. Harmer, London, is a volume of value just received by C. H. Vaughan, secretary of the Washington Philatelic Society.

Especially interesting is the illustrations of the United States stamps and the notes and prices are worth recording for future reference. It seems a pity that the law of the United States does not allow the illustrating of such stamps.

In the United States section there are illustrations of five stamps, besides two copies of the St. Louis "bear" stamp of 1846. The stamps, prices paid in pounds, and date of sale are given as follows:

New York, 1845, 5-cent black on grayish paper, two copies used together, 21 pounds, April 2.

St. Louis, 1846, 10-cent on grey-lilac, a severed vertical pair, lower stamp not canceled, 107 pounds 10 shillings; single copy of this same stamp, on grey-lilac paper, very fine used, 36 pounds, April 16.

The 12-cent black, 1861, an unused copy with large part gum, very slight thin spot, 525 pounds, June 19.

1869, 15-cent, blue and brown, picture of landing of Columbus inverted, repaired, 42 pounds.

1869, 24-cent, purple and green, picture of signing of Declaration of Independence inverted, heavily canceled and off-center, 65 pounds.

1901, Pan-American, 1-cent, green and black, picture of steamer inverted, unused with part gum, 42 pounds.

1901, Pan-American, 2-cent, carmine and black, picture of express train inverted, unused, slightly defective, 230 pounds.

1873, State, $5, black and green, unused, 44 pounds.

1871, Internal Revenue, $500, black and green and red, fine copy, 82 pounds. The above six stamps were sold on April 16.

Rebekah Assembly.

The president of the Rebekah Assembly of D. C., Mrs. Orra L. New Fusion Code for Duplicate Contract Bridge Fixes Authority of Tourney Director

Annoying Buck-Passing Believed Circumvented

National Laws and Rules Committee Will Hereafter Function Along Lines of a Supreme Court With Appeals Limited.

By Frank B. Lord.

The new laws of duplicate contract bridge are out and in as much as they have been formally approved and adopted by the American Bridge League, the United States Bridge Association and the American Whist League, they may be considered as binding wherever in this country this form of the game of bridge is played. They also set forth the movements and the methods of scoring, and govern likewise with respect to what is known as party contract bridge, both progressive and pivot.

The new code in a sense is a synthesis of several divergent philosophies of the judicial process as applied to bridge. In the administration of the first joint code, adopted by the major bridge leagues in 1933, there had arisen at least three schools of thought, each supported by its own following of experts and average players.

Three Views Fused.

The committee that wrote the new laws was formed deliberately to include exponents of the views of these three different groups. To expedite the movement for harmony regarding the understanding and interpretation of the laws, the membership of the committee was drafted from the region around New York City. A tentative code was drawn up after many meetings and much deliberation, and copies were sent to several hundred local bridge organizations and prominent players throughout the country for criticism, suggestions and an expression of opinion. It was also tested in various tournaments during a period of four months.

With the assistance and guidance thus given, the committee last October revised its initial draft in the form formally adopted by the organizations mentioned.

Experience with the previous code had pointed out the desirability of setting up a single appellate body to interpret the duplicate laws in place of the laws committees of the several national bridge leagues. The original group, therefore, organized as the "National Laws and Rules Committee" under a constitution that provides for its continuance and for the subsequent selection of members from representative groups throughout the entire country. The American Bridge League, the American Whist League, and the United States Bridge Association formally recognized the authority of this committee, when it approved and adopted the new code.

Adhere to International.

The new duplicate laws adhere so far as possible to the International code of contract bridge, of 1935. Some important deviation is necessary, however, by reason of the differences between the two forms of the game. Emphasis is made in the new code upon the powers and duties of the tournament director.

It has not been that these powers and duties did not exist before, but rather that tournament directors did not fully exercise them, because of doubt and uncertainty about them and a feeling that the laws were indefinite. This led many tournament directors to be timid and hesitant in the settlement of disputes and controversies upon a basis of facts to which a specific law should be applied.

Too much of the "buck-passing" that has been the order of the day in tournament direction is said to have been attributable to the absence from the laws of a detailed description of the director's sphere. The new code supplies such a description, and thus seems to invest the director with new authority where it simply details long-standing powers. The new code insists upon a wide range of responsibilities as duties not to be shirked.

Typical in this respect is the law which enjoins the tournament director to act as jury to decide facts, if disputants cannot agree. In the past, fully half of the appeals that have gone to league law committees have been that of a perplexed tournament director requesting the committee to decide facts that he himself should have determined on the spot.

Typical, too, is the insistence throughout the code that the director shall be informed of an irregularity or dispute, that he alone assess penalties, and that no waiver of penalty is binding without his sanction. In short, the code holds that the tournament director is entitled to know everything that goes on, and, more, that it is his duty to bring uniformity to the application of the laws in the game under his jurisdiction.

Not Wholly a Dictator.

In this respect the new code does not make the tournament director wholly dictator. He is, of course, subject to the tournament committee. Not only are his decisions susceptible of appeal to the committee, but he must in certain circumstances inform the players of this fact. Furthermore, any point of law may be appealed from a local committee to the national laws and rules committee.

There has been in the past too much protest and appeal on questions of fact and too little appeal on the questions of law. The code seeks to remedy the first condition by compelling the man on the spot—the tournament director— to tabulate agreed facts and decide disputed facts. It aims to correct the second condition by compelling players to keep the tournament director fully informed of all irregularities and disputes and by urging directors and committee to pass their legal tangles to the national committee for solution.

In other words, the code presumes to make the national rules committee a sort of supreme court which hears and decides upon questions of law, leaving the determination of facts to a lower tribunal.

The members of the national laws and rules committee are William E. McKenney, chairman; Russell J. Baldwin, Edward Hymes, jr., Geoffrey Mott-Smith, Capt. A. M. Gruenther, Albert H. Morehead. George Reith and Waldemar von Zedtwitz.

Pennebakers Named To Supervise Series

Clevelanders Selected by Congressional Club.

The Congressional Club is the latest of the social organizations to enter the field of contract bridge. A series of winter duplicate games has been arranged to be played each Thursday night under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Pennebaker, members of the club. The Pennebakers came here from Cleveland a year ago with an enviable bridge record which they have maintained with a long list of winnings at the local duplicate matches. They won the Greater Cleveland mixed pair match and have been rated as among the leading players of Washington.

Their enthusiasm over the game has led to a like feeling among the members of the Congressional Club, with the result that they have been requested to supervise the play there.

The winners at the initial meeting of bridge fans at the Congressional were Col. Edward Clifford and Mrs. Myrtle Wenzel, first; Mr. and Mrs. Schultz, second, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Slawson, third.

Play Set Ahead.

The weekly game at the Shoreham, where the contest is for the Nolan Cup, will be played on Monday, December 23, instead of Tuesday owing to the fact that the regular meeting night falls on Christmas eve.

In the third of the winter series of pair games played by the Washington Bridge League at the Hotel Shoreham the results were as follows:

Section 1—North and South, Mrs. Wessal Stewart and Mrs. Dixie T. Wright, first; Mrs. M. M. McKenzie and Miss Florence Brooks, second; Maj. and Mrs. C. S. Brice, tied for third with J. F. Smith and R. H. Higgins; East and west, Dr. A. J. Steinberg and Wessal Stewart, first; Mrs. Helen Oden and Mrs. Frank Summy, second; Miss Mary Allen and C. W. Allen, third.

Section 2—North and South, J. D. Granger and L. C. Long, first; Mrs. Mary Johnson and A. M. Shepard, second; Mrs. J. H. Barber and Mrs. Alfred A. May, of Detroit, third; East and West, Mrs. L. F. Summerall and Miss Georgia Armistead, first; Col. and Mrs. C. G. Helmick, second; Mrs. Claire Arbaugh and James Sourilas, third.

Section 3—North and South, Mrs. Eugene Nolan and F. H. Tillotson, first; Miss Helen L. Joliffe and Dr. H. T. Herrick, second; Mrs. Alma Byrne and Isaac H. York, third; East and West, Mrs. V. A. Clarke and Warren Jones, first; P. W. Shepard and Fred Flynn, second; T. B. Westman and H. T. Oliver, third.

In the Clifford Cup match the defending team, composed of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Lemon, Mrs. Martin R. West and Lewis R. Watson, jr., won from the team comprising Mr. and Mrs. C. B. Pennebaker, D. C. Elliott and J. C. Davidson. The victory constituted their second leg on the cup.

Mrs. F. Samuel, Mrs. R. Robins, Mrs. Menne Barry and Mrs. M. R. Reddy were successful in one of the priority games. In the second priority game the winners were J. A. Dawkins, E. W. Rounds, Lloyd Tubbs and L. D. Johnson. These two teams will play December 18 for the right to contest in the January challenge round.

H. H. Harriss Elected.

H. H. Harriss, of the Washington Leica Club, was elected president of the camera group at an annual session last week. He advances from the office of secretary-treasurer. Mr. Harriss has been very busy editing the interesting publication of the club, "Photolore," and in his new job will continue to serve as editor.

Other new officers for the coming year are Jack Grillo, vice president and treasurer, and Dr. Francis E. Council, secretary. R. G. Allen was again appointed program director. Several changes were made in the constitution. A talk was heard by Eugen Weisz, artist, who discussed various principles of composition. He was assisted by Eleanor Park Custis, artist-photographer.

Williams Is Victor.

For the second consecutive time John O. Williams, chairman of the games committee, scored a comfortable victory in the duplicate contract series last Monday night at the National Press Club. His partner was Constantine Brown. Their score under the match-point system was 113½ against 110½ for Mr. and Mrs. Phelps Adams. Third in the contest were Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Griesemer, playing for the first time in the club series. It was also Mrs. Griesemer's first duplicate contract competition.

E. Hall Downes will deliver a series of four lectures on contract bridge before the Washington Club, beginning January 7.

France vs. U. S. Contract Series To Start in N. Y.

Finals to Be Played Behind Sound-Proof Glass in Madison Square Garden.

The Franco-American championship contract series will begin this week at the Essex House, in New York, and doubtless continue for seven or eight days. Four hundred hands are to be played. An unusual amount of interest is indicated, especially because of the fact that until about two years ago French players, with few exceptions, used the form of the game known as "plafond." This is a sort of a cross between American auction and contract and, the French claim, has the best features of both. It is not unlikely that their bidding and their play will be influenced to some extent by their predeliction to plafond. The event is under the auspices of the American Bridge League.

An innovation in bridge playing for public entertainment is to be attempted in the finals. The games will be played on December 23 at Madison Square Garden and the event is to be dramatized in an "Alice in Wonderland" manner. Each card played is to be portrayed by an usher, who will take his place in the proper sequence, and move off when "taken" in a trick.

Thus spectators will be able to follow the play while the contestants will be caged in sound-proof walls of glass. While big national events in bridge have always aroused widespread interest on the part of the fans, all efforts to make them exhibition games where an audience may be entertained have met with failure. The very nature of the game does not permit of its processes being performed in the spotlight. As this is a holiday stunt perhaps it may be countenanced as such, but for display of skill bridge is not a show game.

The French team comprises Capt. de Nexon, Pierre Albarran, Sophocles Venizolos and Emanuel Tulmaris and Georges Rousset. They were chosen to represent France in the Franco-American contest by reason of their victory in the European tournament of the International Bridge League last summer, in which contestants from 12 countries participated.

Matched against them will be the premier American team, the Four Aces, composed of David Burnstine, Oswald Jacoby, M. T. Gottlieb and Howard Schenken, who earned their right to play by winning the league's masters' team-of-four tournament in the fall of 1934.

Timidity About Doubling Most Prevalent Malady

Most Players Sometimes Too Aggressive in Bidding for Games, Says Expert, but Will Nearly Always Shun Double.

By Ely Culbertson.

I am often called in as a bridge diagnostician to point out a specific fault in a player's game. From long experience I have found that the most prevalent malady is timidity in doubling.

Most players are aggressive enough in bidding for games, and perhaps too aggressive in slam and sacrifice bidding. When it comes to doubling the opponents, however, particularly in less-than-game contracts, a curious inhibition gets control.

In most cases the failure to double at the proper time rests on a complete misconception of partnership cooperation.

We have the too familiar situation of, let us say, an opening diamond bid by North, a one spade overcall by East, and a double by South on such a hand as:

Spades King 10 8 6 5 3, hearts 6 2, diamonds 7 4 3, clubs 4 3.

It may come as a shock to thousands of players when I say that such a double, despite the six cards in opponent's suit, is simply horrible. Not once in a hundred times will it succeed, for the simple reason that not once in a hundred times will the contract remain one spade doubled. The usual result is that West rescues and that North, depending somewhat on South's indication of strength, will double the rescue bid. And South does not hold a single trick against any contract except spades! He cannot even "rescue the rescue" and must sit supinely while the opponents romp home with their doubled contract.

Perhaps a Miracle.

Perhaps a miracle occurs and the one-spade double contract is rescued by neither West nor the doubler's partner. Then what? Is there any assurance of defeating the contract? There most certainly is not, particularly against an astute declarer, who will continually throw South in the lead and make him play trumps into a holding such as A Q J 9 4, cutting South's trump winners to three or even two miserable tricks.

It is infinitely better to have fewer trumps and more honor tricks! In the final analysis, if a defending side has six trumps the most profitable division is usually four and two, sometimes three and three.

* * * *

Recently, however, I heard of a superstition that for sheer practicability surpasses any other of my knowledge. Fittingly, it was announced by a member of the more pragmatic sex—one of our leading woman bridge players. At the time she was playing against another expert, a man who is renowned for an unusually long neck as well as for remarkable technical ability.

"Please!" she said to him ever so sweetly, "please don't peek into my hand. I'm so superstitious about that!"

I recently watched a rubber of bridge in which pyrotechnical bidding, brilliant and stupid play and biting repartee were the characteristics of all the hands.

It was only fitting that the concluding hand of the rubber, with both sides vulnerable and East-West enjoying an advantage of about 550 points, should have offered some fireworks.

The bidding (both sides vulnerable):

South	West	North	East
Pass	Pass	1 H.	Pass
1 N. T.	Double	Pass	Pass
Redouble	(final bid)

Commenting on the bidding I should say that the only bid not in order was East's final pass to one no trump redoubled. He knew that his partner did not hold a powerful enough hand to open the bidding and that his secondary take-out double could not be stronger than it actually was. It is true that East feared that any bid he might make would be slaughtered by the opponents, but he had no right to risk North-South going game on a contract for only seven tricks and should have bid two diamonds.

Play Was Interesting.

The play was as interesting as the bidding. West opened the diamond queen, South held off, and West continued diamonds, North discarding a heart. The diamond ace won the second round and the queen of hearts was led and allowed to win. The small heart was led and dummy's 10 lost to the jack and East returned a diamond. South won with the king and excited with the fourth diamond, dummy discarding hearts on both rounds of diamonds. West made a desperate effort, by underleading the ace-king of spades, to steal a trick and at the same time put East in to cash his hearts, but declarer's jack spiked this gun. A spade was promptly led back and West was helpless. As a matter of fact, had the declarer dared to let West's club lead ride around to his own jack an over-trick would have resulted, but there was a chance that East could take the lead with the club queen and cash two good hearts. So South contented himself with seven tricks—game and rubber. Final score, 100 points for North and South.

At the Chess Table

By Willard H. Mutchler.

World Champion Alekhine is in dire straits in the current titular match with Dr. Euwe. With two games yet to play he trails the challenger by a score of 13½ to 14½, and has won only one game since the nineteenth.

Euwe won games No. 20, 21, 25 and 26, while Alekhine garnered No. 27, leaving the totals Euwe 9, Alekhine 8, drawn 11. A tense chess-world awaits the final outcome.

Baltimore Bows.

The Capital City Club, in a closely contested intercity match, defeated the Baltimore team by a score of 6 to 4. Outstanding features of the match were Eaton's 9-move victory over Dr. F. R. DiPauli, District Champion Stark's loss to A. C. Otten and exceptionally well-played games by D. H. Mugridge, H. E. Garner and D. A. Rudasill. The summary:

Baltimore white on the odd-numbered boards.

The customary banquet, held this year at Wesley Hall, was attended by 33 persons and dedicated to W. B. Mundelle, the grand old man of Washington chess, in honor of his eightieth birthday, occurring December 9. Club President C. W. Stark acknowledged Mr. Mundelle to be a mere infant compared to Baltimore's Mr. Torsch, age 84. but claimed two world championship titles for Mr. Mundelle: (1) that he had played more games of chess than any man living—estimated at over 100,000; and (2) that he could give any player a handicap of two squares and yet be the first to queen his pawn.

Mr. Mundelle retaliated gracefully by recounting a few outstanding incidents in his long career. He claimed the distinction of also being the only player to have participated in all the Baltimore-Washington matches in the past 43 years, and related interesting happenings in the famous U. S. Congress versus British Parliament cabled chess match of 1895, when he served as teller and helped coach the Congressmen. He listed an enviable galaxy of grand masters he has met, which included Pillsbury, Zukertort, Dr. Lasker, Janowski, Mieses, Alekhine, Kostich, Capablanca, Ed Lasker. Marshall. Showalter and W. H. Pollack.

In tribute to Frank B. Walker. famous District player recently deceased, the gathering observed a moment of solemn silence.

District Championship.

A. Y. Hesse, president of the District of Columbia Chess League, announces that the annual tournament for the District championship title will get under way on or before January 15. The event is open to all players within the metropolitan area and request for entrance should be sent immediately to Mr. Hesse at either the Capital City Chess Club, Hotel Gordon, or at 236 Cromwell terrace northeast, along with the $3 entry fee. The rules governing the competition will not vary very radically from those in force for the past several years.

Mr. Hesse also writes feelingly, as follows, in memory of Frank B. Walker: "During the 18 years of our acquaintance, I have known him to be courteous and considerate, a good sportsman and fighter, and with many of his other friends I feel a distinct loss in his death."

Eaton Exhibits.

Tuesday was ladies' night at the Capital City Club, and Vincent L. Eaton, substituting for Club Champion Mugridge, gave a simultaneous exhibition in which he scored nine wins and six losses. The feminine contingent opposing him scored three wins and five losses, whilst the males totaled three wins and four losses. Those defeating the single player included Mrs. H. E. Kittredge, Miss Maude Sewall, Mrs. E. R. Shepard and Messrs. E. M. Spitzer, E. R. Shepard and C. S. Seely. Those defeated were Mrs. A. W. Jones, Miss W. M. Ing, Miss Anna Bran, Mrs. M. J. Wilde, Miss L. A. Peters and Messrs. J. W. Brown, J. J. Campbell, E. M. Spitzer and Dr. Steimbach.

Weeks Wins Prize.

E. M. Weeks clinched first honors in the current minor tourney at the Capital City Club and was awarded with a copy of Reinfeld's "Lasker's Chess Career," autographed by all the participants. Second-place honors await the decision of the lone game yet to be played between H. S. Gay and C. W. Stark.

Jumper Proves Pluck After Air Escape

Girl Interviewed by President's Wife

Two Spend 30 Minutes Chatting About Survey

Camp Fire Worker Impressed by First Lady's Informal Manner; Calls Experience 'Biggest Thrill' of Lifetime.

Awed but not speechless, Geraldine Hartman, 15-year-old Camp Fire girl, was experiencing what she now calls her "biggest thrill." She was chatting with the First Lady of the Land.

The conversation took place at the Camp Fire headquarters in New York City.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, wife of the President, had arrived from her home in Hyde Park, near New York, to interview Geraldine.

Geraldine had come from her home, 631 North Front street, Reading, Pa., for her first visit to New York. She had won the trip as chairman of a Camp Fire committee in Reading which took first honors in the organization's national survey of home-town conditions.

The two chatted away like old friends.

"All the time Mrs. Roosevelt spoke," Geraldine writes Parade, "I was impressed by her informal manner. I felt perfectly at ease and answered her just as I would a person whom I had known for some time.

"I had an odd thought as I was sitting there. Mrs. Roosevelt looked so much like her pictures that I thought I had met her somewhere before!"

Describes Twilight On the Hudson River.

In the half-hour spent with Mrs. Roosevelt, Geraldine and a fellow Camp Fire member, Mae Parker, also of Reading, told of their activity as Camp Fire workers. Mrs. Roosevelt was interested in surveys girls of the organization made covering unemployment, home relief and future job opportunities for girls and young women of America.

Geraldine Hartman.

"New York City," adds Geraldine, "was also like the pictures I had seen of it and seemed familiar. When we ferried across the Hudson on our way to take the railroad for home, we saw the torch in the Statue of Liberty light up. And our last view was of the lights going on in all the buildings. It was all very lovely and a trip I shall never forget."

Midget Plane Makes Record Speed Flight

Sets New World Mark of 60 Miles Per Hour in Cleveland.

Whizzing through the air, the little yellow model airplane of Leonard Becker, 18, of 1657 Wyandotte avenue, Lakewood, Ohio, set a new world's speed record of 60 miles an hour!

Its propeller revolved 12,000 times a minute, almost ten times faster than a real plane's propeller. The high wing model sped over the 88 foot course in exactly one second. This year marks the second time Leonard has triumphed in the speed event which is part of the junior national air races held in Cleveland each year. Last year he won with a speed of 42.86 miles per hour.

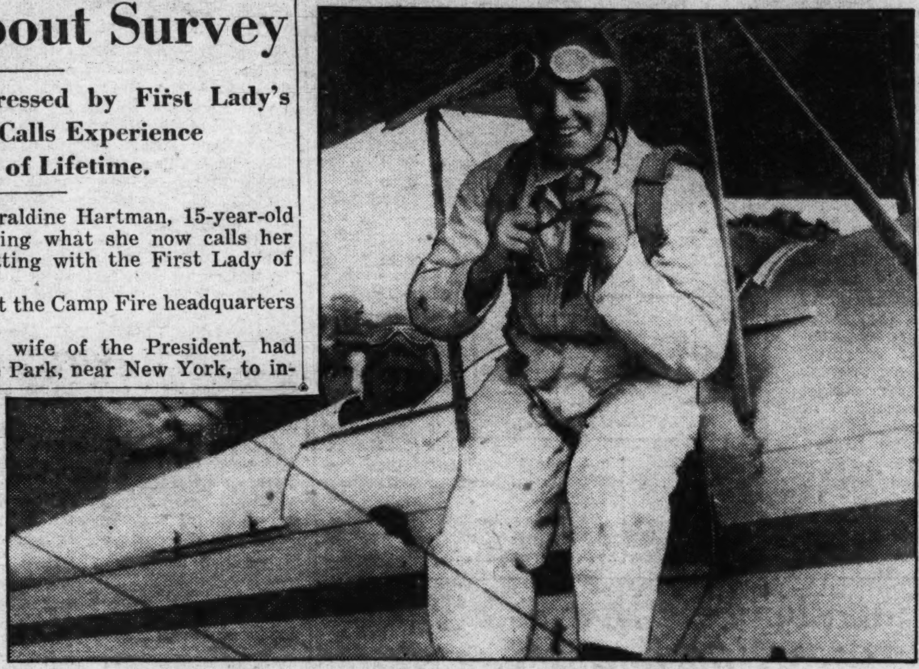
Says the model plane speed king: "I designed the plane myself and it is powered with 20 strands of rubber.

"I have been building model planes for eight years and when I graduate from high school I intend to be something in aviation."

Whatta Name!

Prince Edward George Nicholas Paul Patrick of Kent was the long name given the new grandson of King George and Queen Mary of England. For short, call him "His Royal Highness, Prince Edward of Kent!"

'Britain's Pluckiest and Luckiest'



Denis Smith, Poised on the Wing of a Plane, Parachute Ready.

Nimble Fingered Ann Is Maine Apple Queen

Nimble fingers racing through an apple tree brought Ann Holmes, of Gardiner, Me., the title of "Maine's 1935 Apple Queen."

"Just at the opening of the picking season," explains the queen, "the State Agricultural Department arranged a contest among girls from several of the apple-raising counties. I represented Kennebec County.

"We were taken to one of the large orchards where rows of trees seemed to stretch for miles and miles. We were each assigned to a tree.

"At a given signal we all began picking to see who could fill a bushel basket first without pulling off the stems of the apples or injuring them in any other way.

"I was lucky enough to win."

Queen Ann Holmes Munches an Apple.

Ann enjoys being a queen. She has received congratulatory letters from Maine's Governor and from people in other States. Her picture has been carried in the newsreels and many papers.

Naturally, her favorite fruit is the apple!

SOUTH AFRICAN youngsters rank among the healthiest in the world. Eighteen thousand have just been measured and weighed by the government, and they are on a par with Americans and English.

Revived, Boy Returns for Solo Stunting

Necktie Holds Airman to Wing; Pilot Cuts Him Loose.

Poised on the wing of an airplane, 2,500 feet up, Denis Smith prepared for his fourth successive jump of the day. With six more, the 18-year-old English boy would be the possessor of the official British parachute jumper's certificate.

Suddenly, a terrific blast of wind whisked his necktie from beneath his flying togs. Whirled it around a guy wire of the plane. Choked the youngster into unconsciousness. But with one last desperate effort he attracted his pilot, Capt. Watty Glover.

Pilot Makes One-Arm Landing in Fast Time.

"This was just before I 'blacked out,'" Denis writes Parade. "All I can remember is a feeling of nausea, then I seemed to dream of things that had happened before."

Captain Glover saw the youngster go limp and staged his part in the life and death drama. He seized the parachute harness, took out his knife, cut the tie and managed to pull Denis half way into the cockpit.

"It was Capt. Glover's heroic effort that saved my life," explains Denis. "He took 40 seconds to land from 2,500 feet—a marvelous feat, as he had to stand in the cockpit, hold on to me with one hand, pilot the aircraft with his other hand. I was unconscious 15 minutes after landing. A doctor said another quarter minute of choking would have been fatal."

Plans to Break Cape Town Mark.

When Denis "came to" at the Southend England airport he gave further proof of the title of "Britain's Pluckiest and Luckiest Airman," which English newspapers bestowed upon him. To test his nerve, he immediately soloed giving an exhibition of stunt flying.

He proved he had "what it takes," for on his three previous jumps he (1) narrowly escaped landing on a housetop; (2) knocked himself unconscious and (3) broke his goggles and blacked one eye.

"But since my lucky escape," says Denis, who lives on Pembury road, Westcliff-on-Sea, Essex, England, "I have completed another six jumps and hold my license." He now plans a record-breaking flight of 7,500 miles from England to Cape Town, South Africa. There will be a co-pilot with him.

"We will use a Klemm Eagle with a cruising speed of 140 miles. We will not carry parachutes but will stick to our plane to the last."

Hero Risks Life to Save Man from Fumes

Himself Falls Victim to Gas After Rescue

Robert Volunteers to Enter Fire Pit as Others Refuse.

Robert Richard Edwards got his man—although he almost lost his life in doing it!

Robert, 17, of 940 Middle Drive, Woodruff place, Indianapolis, Ind., pulled Andy Rose, a plumber, out of a furnace where Rose had been working when overcome by gas. But not until he, too, had fallen victim to the deadly fumes.

Robert Edwards.

Robert views his heroic feat modestly, commenting, "It was no big job. Some one had to act quickly, and I came along just in time."

Robert was on his way home from school for lunch when Rose's assistant asked him to help. Several others had declined.

"Looking into the furnace," says Robert, "I saw the grates had fallen, fastening the clothing of the man and holding his arms. I was hurriedly lifted into the firing door head first and proceeded to loosen the man's clothing and arms. The men were too large and I was barely able to squeeze through the door."

Just as Robert dragged the unconscious plumber to safety, he, too, fell victim to the gas fumes.

He was pulled from the mouth of the furnace and revived. But gas poisoning forced him to miss two days at school, testifying to the danger he risked.

10-Year-Old Girl And 98-Year-Old Woman Classmates

Mrs. Jean Lawrie and Elaine Thibodeau.

A 98-year-old woman and a 10-year-old girl study side by side at San Francisco Continuation School.

The former, Mrs. Jean Lawrie, is taking a course in lip reading to overcome a slight defect in hearing, while the latter, Elaine Thibodeau takes art craft training as a "guest" student to keep her nimble fingers going after a busy day at grade school. Parade carried a story on Elaine's art work last summer. She is enrolled in the adult art class despite a minimum age limit of 16.

Headlines of 1935 Mirrored In New Toys This Christmas

Even toys follow the news—and sometimes precede it. Never more faithfully have the headlines been copied in playthings than this Christmas season, a survey of holiday specialties reveals.

The Ethiopian war has invaded toyland with an "Ethiopian Game" something like parchesi, and with uniformed troops of Il Duce and Haile Selassie.

Reproductions of the S. S. Normandie, new French luxury liner and the largest afloat, commemorate launching of the vessel this year. A construction set contains all the materials for making a model of the liner.

S.S. NORMANDIE

"Automobile row" carries models of Sir Malcolm Campbell's speed racer and reproductions of the latest popular motorcars. Streamlining is the vogue. The effect is even seen in bicycles, tricycles and scooters. One miniature automobile carries a music box to represent a radio-equipped car.

The "G-Man Cruiser" acclaims the accomplishments of the Federal Department of Justice in tracking down public enemies. It carries a submachine gun that emits a realistic rat-tat-tat and harmless sparks instead of bullets.

STREAMLINER

Streamlining is seen in the new trains. There are models of the famous Union Pacific streamliner, which this year set a transcontinental record, of the Burlington Zephyr, Commodore Vanderbilt, Hiawatha, the Flying Yankee and the Century. The de luxe models have a train whistle that can hardly be distinguished from the real thing.

In airships are models of the Pan-American Sikorsky Clipper, which crossed the Pacific Ocean this year, and the Douglas and Boeing transport planes.

The Dionne quintuplets are growing up—both as real babies and as baby dolls. Last year they were represented as mere tots. This year they are 18 months old and come fully equipped with bibs, play pens and white-robed nurses.

Nobody has yet perfected the rocket ships that may some day carry us to the moon. But they're in the 1935 toy line-up, just like the ones pictured in the comic strips.

Thus may the tables be turned and the toys of today become the news of tomorrow!

Canadian Girl Braves Flames Third Time to Rescue Brother

How a 13-year-old Canadian farm girl three times fought her way through the flames of her burning home to rescue members of her family is now being told around East Kildonan, near Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba.

Calmly Betty Damskov set about the work of saving her mother and her two brothers, Buddy, 8, and Mickey, a baby. Sparks had ignited their house one night in the absence of their father.

Betty awakened Buddy. She wrapped Mickey in the bed clothes and carried him to the front yard.

When she returned she found her mother had fainted in the excitement. Inch by inch she dragged her through a window.

But Buddy was still in the burning house. Into the flames Betty dashed again and found the boy, with his clothes blazing. She beat out the flames and got safely to the yard.

Then she carried Mickey three-quarters of a mile to a neighbor's house and returned with wraps for her mother and Buddy.

"I think you should write about my dog," says Betty modestly in a letter to Parade.

"He awakened us and warned us of the fire."

Pigs Bring Title Of 'Star Farmer'

"Star Farmer of America" for 1935, is Paul Leck, 18-year-old Future Farmer, of Washington, Kans. With the title goes an award of $500.

Paul's feat of earning $1,916 in four years by raising and selling pigs, turkeys and chickens won him the award coveted by every one of the 100,000 Future Farmers of America.

Paul's present large number of livestock started humbly with 16 pigs.

He sold these, with the money bought more pigs and added poultry. Still later, came turkeys.

They All Love Mountain Music, These Hill Billy Band Members

A Section of the Charles W. Morey School Hill Billy Band.

There's not a hill billy among them, but members of the Charles W. Morey School hill billy band, of Lowell, Mass., turn out real mountain music.

Miss Helen Hannon, the band's director, tells the story:

"November a year ago I was asked to prepare an entertainment for a parent-teacher's meeting. I though it would be a novel idea to have an all-boy entertainment.

"From my music classes I selected some good singers, and learned there were some harmonica players and one accordion player. I decided to dress the boys in big hats, loud scarfs and other hill billy clothes."

Since then the band has grown in size and fame. Violins and saxophones have been added. The boys have played at many charity entertainments in New England.

This year, when Miss Hannon again organized the band, 56 boys tried for the 20 places!

Boys Retrace Trail Lincoln Used to Walk

Scouts Decorated With Medals After Hike of 23-Miles.

In the footsteps of Abraham Lincoln, three Elgin, Ill., Boy Scouts recently hiked the 23-mile trail that the Great Emancipator trod while a young man studying law.

The trail began at Salem, Ill., where Lincoln was postmaster when he traveled on foot once a week to Springfield, the State capital and his later home, to borrow law books for his legal education.

The Elgin Scouts were Edmund Stohr, Robert Lea and Warren Hancheet. Warren walked 17 of the 23 miles in his barefeet, as Lincoln once did. They all made the trip within 5 hours and 40 minutes.

Before qualifying for the hike, the trio wrote book reviews of Ida M. Tarbell's "Boy Scout Life of Lincoln." After the pilgrimage they were awarded Lincoln Trail Medals, presented by the Springfield Abraham Lincoln Council of Boy Scouts. In Elgin only Scouts of Eagle rank are allowed to try for the medal.

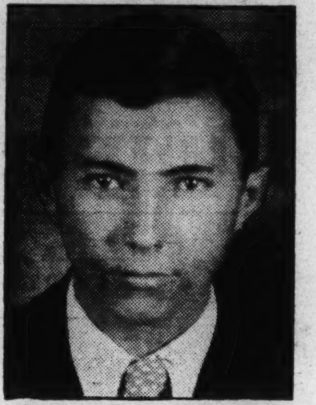
About the hike, Edmund says: "My sister drove us from Elgin to Salem to make the trip. The medals meant nothing compared to the inspiration of traveling the trail once covered by one of our greatest Presidents."

Youth Swallows Frog To Win 25-Cent Bet

Eugene Saunders, 18, of Homestead, Fla., had a frog in his throat recently—a real jumping frog.

Someone bet Eugene a quarter he wouldn't swallow a live frog. Imagine the spectators' consternation when Eugene, figuring that two bits is two bits and a frog is only a frog, won the bet.

Crop Champs



Raymond Ferris, Cotton King.

Roger Gramling, Hay Maker.

Southerners Take Awards For Farming

Raymond Ferris and Roger Gramling, high school students of Orangeburg, S. C., proved that scientific farming pays.

Their work won State-wide contests sponsored by a national fertilizer company, with trips to Washington, D. C., as prizes.

Both boys, vocational agriculture students in the Orangeburg High School, grew their prize-winning crops as part of their supervised practice programs.

Raymond elected to raise cotton. On two acres he raised 2,176 pounds, or 1,088 pounds per acre. The average production per acre for South Carolina is only 258 pounds!

Roger cast his lot with hay, because, as he writes, "I felt there was a great need for more hay on my home farm." He obtained a yield of 4.4 tons per acre, which contrasts startlingly with the State average of only 6/100.

Raymond made a total profit of $302.18 from his cotton and Roger realized $175.84 from his hay.

Visitor Eats Too Much, Sleeps Too Little, Rescues 7

Mitchell Boumkana had eaten too much dinner. It was a dreary night. He was at his uncle's house and couldn't sleep well.

So, he was awake when fire broke out in the basement, and he led his aunt, uncle and five girl cousins to safety.

Mitchell, 14, of 1311 S. Twenty-fifth street, Omaha, Nebr., writes: "I herded my aunt and cousins out on the second-floor porch. My uncle went to investigate the smoke on the first floor and was overcome. But I went after him and dragged him out."

Neighbors summoned firemen, who put out the blaze.

‘Cowboy Family’ Takes Two Championships

Billy Trapp Takes Charge At Fire Scene

Warns Sleepers, Calls Engines; Finishes Paper Route.

"Fire!"

Billy Trapp, 13, of 302 N. Central avenue, Rockford, Ill., trudges along the street on an early Sunday morning, delivering papers.

He sees flames darting from the window of a house.

Swiftly, coolly, he acts, and his heroism and presence of mind saves four sleeping children, their mother and father.

Here's Billy's own story: "I was about half through my route when I saw the fire in the house of Mr. Royce Allen. I tossed my sack to the ground, rushed to the porch and rapped and kicked on the door until Mrs. Allen came down.

Billy Trapp.

"Then I went to the back door and opened it. But I shut it fast because the flames leapt through the doorway. I ran to call the fire department. I saw a man on the street, hailed him and we aroused a man in the house on the corner and used his telephone.

"I rushed back to the Allen house and helped carry out some bed clothing, and we escorted the children to safety. The fire department came and soon had the fire under control."

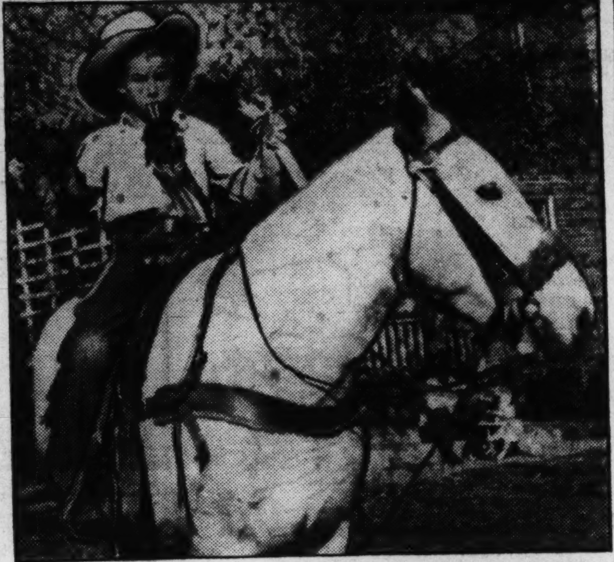
Then what do you think Billy did? Went home to bed? No! "I finished my route and that was the end of the excitement," he concludes.

That's the Problem.

Teacher: I just don't know what to do about your son. He doesn't do the problems at all like I showed him.

Mother: Oh, Henry always has been very original!

Four Steer-Riding, Broncho-Busting Brothers



Above, the Kelley Family and Their Trophies, Left to Right, Bill, Beryl, Bob and Jack. Below, Bob Shows His From the Saddle.

Senior Rodeo Title Awarded Oldest Kelley

Bob Winner of Junior Crown in National Round-Up.

Masters and champions of cowboy tricks are the Kelley brothers—Beryl, 18, Bill, 13, Bob, 11, and Jack, of Tulsa, Okla.

Until a few years ago, the boys had done little riding, but since 1933 have been "going to town" at all the rodeos in their section.

They started in 1932 by attending rodeos to learn how to rope calves, ride steers and bulldog steers. The next year Bill won their first prize.

Bill Breaks Shoulder, Quits Riding Steers.

"He made points in calf roping, trick roping and steer riding," writes Beryl. "But he broke a shoulder when his last steer pitched him into the fence.

"He quit riding steers," adds Beryl laconically.

"When we started out in 1934," continues Beryl, "I had championships on my mind. During that season, we attended two shows, one at Baxter Springs, Kans., and the other at Okmulgee, Okla.

"We won 66 ribbons and a cup representing the Junior Championship. Bob took the championship."

Brothers Work as Team in Contests.

This year, Beryl realized his personal ambition at the Tulsa National Round-up by winning the National Senior Championship with a total of 30 points in calf roping, trick riding and bulldogging. And Bob again won the Junior Championship.

The boys always work as a team. With each one performing, the family is represented in each event by two members. During the "off season" last year, the boys went on an exhibition tour that took them into the nearby States of Louisiana, Texas, Arkanasas, Missouri and Kansas.

When the "cowboy family" first started rodeo work they were each presented with a pony. Since then, Beryl has bought a horse which he has trained for trick riding.

To their collection of horses and ponies they have added a real rangeman's outfit. It consists of a pair of Shetland mules and a fully equipped chuck wagon.

Model Flier Marooned on Face of Cliff

Ralph Cole, 12, of 32 Everett street, Lynn, Mass., wants his model gliders to be high flyers. That got him in trouble and almost caused his injury. A human chain of firemen dangling down a cliff wall, saved him.

He went to the top of the cliff to launch his sail plane. It stuck on a ledge, about 20 feet down and 60 feet above the ground. Down the face of the cliff went Robert, retrieved his glider, but couldn't get back up.

"I was there about three-quarters of an hour," he says, "then my chum called the fire department for ladders. These were brought, but couldn't be used because of trees in front of the cliff.

"The firemen saved me, though, by climbing down and passing me up along the line. I felt as if I never wanted to see a cliff again in my life."

Teacher: Who knows what the five senses are?

Peggy: Nickels!

Nation's Healthiest Family Is Shown by 'Show Me State'

The Prize-Winners, All Healthy and All Related.

Seven youngsters, all related, are each a health prize winner! They are grandchildren of Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Goodnight, Knobnoster, Mo.

Missouri awards health prizes each year and this group has won 10 cups, 14 ribbons and 8 buttons in seven years.

Anita Bills, 8, of Pueblo, Colo., has won three cups, one button, three ribbons; Doris Goodnight, 7, Knobnoster, has four buttons, one cup, one ribbon; Alan Goodnight, 6, two cups, two buttons, two ribbons; Charles Goodnight, 4, one cup and two ribbons; Galen Bills, 2, Pueblo, one cup, and two ribbons, and Donald Jones, 3, Pueblo, one cup and three ribbons.

Jack Is Stunned By Lightning Bolt in Storm

Jack McClelland, 11, of Broomall, Pa., was stunned by a bolt of lightning and lives to write Parade about it. "With two companions I was damming a stream in a nearby woods, when a storm came up," he says. "We headed for home.

"But just as we reached a wire fence, lightning hit a nearby tree. All I remember seeing was a bluish red flash jumping from the tree and running along the fence. The shock threw us all to the ground and knocked me out.

"My friends helped me to reach an open field, where we lay down in the rain until the storm eased up. When I got home, drenched to the skin, mother gave me hot drinks and put me to bed.

"My legs were very weak for several days, and for some time afterward the shock affected my nerves. But I'm all right now."

It Is Elephantine! This Collection of 102 Toy Elephants

Phyllis Whitehead, 17, of 3516 Sydney place, San Diego, Calif., likes big things in a little way. She collects elephant statuettes.

Her hobby started ten years ago when someone gave her a toy elephant. Now she has 102.

Most of her herd came from abroad. Her father has visited many foreign countries and has always returned with additions to her collection.

English Boast Shirley Temple All Their Own

The "English Shirley Temple."

That's what they call little Rita Burton, of Stratford, London, because she won hands down in a Shirley Temple film contest sponsored by a London theater when she sang Shirley's song, "On the Good Ship Lollypop" to an audience of 2,500 people, and broke into a complicated tap dance.

Shirley Temple? No! Rita Burton.

Rita has had thorough screen tests by British studios, but it will probably be some time before you see her on the screen. For Rita won't be 5 until next March, and English law prohibits youngsters of her age from appearing in films.

43,282 Youngsters Bestow New Names On Zoo Residents

Those recently acquired animals who live in the Central Park and Prospect Park Zoos in New York City, each have a brand-new, strictly individual name!

The names are the gift of New York boys and girls under 13 who, after two weeks of hard thinking, submitted no less than 43,282 titles in a "Name Our Animals" contest conducted by the park department.

The older animals had acquired nicknames through the years, but the 46 nameless new arrivals were fast developing inferiority complexes. Former Governor Alfred E. Smith, "Bring 'Em Back Alive" Frank Buck and Explorer John Kelly selected the winning names.

Now, to you and anybody else who might visit the zoos, it is—if you please—Babo, the baboon; Tillie, the elk; Hopple, the kangaroo; Bucket, the waterbuck; and Oscar, the ocelot! Park attendants will doubtless tell you the other names, if you're interested.

Around the World in News, Scie

Advance on the North.

1 One of the most extensive explorations of Northwest Canada has been completed by scientists from the American Museum of Natural History in New York City.

Operating mostly in the Provisional District of MacKenzie, the scientists traveled thousands of miles by dog team, river boat, airplane and pack train to secure first specimens of the rare black-tailed sheep ever taken out of the North. In addition, they brought back blue stone mountain sheep and dark-colored northern elk, collections of smaller animals, 15,000 feet of motion picture film and many still photographs.

On the barren lands east of Fort Reliance, they found vast herds of musk oxen thriving under government protection. They also photographed giant wood buffalo roaming the forests and salt plains near the Slave River.

They flew over mountain ranges never seen before from the air and fought their way up the swirling white waters of the Nahanni River through a gorge they said could only be described as one of the wonders of the world.

Jungles Debunked.

2 City streets are more dangerous than the jungle now, according to Goeffrey Vrendenburg, who has just returned to England from a 2,000-mile trek along the banks of the Amazon River.

Harassed by newshawks to tell of the great "perils," he encountered in his fruitless search for animals and adventure, he said, "perils, my foot! I was there four months and can count the wild animals I saw on one hand.

"I came across a 25-foot boa constrictor and whipped out my knife to defend myself. But that snake merely gazed at me from a tree—and winked slyly!"

Hypnotism.

3 In the future anyone needing relaxation may visit a doctor to get himself hypnotized instead of going on a vacation.

Hypnotism relaxes the muscles, shortens hours of sleep, reduces aches and pains, and even sweetens the disposition. Dr. James H. Taylor, of Wittenberg College, Springfield, Ohio, claims.

He took ten students, put them in a trance for periods of 30 to 45 minutes. Each time before awakening them he said, "You will say to yourself, 'relax.' You will relax every muscle in your body from the tip of your toes to the top of your head. You will relax immediately."

After the training was over, the ten reported fewer headaches, eye, arm, leg and muscle aches, and their friends noticed that they had lost all their nervous bad habits such as pacing the floor, speaking jerkily and other annoying mannerisms.

Flying Death.

4 The same poison used by Indians of the Amazon valley in their blowguns may be just the medicine needed to cure certain human diseases. Medical men are now experimenting with the poison and favorable results have been reported.

Curari is the name of the poison. It is made by boiling the roots and bark of the Stryc[illegible] vine until a brown, gummy paste is secured. Natives apply this to the blowgun darts and dry them before a fire to make it stick.

Out hunting, the native wraps wild cotton fibers around the pencil-like base of the dart, inserts it in his blowgun and shoots it at game with a hard puff of breath.

The Indians are amazingly accurate with their blowguns. Reliable observers say they rarely miss.

Death is instant and painless, and the meat of any game shot with curari is perfectly edible. The only precaution taken is to cut out the dart and the meat surrounding it.

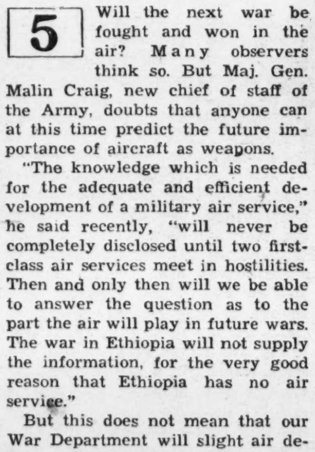
Some of the Indians are said to swallow small quantities of the poison as a tonic. This is what is interesting medicine.

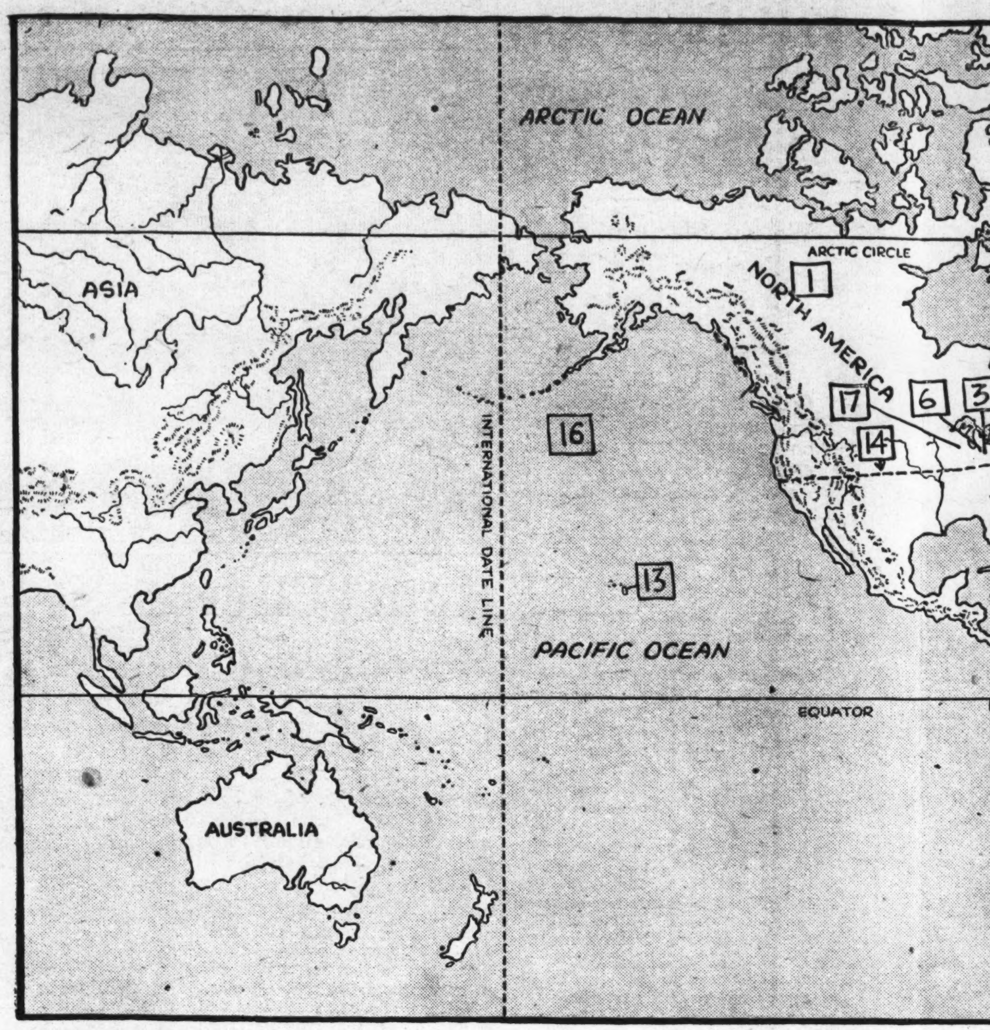
Aircraft in War.

5 Will the next war be fought and won in the air? Many observers think so. But Maj. Gen. Malin Craig, new chief of staff of the Army, doubts that anyone can at this time predict the future importance of aircraft as weapons.

"The knowledge which is needed for the adequate and efficient development of a military air service," he said recently, "will never be completely disclosed until two first-class air services meet in hostilities. Then and only then will we be able to answer the question as to the part the air will play in future wars. The war in Ethiopia will not supply the information, for the very good reason that Ethiopia has no air service."

But this does not mean that our War Department will slight air defense. On the contrary, every effort is being made to keep abreast of other nations in airplanes, poison gases, aerial bombs and anti-aircraft guns. Illustrated is one of the latest anti-aircraft guns showing what is being done in this line.

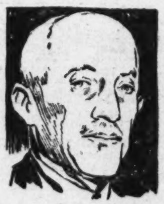




Father of Flight.

6 On December 17 Orville Wright celebrates an important anniversary—both to himself and to the world at large.

For it was on December 17, 1903, that a queer, box-kite-like contrivance rose falteringly into the air above Kitty Hawk, N. C., and actually flew. Today the man who made that first flight in a motor-driven, heavier-than-air machine looks at a world where the airplane's drone is a familiar sound.



Orville Wright is one of the few men ever to officiate at the birth of a great invention and live to see it attain a vigorous maturity.

The youngest of the famed Wright brothers, Orville was born August 19, 1871, in Dayton, Ohio. He was a boy of 7 when his father gave the brothers a popular flying toy called the "flying spinner." The toy fired their enthusiasm and led ultimately to solution of the age-old problem of supplying wings for man.

After years of experimenting in the bicycle shop which they operated, they succeeded in discovering the principles of flight. But it was a long time before they convinced the world of their success, for ill luck followed their early attempts to demonstrate to impatient journalists that the airplane was a practical reality.

In 1909, though, Orville Wright piloted his plane in a successful flight that fulfilled Government requirements, and the newly founded Wright Co. was given an impetus in its plane-building activities.

Four years later he was awarded the Collier Trophy for invention of the automatic stabilizer.

Since war days, when he held a major's commission in the Aviation Corps, Wright has devoted himself chiefly to aeronautical research. In recognition of his many great contributions to aeronautics he has been decorated by many governments.

Fossil to Chalk.

7 The white stick of chalk used nearly every day on the blackboard is full of invisible wonders from the bottom of the sea. It is a mass of densely packed tiny fossil shells, now more or less crushed or broken, which lived in the ocean eons ago. A chalk pencil probably contains 1,000,000 shells.

There are chalk rocks and cliffs, ranges of hills, whole sections of country largely composed of these almost invisible sea shells—the chalk cliffs of Dover, England, for instance. Of exquisite form and intricate pattern are they. In each shell once lived a minute jelly-like animal.

These creatures died. They fell for miles down through the ocean until they reached the sticky mud on the bottom. There they lay and in time hardened into chalk.

After ages, the sea bottom was raised and became dry land. Now workmen quarry the chalk, send it to schools in neat boxes for blackboard crayons.

And the ocean is still working, heaping specks of mud together, and laying millions, billions, trillions of shells together. Chalk-making never ceases. It went on in the dim past. It goes on now.

Stops and Goes.

8 Man constantly pits his skill and ingenuity to solve the ever-growing problem presented by the motorcar.

Here are two new improvements in automatic traffic control now being tried out in England:

The first concerns itself with the pedestrian. An invisible ray, which works on the photo-electric eye principle, is broken by the man on foot, thus changing the traffic light from green to red. Thus he is able to cross the street in safety. This apparatus is being installed at crossings where traffic often holds up pedestrians for long periods.

The second is an electric counter. A number of cars, on a side road, may be awaiting a change of lights to enter a through highway. If they outnumber the cars passing on the highway, the counter clicks on the red light for the highway, green for the side road, thus saving side-street traffic unnecessary delay.

9 A rangy man steps from a Harrisburg, Pa., hotel. His companion barely reaches his shoulder.

They hop into a waiting carriage, a short time later board a train. Next morning, President-elect Abraham Lincoln and famed detective Allan Pinkerton unexpectedly enter Washington, D. C.

Because so many people had the same feeling toward the new President that four years later drove a half-crazed actor to shoot him and because Pinkerton had just heard of a plot to assassinate Lincoln in Baltimore, the latter secretly entered the Capital for the inauguration.

That dramatic move in 1861 was the birth of the "Protector of Presidents"—the United States Secret Service.

Guarding the Presidents and their families is only one of the two principal duties of the service. The other is the suppression of counterfeiting. Of the two, the first is probably the most painstaking and the second, the most hazardous.

Unlike operatives of the Justice Department, Secret Service men are really "secret." Outside the service they are scarcely known.

Even their number is not generally known, though it is estimated to be about 150. In photographs of the President, Secret Service men rarely face the camera.

H. Moran, who has spent more than 50 years in the department. His superior is the Secretary of the Treasury. Chief Moran details special men as Presidential guards and is the only man who can actually regulate the private lives of the "First Family."

When the President travels overland, the Secret Service makes all arrangements. Operatives go ahead, prowl through tunnels and under bridges, inspecting every inch of the track.

On more than one occasion, precautions like these have proved worthwhile. Secret Service men once prevented President Harding from using a boat. A short time later, the boat sank. They forbade President Hoover to speak from a platform. In a short while, the platform collapsed.

In most pictures of Secret Service men in company with Presidents, the operatives' arms are folded across their breasts. One hand clutches a revolver inside their coats. An old picture of President Lincoln and Allan Pinkerton shows Pinkerton with one hand inside his coat.

Operatives detailed to unearth counterfeiters are picked for their intimate knowledge of printing and engraving.

With practiced and experienced eyes these men spot "queer" money even when bank tellers assert it is genuine. They sometimes patiently follow clues for years before landing their man.

Eyeless Sight.

10 Our eyes, scientists admit, are merely modified skin tissue. So perhaps the remarkable theory of "eyeglass sight" advanced at the International Optical Congress at Oxford, England, isn't so unsound, after all.

C. S. Flick, an optician, described an experiment by a London surgeon. The latter blindfolded a girl and handed her a natural history book containing colored plates. The girl described the pictures and told accurately the color of each.

Mr. Flick declared that the possibility of trickery could be dismissed entirely as well the possibility that normal sight was being used during the experiments.

"Given the truth of the theory," he said, "it would seem to indicate that there are still left within the skin thousands of very minute primitive 'eyes,' similar to those of simple organisms like bacteria, capable of reacting to the stimulus of light."

Words, Words, Words.

11 Suppose we go to the "bioscope," or would you rather call it the "flick?" Just slip on your "tackeys." Any "petrol" in the car? All right, you ride the "dickey seat." Better use the "hooter" to warn that woman ahead, who is trying to catch the "tram." Never mind, she's gone back to the "chemist's." I do hope I'll get that "billet" as an "assistant" that I'm trying for.

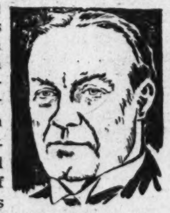
Many of these words may mystify you slightly. But if you were in South Africa they wouldn't. That's because they are all common, everyday terms. A Cape Town writer, just back from America, gives our equivalent words—equally mystifying to South Africans. Here's the same paragraph!

Suppose we go to the movies. Just slip on your tennis sneakers. Any gas in the car? All right, you ride the rumble seat. Better use the horn to warn that woman ahead, who is trying to catch the street car. Never mind, she's gone back to the drug store. I do hope I'll get that job as a clerk that I'm trying for.

Kipling Kin.

12 With a vote of confidence such as the head of an English government rarely receives, Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin today stands more securely than ever at the helm of Britain's ship of state.

The recent elections broke precedent in that they represented the only consecutive victory for any British government since the World War. And they gave Prime Minister Baldwin and his conservatives a free hand in handling such disturbing problems as England's stand on the Italian-Ethiopian war and the question of rearmament. His government's policy of closely allying England with the League of Nations was supported and will doubtlessly be continued.



A cousin of Rudyard Kipling, Stanley Baldwin was born at Stourport, Worcestershire, August 3, 1867. Educated at Harrow College and Cambridge University, he got his first job after graduation in 1888, as a day laborer! But it was in his father's thriving iron works that he labored. Within 20 years he had worked his way to the top.

His first and only election defeat came with his first try for Parliament, in 1906, from the district of Kidderminster. But two years later, when his father's death left vacant the seat from Bewdley, he became an M. P. (Member of Parliament.) The same district returned him consistently from then on.

Personally popular, the Right Hon. Stanley Baldwin is a typical Englishman of the "roast beef and Yorkshire pudding" school. Addicted to his pipe, without which he is seldom pictured, he was fined while a student at Cambridge for smoking while attired in cap and gown! He believes strongly in maintaining British and American friendship, holding that by close collaboration of these two countries the world may be freed from war. But he thinks it will take a hundred or so years to do it!

Enemy Befriended.

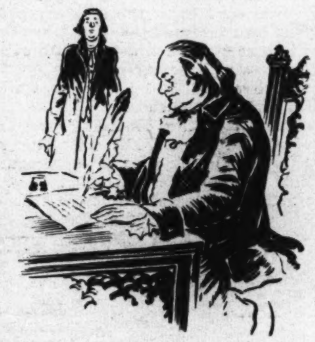
13 Capt. Cook, the great English explorer, might never have lived to tell of his discovery of the Hawaiian Islands had it not been for Benjamin Franklin. A photostatic copy of a letter written by Franklin and recently acquired by the Archives of Hawaii bears that out.

America and England were at war. Privateers were scouring the seas for English ships. Capt. Cook, unaware that war had been declared, was on his way home from the South Seas.

In this emergency, Benjamin Franklin, himself one of the great pioneer scientists and at that time minister to the Court of France, addressed a letter to American ship captains to spare the Cook vessel.

The letter reads in part as follows:

"This is therefore most earnestly to recommend to every one of you that in case the said ship, which is now expected to (arrive) soon in the European seas on her return, would happen to fall into your hands, you would not consider her as an enemy, nor suffer any plunder to be made of the effects contained in her . . . but that you would treat the same Capt. Cook and his people with all civility and kindness, affording them as common friends to mankind all the assistance in your power."



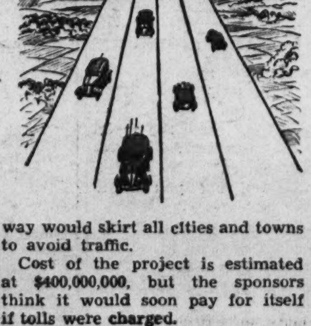
Super-Highway.

14 A super-highway from coast ot coast without a single grade crossing, intersection or curve!

That is the dream of the Pittsburgh (Pa.) Chamber of Commerce. Moreover, the Public Works Administration is interested in the project as a means of putting 200,000 idle men to work for two years, and the War Department thinks it would be valuable for rapid transportation of troops and munitions in event of war.

The highway would have two 45-foot strips—one for each direction—divided by a central curbing. Each strip would again be divided into fast and slow lanes. The fast lane would be 25 feet wide, would have no speed limit. The slow lane would be 20 feet wide and would be used by trucks and cars not able to keep up the terrific pace in the fast lane. Entrance to the highway would be made by ramps placed at 10-mile intervals.

The eastern end of the highway would probably be near New York, the western terminus at San Francisco. En route, however, the highway would skirt all cities and towns to avoid traffic.

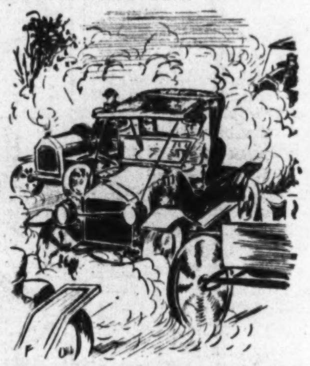


Cost of the project is estimated at $400,000,000, but the sponsors think it would soon pay for itself if tolls were charged.

Horseless Buggies.

15 Honk! Wheeze! Rattle! Bang!

These assorted sounds startled the English country-side one day recently as 80 antiquated "horseless buggies" chugged laboriously along the road from London to Brighton in the annual "old crocks" race.



The race commemorated that triumphant occasion back in 1896 when automobiles were given freedom of the highways. Previously a man with a red flag had to walk in front of the machines to warn pedestrians and horses from their paths.

The race afforded a good idea of the great strides made by the motor car as new and sleek cars roared by. None of the old cars was of later vintage than 1904.

Some of the machines had to give up in favor of a tow, but 68 of them wheezed to the finish. A gold medal was given each mud-spattered driver.

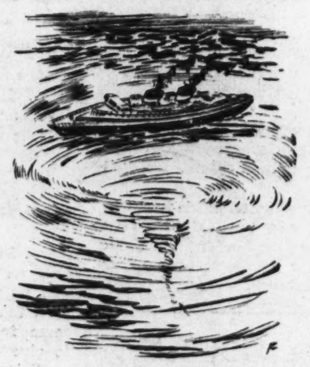
The winner, George Eyres, drove a 1902 Napier over the 69-mile course in one hour and 50 minutes. A modern car could have easily traveled the course within an hour.

Pacific Maelstroms.

16 Do vast maelstroms — giant ocean whirlpools — that beggar the imagination of a Jules Verne exist in the North Pacific Ocean?

Seamen claim they do. That seems the only plausible explanation for the complete disappearance of a number of ships within the past ten years.

These ill-fated vessels, fully equipped with wireless, have sailed from ports on both sides of the Pacific, but after a few days out have never been heard from again. Not a single member of their crews has returned; not a spar has floated to the shore to give a clew as to their fate. Not an SOS was heard.



Some of these ships were the American steamer Elkton, the British vessel Asiatic Prince and the Japanese boat Yonan Maru.

Fuel Forever.

17 Lack of fuel need not worry us for a long time to come.

Speaking before the American Chemical Society's Midwest meeting the other day, Dr. Gustav Egloff, famous research chemist, said we have enough coal to last 6,000 years and enough oil to keep our cars running for at least a hundred.

And when we have exhausted our oil and coal, there will still be plenty of power available. The tides, the wind and the sun can be used to run machinery. And it may come to pass that our descendants will even tap the hot core of the earth and possess all the power needed without working for it.

WINGS OF THE WORLD

From the sand dunes of Kitty Hawk, N. C., 32 years ago, this month two men made the first airplane flight.

To the desolate spit of land separating Albermarle Sound from the pounding Atlantic, Wilbur and Orville Wright, brothers and bicycle makers of Dayton, Ohio, had gone to fly!

• • • •

How They Began— A toy "flying spinner" had interested the brothers in flying. While idly twisting the top of an inner tube box, Wilbur had stumbled on the principle of wing-warping to control a plane in flight.

This discovery led to experiments with kites. The brothers graduated to gliders and the U. S. Weather Bureau had suggested Kitty Hawk as the country's best gliding site. There they worked for three years.

• • • •

Success!—Then they installed their own motor in a glider. They flipped a coin for the privilege of making the first flight and Wilbur won. But on his attempt, a wire broke and the craft fell.

Three days later, December 17, 1903, it was Orville's turn. Thus by chance he piloted the first man-carrying, powered, heavier-than-air craft ever to fly. This first flight lasted only 12 minutes, but was followed the same day by longer ones.

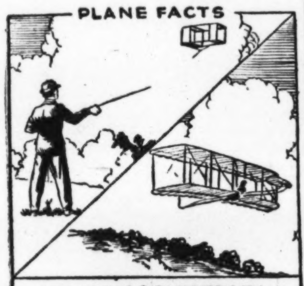
Though five witnesses saw the flight, the outside world was reluctant to believe. Even the correspondent of a New York newspaper who was a witness, was fired for reporting the story!

• • • •

Wilbur Wright did not live to see the glorious development of what he helped create. He died in 1912.

But Orville, from his home in Dayton, can gaze aloft almost any hour of the day or night and see a tribute to his brother and to himself.

PLANE FACTS



KITES GAVE US BOTH ELECTRICITY AND AVIATION. BENJAMIN FRANKLIN SNATCHED LIGHTNING FROM THE CLOUDS WITH A KITE AND A COMMON DOOR KEY. THE WRIGHT BROTHERS LEARNED THE PRINCIPLES OF PLANE CONSTRUCTION FROM KITE FLYING, APPLIED THEM TO GLIDERS AND FINALLY TO MOTORED PLANES

Why, Oh, Why?

Why is the giraffe's neck so long?

There are really two reasons. Both of them have to do with food, since Mother Nature takes care that her family dines regularly.

First is the fact that the giraffe, who lives in the arid, open spaces of Africa, feeds almost exclusively on tree vegetation high above the reach of other animals.

And the second is that he needs his long neck to reach the ground for water! That seems silly until we understand that all creatures who travel great distances across open country must have very long legs, and therefore must be provided with some extraordinary device for getting their mouths to the ground.

Here's a chance to win a dollar. It's easy.

Write out the most interesting thing you learned last week—anyhow, anywhere—and enter the idea in our "Now I Know" Contest.

Send your idea to Parade of Youth, care of this newspaper.

The best three will be illustrated by our artists like the bits of knowledge shown above.

This week two girls and a boy were winners. They submitted their ideas and they clicked!

You can win, too. The contest is open to any boy or girl under the age of 18. It's simple. There are only two rules: (1) You must state your age. (2) You must give the source of your information.

Come on! The dollars are waiting! Hurry with your idea. And remember: The decision of the "Now I Know" Editor is final.

Mother Lode: This picture is an action romance starring Richard Dix. It is now being shot by RKO Radio in the California country where the first great gold strikes were made. It is a yarn of man's ambition for wealth, power and love, and should go like this:

Richard Dix.

Richard Dix and Andy Clyde discover a rich claim. Rescuing Leila Hyams and Jessie Ralph from road agents holding up a stage coach. Dix falls in love and forgets to register the claim.

Then when his trouble with Badman Olsen is at its height, the real badman, Stevens, enters intent not only on stealing the mine, but the girl as well.

At this point, Dix and Olsen become friends and combine forces to give Stevens a dose of his own medicine. In the meantime, Leila registers the claim. In the finale the villian is rubbed out, and the mine reverts to its real owners.

Star: Richard Dix was born in St. Paul, Minn., July 18, 1894, and educated at the St. Paul High School. Was a football and baseball player and member of the school dramatic club. Began his stage career in stock companies, tried pictures, clicked, and has been at it ever since. Loves dogs, lives on a ranch near Hollywood. Favorite sports are golf and tennis. Is married to his former secretary, Virginia Webster.

The General Thing.

The sentry was cautious and challenged the uniformed figure coming toward him.

"It's Gen. King," came the reply.

"What's the password? I can't pass you without it."

"I've forgotten, but you know me. Let me in."

"Not without the password, sir," insisted the sentry.

"Don't stand there arguing," a voice from the guard tent yelled, "shoot him!"

This is called a "thumb test" because you are supposed to cover the answers below with your thumb while trying to guess them.

The bag reveals a hidden word puzzle. Watch the letters in heavy type. "Mary will be a very good dancer," said her mother, "as she does not lose her step or poise." See? An animal (beaver) and a fish (porpoise) were concealed there.

Now, find two things that make houses comfortable:

1. After missing the car, Peter returned home. He ate ravenously before again venturing into the cold.

Out pop some riddles:

2. If a dog loses its tail, where can it get another one?

3. What is the worst thing for a thief to keep on hand?

4. Why is a fish peddler never generous?

5. What has more feet on it in winter than in summer?

Answers:

1. Car, Peter. He ate ravenously.

2. At any retail store.

3. Handcuffs.

4. Because his business makes him sell fish (selfish).

5. An ice-skating rink.

BOOK OF THE WEEK

"Three Sides of Agiochook." By Eric P. Kelly. $2. The Macmillan Co., New York. Illustrated by Le Roy Appleton.

At the beginning of the Revolutionary War, Dartmouth College lay directly in the path of the British and Indian attack from Canada.

To spare the school, Dr. Wheelock, the president, sends young Philip Brewster to Canada with a message for Joseph Brant, the great Indian leader.

But Philip, the son of an Indian mother killed in a massacre, finds his journey full of danger. His mission becomes known to the English and he is wounded, captured, escapes, is caught again and survives to deliver the message only because of the care and protection of the Indian Ayonba, who took the boy from his dead mother's arms in infancy and has watched over him ever since.

Author: Eric P. Kelly was born in Amesbury, Mass., March 16, 1884. Graduating from Dartmouth in 1906, he was a newspaper man for many years, and, in 1929, became professor of journalism at his alma mater. Since then he has delved deeply into the history of New England during the Revolution, and some of this he gives to us in "Three Sides of Agiochook." Among his other books are "The Trumpeter of Krakow," a story of fifteenth century Poland, "The Blacksmith of Vilno," Poland in 1832, and "The Golden Star of Halich," Poland at the time of the great Tartar raids.

This would have been a serious accident but for James Birk's quick thinking.

Struck by an automobile while riding on his bicycle, James grabbed hold of two horns on the front of the car and rode 15 feet before the driver stopped.

"I was in an alley and came riding out of a garage on my bicycle," he says, "when the car approached.

"Everything went blank. I grabbed onto the horns, where I clung until the driver, Eugene Metzel, a neighbor, stopped 15 feet away."

James' bike was crumpled. Luckily, all the injury he had to show for his strange ride was a bruised elbow,

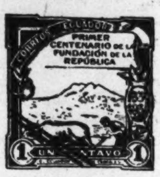
STAMPS and THEIR STRANGE STORIES

The Stamp—While celebrating her first century as a republic in 1930, Ecuador did not forget that her main source of revenue is from agriculture, as shown on this postage stamp by the farmer guiding his oxen across a field.



• • • •

The Place*—Ecuador has been a hotbed of revolution even for a South American Republic. It has had no less than 12 different constitutions, numberless uprisings, and several foreign wars. Its exact area is unknown. The most acceptable estimate is 118,500 square miles. The vast frontier east of the Andes, in the drainage basin of the Upper Amazon, is all unsurveyed and much of it unexplored. Brazil and Peru claim large portions of this frontier land.

• • • •

The People — About 200,000 white people own most of the valuable land. The others are Indians, Negroes and Mestizos (half-breeds). They labor on the cacao and coffee plantations, weave Panama hats, and gather rubber from the forest. They work for no more than the necessities of life, which for them are few. There are from 1,300,000 to 2,200,000 of these.

Junior Craves Lollypops—Why?

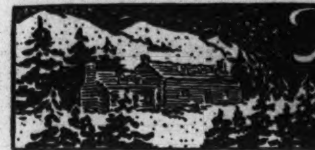
Why does Junior crave lollypops?

Science has officially acknowledged that he does, and advanced a reason.

The reason is "taste buds."

According to Prof. Leslie B. Arey, Northwestern University anatomist, taste buds carry the sense of taste from the mouth to the nervous system, and they decrease in number as Junior grows older.

Junior now craves lollypops because he has taste buds not only on his tongue but on his cheeks and tonsils as well. Prof. Avey says.



The MOUNTAIN LODGE MYSTERY

By DAVID WALES

Illustrated by Robert Pilgrim.

SYNOPSIS.

One Friday afternoon in early December, Tip Corbin and his sisters, Connie and Evelyn, start for their parents' lodge in the mountains, accompanied by Dave Masters and Madge Jones. Evelyn's husband, Doug, had expected to go with them, but at the last minute he finds he must work until Saturday, when he will follow them. A snowstorm descends as they leave the city. After three hours' bad driving through the blizzard, they finally reach their destination, tired and hungry. They go to the Wilton farmhouse, the only house anywhere near the lodge, to get the keys, and Mr. Wilton tells them he is worried about his son, Enoch, who is "not quite right in the head." Enoch has been hard to handle recently, and Tip decides not to tell the girls about it, for fear of frightening them. Before they sit down to eat, Mr. Wilton comes to the door, bringing milk and eggs, and Enoch is with him. The farm boy's strange conduct sends shivers up and down Tip's spine, and he locks the door as Mr. Wilton and Enoch leave. Then, just after the meal is finished, there is a frantic pounding on the door. Tip opens it, and a man carying a woman in his arms staggers across the threshold.

Installment III.

"CONNIE bring in that pot of coffee from the kitchen!" Evelyn's voice was sharp with anxiety as she leaned over the woman in the chair, and Connie turned hastily toward the kitchen, with Madge at her heels.

"Here—come over by the fire and get warm," said Evelyn quickly. She grasped the woman's arm and helped her to her feet. The man stepped up, and together they helped the woman across the room to a seat before the blazing open fire. She pulled off her gloves, opened her fur coat, and smiled wanly at the concerned faces around her.

"Oh, how good that fire feels!" she whispered. Her companion had thrown off his coat and Tip had hung it over a chair.

Tip, recovering his presence of mind somewhat, was studying the man closely. He was in early middle age, a short, rather stocky man with a heavy jaw and small eyes. Tip reserved judgment, but he wasn't greatly impressed with their unexpected visitors.

• • • •

"MY name is—ah—Cushman," the man announced sipping the coffee that Connie had poured for him and his companion, "and this is my wife. We left Bryanville this afternoon, and were cutting across the mountain from Route 27 to 281. The snow kept getting worse, until finally we stalled in a drift.

"There wasn't a house in sight anywhere, but I knew if we stayed in the car we'd freeze, and there was no other traffic along the road. So we started to walk, hoping to find a filling station or a farmhouse. It seemed as though hours passed, and we saw nothing but trees and snow.

"It's a lucky thing for us you were here," Mr. Cushman continued. "My wife finally became exhausted, and I had to carry her. And I was just about all in myself when I stumbled against the mail boxes at the end of your lane."

• • • •

MADGE had been roaming around the room. Now she approached the group by the fireplace, carrying a small black overnight bag which the woman had been clutching tightly in her arms when the man carried her in.

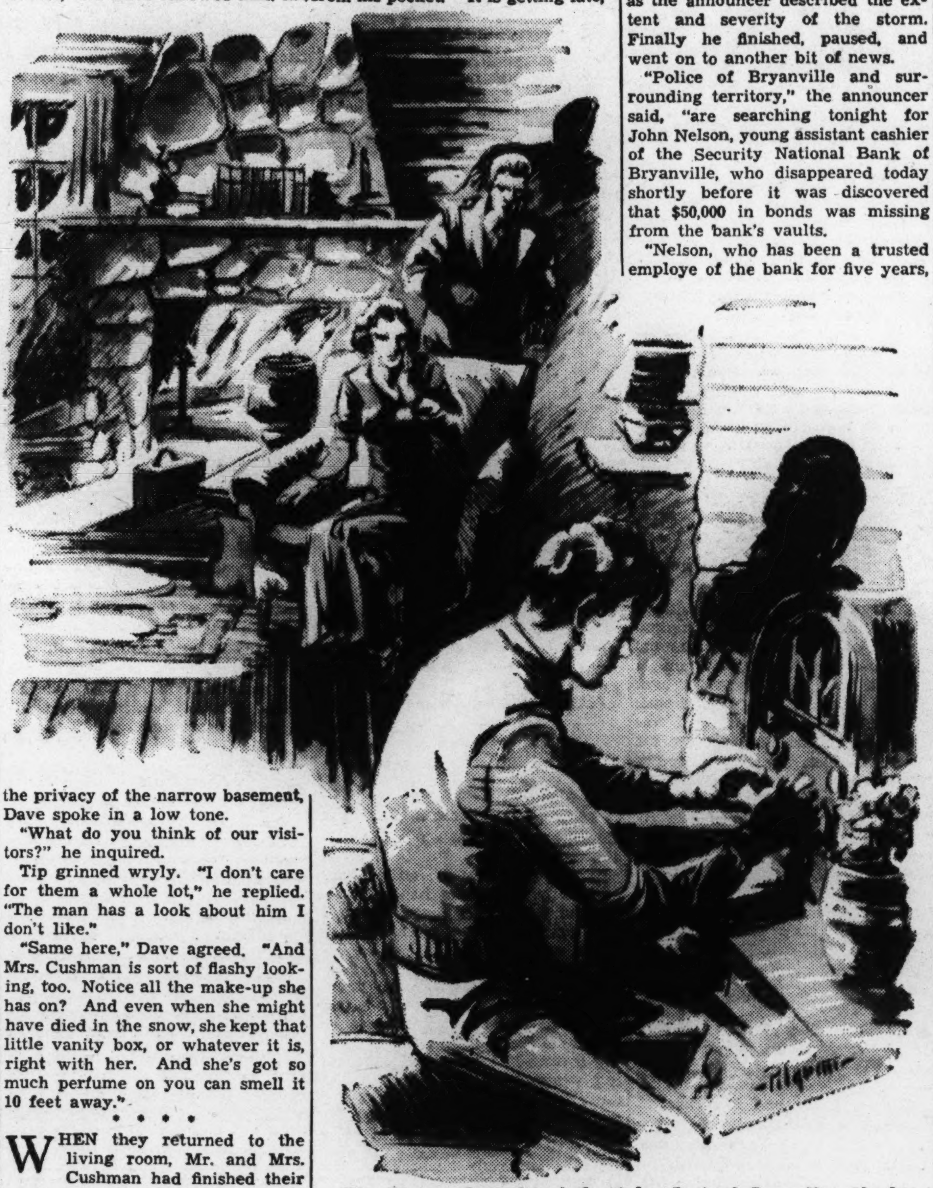
"Your bag is all wet," said Madge in a matter-of-fact-voice. "I'd better put it by the fire to dry out."

The woman, who had been leaning back in the chair with her eyes closed, suddenly started forward, and Tip saw a strange expression cross her face. She sat tense while Madge deposited the black bag on the floor in front of the fire. Mr. Cushman casually moved his position until he was standing right beside it.

• • • •

THEN Evelyn, with her usual thoughtfulness, inquired if Mr. and Mrs. Cushman had had anything to eat. When they replied that they had not, Evelyn and Connie hurried to the kitchen, and a few moments later the two storm victims were eating an impromptu meal at the table.

Tip took advantage of the opportunity to run down for a look at the furnace, and Dave followed him. In the privacy of the narrow basement, Dave spoke in a low tone.



The Woman Gasped and the Color Drained From Her Cheeks. The Man's Face Froze Into an Expressionless Mask.

"What do you think of our visitors?" he inquired.

Tip grinned wryly. "I don't care for them a whole lot," he replied. "The man has a look about him I don't like."

"Same here," Dave agreed. "And Mrs. Cushman is sort of flashy looking, too. Notice all the make-up she has on? And even when she might have died in the snow, she kept that little vanity box, or whatever it is, right with her. And she's got so much perfume on you can smell it 10 feet away."

• • • •

WHEN they returned to the living room, Mr. and Mrs. Cushman had finished their meal, and the man was pacing restlessly about the room. He immediately approached Tip and Dave.

"Do you suppose you two fellows could help me dig the car out of that drift?" he said. "I'll pay you well. I'm very anxious to get started again."

Tip's eyes widened in surprise. "You don't mean you're thinking of going on over the mountain tonight?" he exclaimed.

"Absolutely," the man replied emphatically. "I'm in a hurry, and I certainly don't intend to impose on you folks by staying here tonight."

Tip walked to the window. The wind was raging around the corners of the lodge, and the white flakes were piling high against the panes. He shook his head.

• • • •

"IT'S impossible, Mr. Cushman," he said in a decided tone. "Even if we got you out of the drift you're in, you'd never make it down to route 281 in this storm. It was bad enough when I came over that road several hours ago. By now it must be simply impassable."

Mr. Cushman shot him an annoyed look, then turned and looked questioningly at his wife. She was sitting by the fire, obviously restless and ill at ease. The black bag was right at her feet.

Connie and Evelyn had been clearing the table, but now Evelyn stepped forward.

"You'll really have to spend the night here, and you're perfectly welcome," she said cordially. "We have lots of room, and it's simply out of the question to go on tonight. In the morning, Tip and Dave will be glad to help you get your car started."

Mr. Cushman jerked his watch from his pocket. "It is getting late," he said. Then he added, with very poor grace, "Well, if we must stay, we must! But don't you have a telephone? Perhaps we could call a garage somewhere and get towed out of here."

• • • •

TIP shook his head. "There's no telephone service up here, and if there were, the wires would be down by now. We'll be lucky if the electricity doesn't fail us before the night's over."

Mr. Cushman uttered a grunt of disgust, which was followed by an embarrassing silence. Madge went out to the kitchen to help Connie with the dishes, while Evelyn hurried into a bedroom to prepare it for Mr. and Mrs. Cushman. She had decided to give them one of the bedrooms on the first floor. Tip and Dave would occupy the other, while the girls would take the rooms upstairs.

Mr. Cushman continued his restless pacing in front of the fireplace, while his wife sat silently in a chair nearby. Tip was annoyed by the man's attitude, and in an effort to hide his displeasure, he walked over to the little radio which stood on a table, and turned it on.

• • • •

AN orchestra was playing, but it stopped almost immediately. Then came the station announcement, and a man began to broadcast news flashes. Tip was about to turn the dials in search of other music, when the news announcer mentioned the unseasonable blizzard that was paralyzing traffic in the region.

Mr. and Mrs. Cushman had turned to listen, and their faces were intent as the announcer described the extent and severity of the storm. Finally he finished, paused, and went on to another bit of news.

"Police of Bryanville and surrounding territory," the announcer said, "are searching tonight for John Nelson, young assistant cashier of the Security National Bank of Bryanville, who disappeared today shortly before it was discovered that $50,000 in bonds was missing from the bank's vaults.

"Nelson, who has been a trusted employe of the bank for five years, aroused the suspicions of bank officials by his nervous manner during the past few days. A check of the bank's securities revealed the loss. Nelson is thought to have left Bryanville driving a small car, and police expected to apprehend him quickly because of the difficulty of traveling in the storm that is raging tonight."

Tip had pricked up his ears at the mention of Bryanville, and he shot a quick look at Mr. and Mrs. Cushman. He heard the woman gasp, and the color drained from her cheeks. The man's face froze into an expressionless mask.

• • • •

TIP looked away immediately, but his mind was racing. A moment later he tuned the radio to another station, and as he did, Mr. Cushman stepped forward.

"I think we'll go to bed now, if your sister has the room ready," he said to Tip. "My wife is very tired."

Mrs. Cushman, at a glance from her husband, quickly got to her feet, and picked up the black bag. Together they moved across the room to the little hall which led to the two bedrooms, while Tip and Dave stared after them.

"Well!" exclaimed Dave in a low voice as they passed out of earshot, "what got into them all of a sudden?"

Tip shot him a warning look, and tuned the radio a little higher. A few seconds later Evelyn appeared, and Madge and Connie came in from the kitchen. They all gathered before the fireplace, welcoming a chance to discuss the situation presented by the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Cushman. Tip quickly described their visitors' reaction to the announcement over the radio.

• • • •

"I'LL bet he's the missing man!" cried Connie, her eyes wide.

Tip shook his head slowly. "I doubt it," he said. "The news flash said this John Nelson was young, while Mr. Cushman would be described as middle-aged. And nothing was said about a woman's being with him. But there is certainly something queer about our guests!"

"Mr. Cushman certainly showed little appreciation for our offer to put them up for the night," said Evelyn.

"I didn't like that," said Dave.

The discussion continued for some time, and, while they all agreed that Mr. and Mrs. Cushman weren't very desirable companions, they got no further than that. Finally Evelyn, noticing the lateness of the hour, insisted that they all go to bed. Tip went down and banked the fire for the night, and then he and Dave retired to the ground-floor bedroom, next to that occupied by the Cushmans. The girls had already gone upstairs.

• • • •

IN a few moments all lights were out and the lodge was quiet, save for the howling of the storm outside.

It was perhaps an hour later that Tip awoke suddenly with an uneasy feeling. Lying in bed in the darkness, he listened to the clamor of the wind in the trees outside, wondering what had awakened him. Then abruptly he sat up in bed, alert in every muscle. Someone was pounding on the front door.

He hesitated only a moment, then leaped out of bed and quickly pulled on his clothes. He thought of waking Dave, decided not to and tiptoed out to the living room.

His finger found the light switch, but when he pressed it nothing happened. "Electricity's gone," he murmured to himself. There was a flashlight on the living room table, so he got that and crossed the room toward the door. The pounding there still continued.

• • • •

AT THE door he paused while a strange sense of foreboding came over him. He almost decided not to open the door. But if he didn't, and the pounding continued, the girls would be aroused, and he didn't want them to be alarmed.

Slowly he drew back the bolt, braced his body against the wind, and opened the door just a crack, flashing the light through the opening. And then a shock, not of surprise, but of subconscious fears suddenly realized, came over him. The rays of the flashlight were playing on the crooked, distorted face of Enoch Wilton.

"Hi, Tip, hi Tip, hi Tip, hi Tip!" The blood-chilling chant came in a singsong from Enoch's throat. He placed his heavy weight against the door. "I came to see you. I'm coming in."

"No Enoch!" Tip tried to make his voice firm, but his heart was pounding. "We're all in bed. Come back in the morning."

Enoch Wilton uttered an angry snarl. With one mighty push he forced the door open, then leaped furiously on Tip and bore him to the floor.

Suggestions.

Parade: Your paper is very helpful and interesting. Every Monday we set aside a period for current events at school and many of the pupils use the paper. Why not give the addresses of boys and girls in the news so if they do things we're interested in we can write them? And make the "Grab Bag" bigger. It's fun to figure out puzzles and riddles. Can't you also have a cross-word puzzle?

HELEN MILLS.
120 F street southeast,
Washington, D. C.

Street addresses are now given wherever possible in news stories. Glad you like the "Grab Bag." How many other readers would like to see a cross-word puzzle weekly?—Ed.

Neighbor's Size.

Parade: Is Canada larger than the United States?

L. E. SNYDER.
R. F. D. No. 6,
Norwich, Conn.

Yes, by 657,674 square miles of land and water. The Dominion of Canada consists of 3,457,484 square miles of land, 226,979 of water, or a total of 3,684,463. The United States contains 2,973,776 square miles of land; 53,013 of water; total, 3,026,789. Even if we included Alaska (586,400 square miles), our northern neighbor would still have a slight edge.—Ed.

He does. Usually, however, he occupies a chauffeur-driven motor car. At his Hyde Park estate, as well as in Warm Springs, Ga., he sometimes uses a special hand gear-shift car, which he drives himself. —Ed.

Diamonds.

Parade: Does South Africa or Brazil produce the largest amount of diamonds? And are diamonds found anywhere in the United States? FRANCENIA WARREN.
Columbia, S. C.

The diamond mines at Kimberley, South Africa, furnish nearly 90 per cent of the world's supply. Brazil rates second, and while the United States does not rank as a producer, diamonds have been found in Arkansas. Incidentally, the South African fields owe their discovery to a small boy. Back in 1867 a hunter noticed the youngster playing with an extraordinarily brilliant stone. It later turned out to be a diamond, weighing 21¼ carats, and was sold in the rough for $2,500. The first African diamonds were found along streams and gravel beds, but primary deposits beneath the surface were discovered three years later.—Ed.

Boy Pedals 3,100 Miles In 30 Days

Bicycle Takes Charley Across Country in Record Time.

From coast to coast—a distance of 3,100 miles, Charles R. Klotz, 20, of Hollister, Calif., traveled across the country on a bicycle in 30 days.

The journey was the culmination of years of dreaming and planning. Gearing up his bicycle, strapping a bed roll and two knapsacks over the rear wheel, Charley headed east.

Of his start, he says: " I was given an official send-off by the chief of police, the mayor and a host of city officials. I was escorted through the city by the police department, my sponsoring club and more than a dozen cyclists for over 10 miles. Three of the cyclists rode with me the balance of that day."

Charles Klotz and His Bike.

From Hollister, Charley's itinerary included Sacramento, Calif.; Reno, Nev.; Salt Lake City, Utah; through southern Wyoming, Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, New Jersey and finally to New York City.

Over the desert Charley pedaled at night and slept during the day. He slept in barns at ranch or farm houses. He pedaled even over hills and mountains and walked only a few miles of the distance.

Staying a few weeks with friends in New York, Charley bought a motorcycle and went home via Texas and the southern route.

Hands, Faces and Names.

The biggest bells in England have personal names. Here are the names of the seven largest, with their locations: "Big Ben," Westminster Palace; "Great Paul," St. Paul's Cathedral; "Great Peter," Yorkminster; "Little John," Nottingham; "Tom," Christ Church, Oxford; "Tom," Lincoln Cathedral, and "Great George," Bristol University.

Ohioan Has Been Raised in Saddle

Babette Lee Fisher, 15, 128 North Cassady road, Columbus, Ohio, has almost been brought up in the saddle.

"When I was 3," she writes, "my parents bought me a hobby horse, then at 5, I had a pony. Later, I rode every opportunity I had.

"To me, each horse has an individuality and personality, just like a human, and I have my room filled with horse pictures."

Babette has hurdled mounts as high as 5 feet and in spite of having several bad spills and once being dragged 25 feet through the mud, she says that can't spoil her great love for all kinds of horseflesh from thoroughbreds to plow horses.

Is Heralded As Feminine Bobby Jones

Atlantan Practices Three Days a Week to Take Titles.

Fifteen-year-old Dorothy Kirby, of 1050 Piedmont avenue, Atlanta, Ga., is hailed as a feminine Bobby Jones.

Here are some of the reasons: She comes from Bobby Jones' home town and she has twice been Georgia State champ and a contender for the national crown while still in her 'teens!

Takes Up Game at 11.

"I was 11 years old when I first took up golf," writes Dorothy. "During vacation I practice regularly at least three days a week and as often as possible during school months."

With only two years' experience, Dorothy won the Women's State championship in 1933.

Last year, she entered the national tournament instead of the State, but this year kept in home territory and again won the State title.

"It is a great feeling to be a champion," says Dorothy, "for it gives you the satisfaction of knowing that you are on the right road to bigger and better things."

Likes Other Sports.

In winning the State title this year, she blazed around the course in 74, adding new laurels to her fame. No other woman has ever made such a low score on that course.

When Dorothy is not winning titles or practicing on the links, she can usually be found at a baseball game. Baseball and horseback riding are the two sports she likes next to golf.

'Rice Bowl' Game Looms As Japs Adopt Football

It looks very much as if football will soon boast of a "rice bowl" game in addition to the famous annual Rose Bowl contest.

For Japanese youths are taking to the gridiron game. Five of Nippon's universities now boast teams that are learning to kick, pass, and block under the coaching of United States Army officers.

It didn't take the Japs long to produce baseball teams of stellar caliber, and probably it'll be only a short time before an American eleven is invited to Tokio for an international encounter.

More Bull.

The boy was telling about how a bull chased him in the pasture. "There was one tree in the middle of the field and I jumped for the lowest branch. It was about 15 feet from the ground."

Earning His Thanks.

Jimmy, visiting a neighbor, was given a piece of bread and said, "Thank you."

"You're welcome, Jimmy," was the reply, "I like to hear little boys say, 'Thank you'."

Something Fishy.

Passer-by: What are you fishing for?

Passer-by: Sharks? You know there are no sharks here.

Boy: Sure. But there are no fish, either, so I'd just as soon not catch sharks as not catch fish.

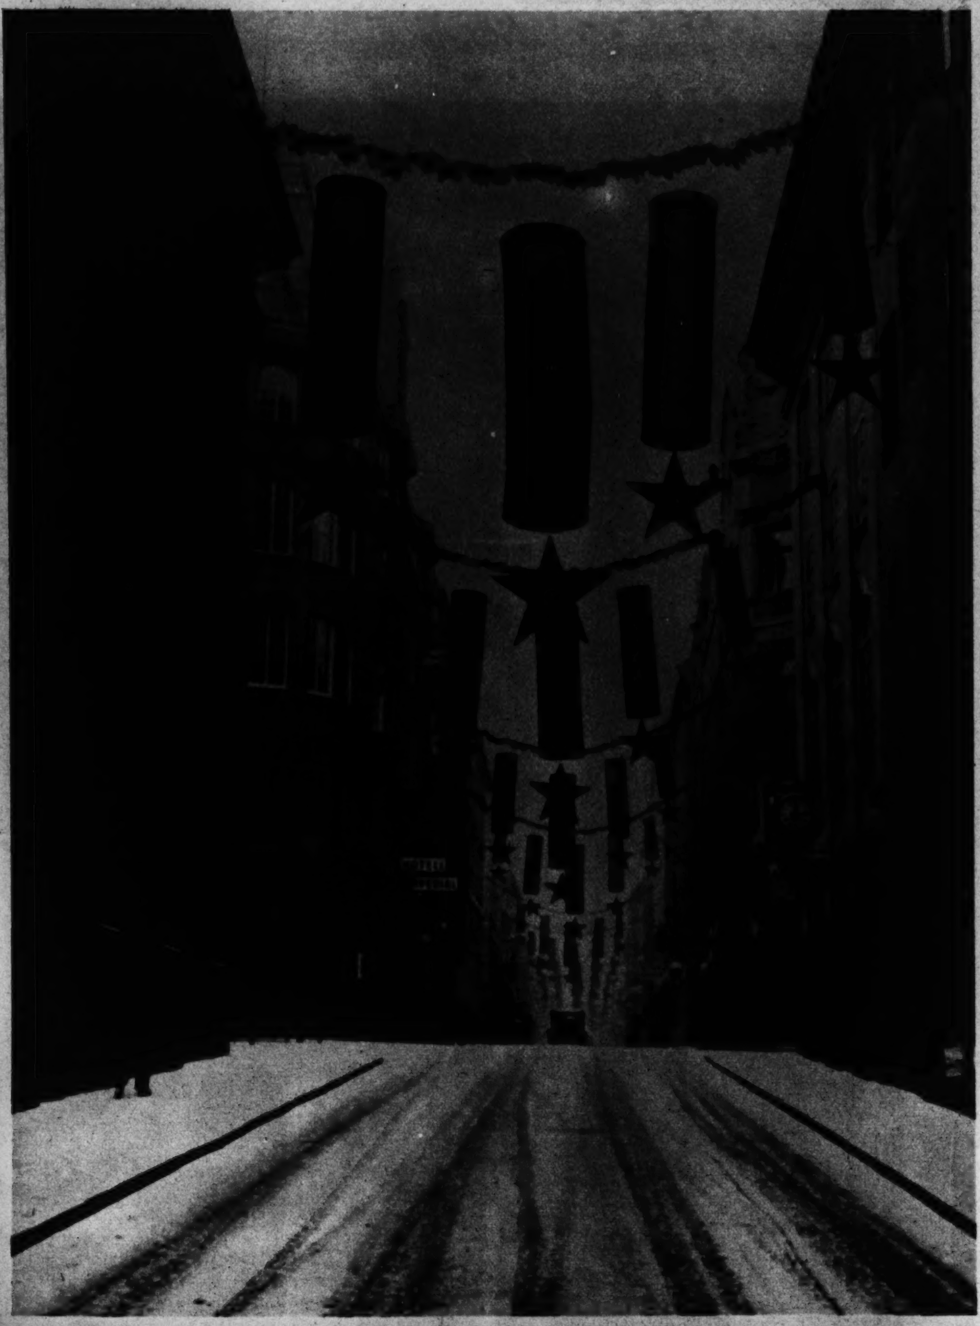
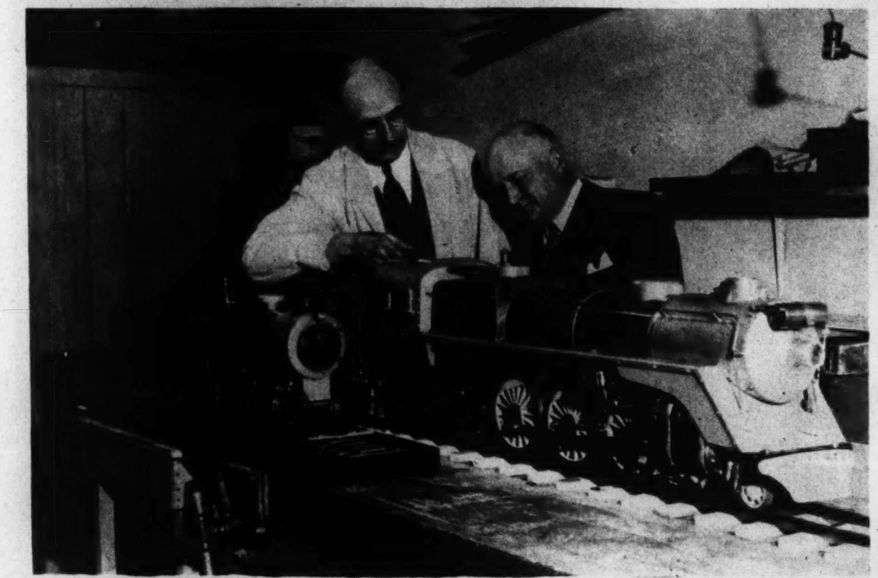
Christmas Preparations the World Around

ST. NICK WILL SOON be repeating this visit to Brussels' Children's Hospital.



STOCKHOLM is looking forward to this sort of thing as Christmas approaches. Shopkeepers chip in to finance these street festoons in Sweden's chilly capital.



ANY YOUNGSTER'S CHRISTMAS DREAM: But this engine, which will pull eight persons, was built for fun by Peter J. Niemann. It cost him 1,700 hours work. He's explaining it to R. P. Boylan, president of Chicago's Board of Trade.

MONTE CARLO ISN'T ALL GAMBLING. This scene of devout worshipers going to midnight mass is an annual part of the celebration of Christmas in the little principality.

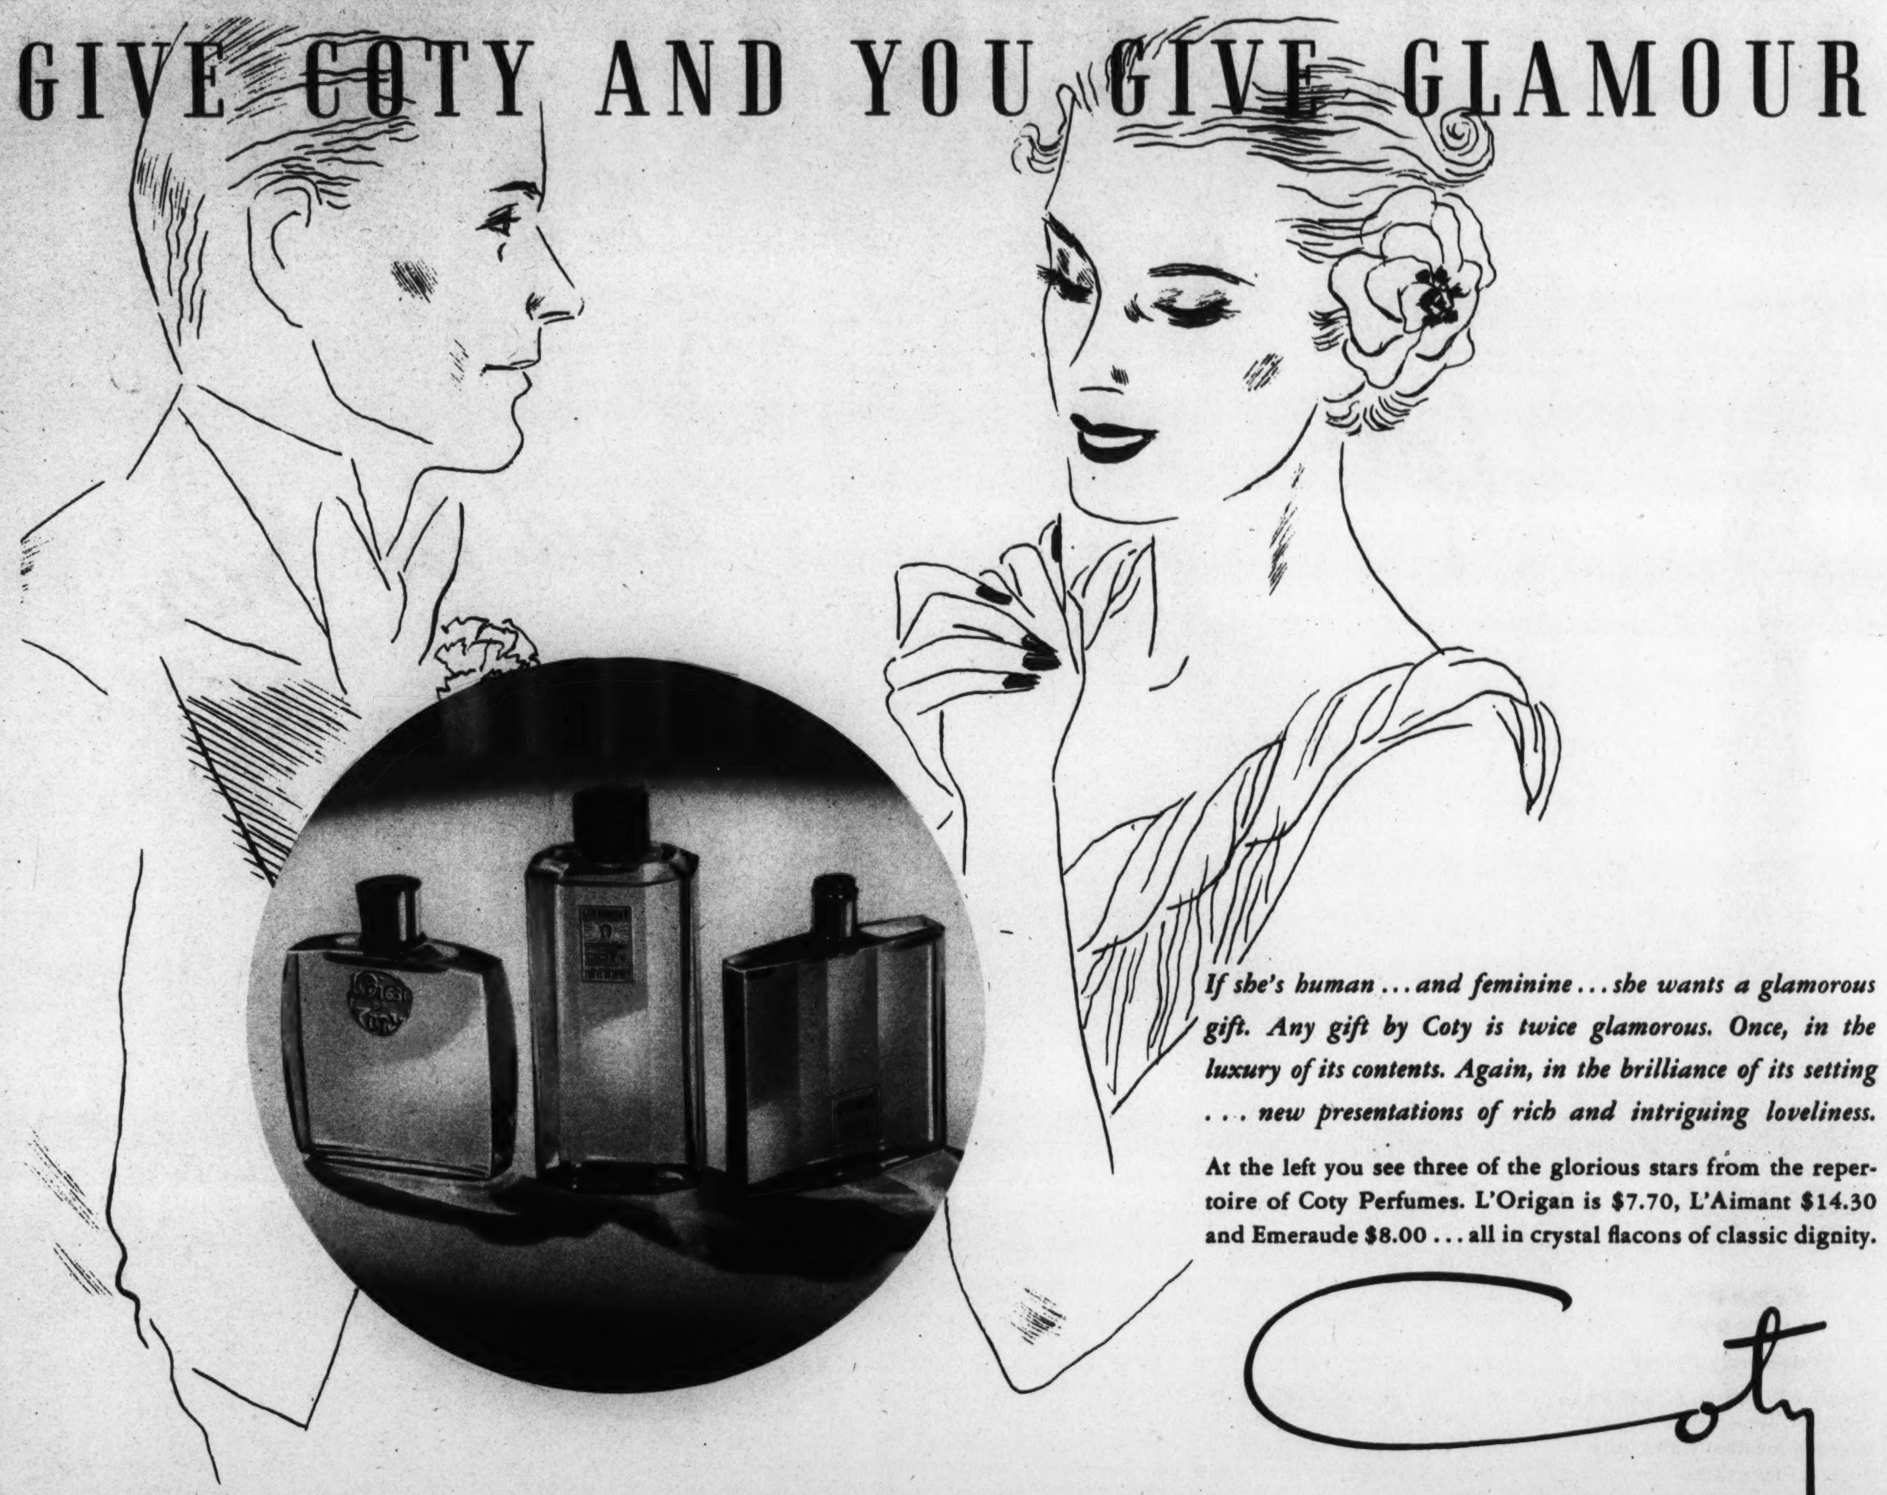
GIVE COTY AND YOU GIVE GLAMOUR



If she's human . . . and feminine . . . she wants a glamorous gift. Any gift by Coty is twice glamorous. Once, in the luxury of its contents. Again, in the brilliance of its setting . . . new presentations of rich and intriguing loveliness.

At the left you see three of the glorious stars from the repertoire of Coty Perfumes. L'Origan is $7.70, L'Aimant $14.30 and Emeraude $8.00 . . . all in crystal flacons of classic dignity.

Coty

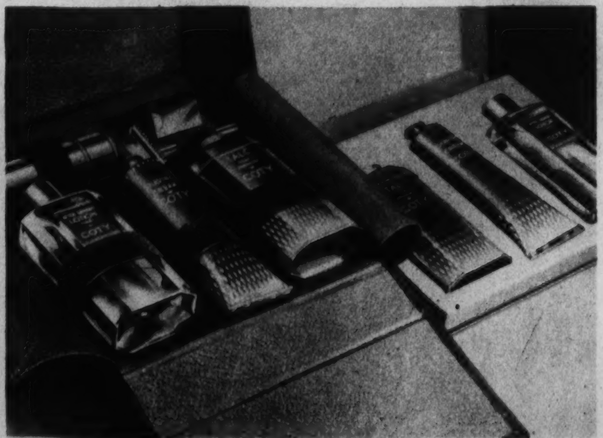
$2.25 Here are two of the Coty Compact Sets. Left . . . A slim, single compact and a generous crystal flacon of Toilet Water. Right . . . Something tricky, a purse ensemble. A Compact, a "Continentale" Lipstick and a little metal purse container holding a bottle of Coty Perfume. All three have a matching gold tone finish, and color inlays. Presented in a charming, lid-cover treasure box. $4

$5 Partners in Glamour! A new Coty idea! "Pour l'occasion" give not one, but two or more bottles of perfume—ensembled in shimmering silver-and-blue cases. Odeurs include the classics of the perfume world, the famous favorites . . . L'Aimant, L'Origan, Emeraude, "Paris," Chypre, Styx. You may choose quite a few combinations—up to a sextette—of which we have illustrated just two. $3.50

$3.25 Coty created a cyclone and discovered a new kind of Face Powder, "Air Spun" . . . smoother and softer, with warmer living shades . . . Now, for Christmas, this new complexion magician has been packaged with other Coty preparations. Left . . . with your favorite Coty Perfume. Right . . . a box for the dressing table, in which Coty "Air Spun" and Toilet Water stand "at attention." $2.25

$10 Left . . . Dark, mysterious A Suma, the new European perfume sensation in a glass sphere that rests in splendor on an ebony pedestal. Center...Fernery at Twilight, a cool $20 and woodsy odeur. Right . . . A bottle of Coty's L'Aimant in its new, delicate flacon with peacock tracery. This is the $3.75 size. Other sizes $1 (think of it!) and $2. $3.75

$6.75 Now we come to something regal in gifts! One of the Coty DeLuxe Sets containing Coty Perfume, Lipstick, Compact, Toilet Water, "Air Spun" Powder...all in a silk-lined case. Right . . . a new Coty Bath Set, its design suggesting Neptune's realm, and containing the new Coty Eau de Cologne Parfumée and Coty Dusting Powder. A "big impression" gift . . . for very little! $2.75



$5 Men get two kinds of gifts: (A) the kind they like; (B) the kind they're polite about. Coty Men's Sets are distinctly "A". Left . . . a new Leather Kit with all the Coty preparations . . . Shaving Cream, stimulating Lotion, Men's Talc . . . plus a fine Shaving Brush, an excellent Razor and Blade Holder. P. S. It's leather—not imitation! Right . . . a masculine, gun-metal box containing Coty Shaving Cream, Lotion and Talc. $2

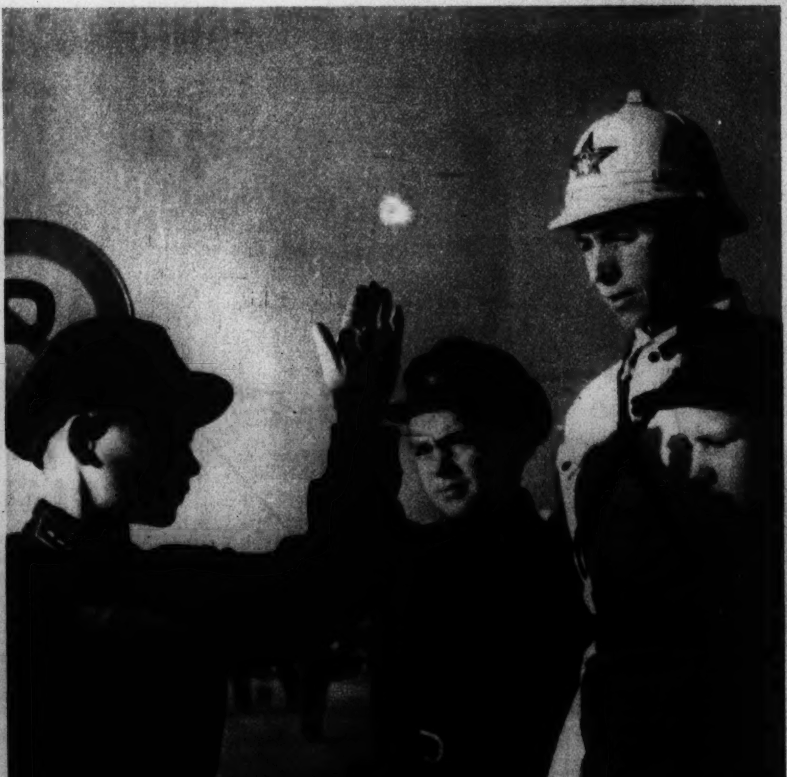
ON MOSCOW'S CHILDREN'S BOULEVARD. Above, cyclists on driveway reserved for youngsters. Left, a traffic cop chides a young autoist and then gives him a driving lesson. Right, with white gloves and whistle the youngster directs the vehicular flow like an old-timer. Note the cars he has brought to a stop behind him. Below, members of the children's squad receiving instructions from an officer. They enforce all ordinances on their boulevard. Sovfotos.



A gift certain to be acclaimed with delight is the sterling silver coffee service shown here. Hand chased and finished with characteristic Stieff perfection, this set embodies the very spirit and essence of hospitality.

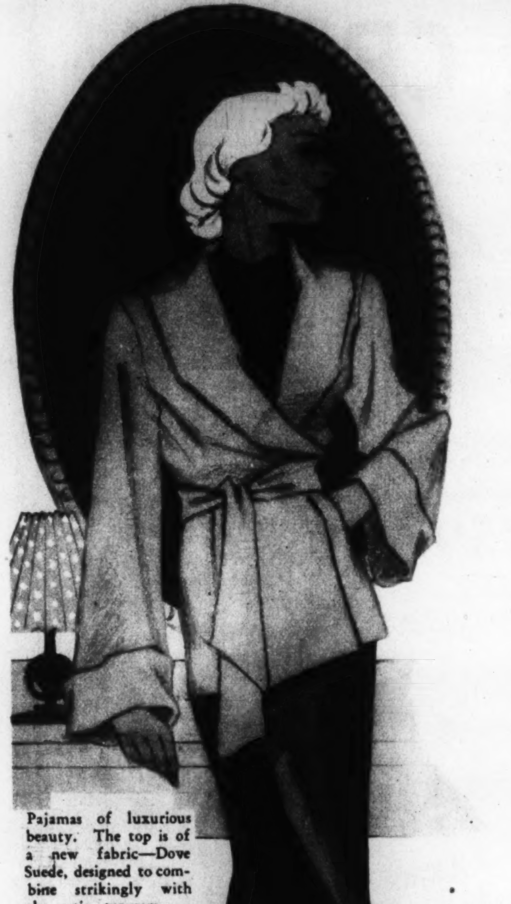
'TIL CHRISTMAS

A Raleigh Label Enhances the Gift!

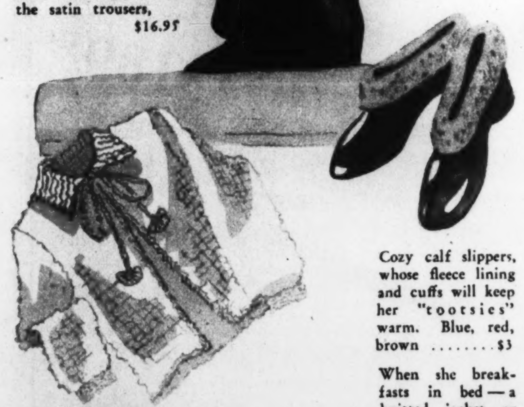
GIVE QUALITY!

*They'll never forget it * * * You'll never regret it!*

IT IS an old saying that the spirit of giving is what counts . . . and not the gift. Which is all very true, but it is the wise gift-giver who realizes that the spirit of Christmas is reflected in the character of the gift . . . And that it is the gift of QUALITY—though not necessarily expensive—which inspires the most joy . . . in the giving as well as in the receiving.

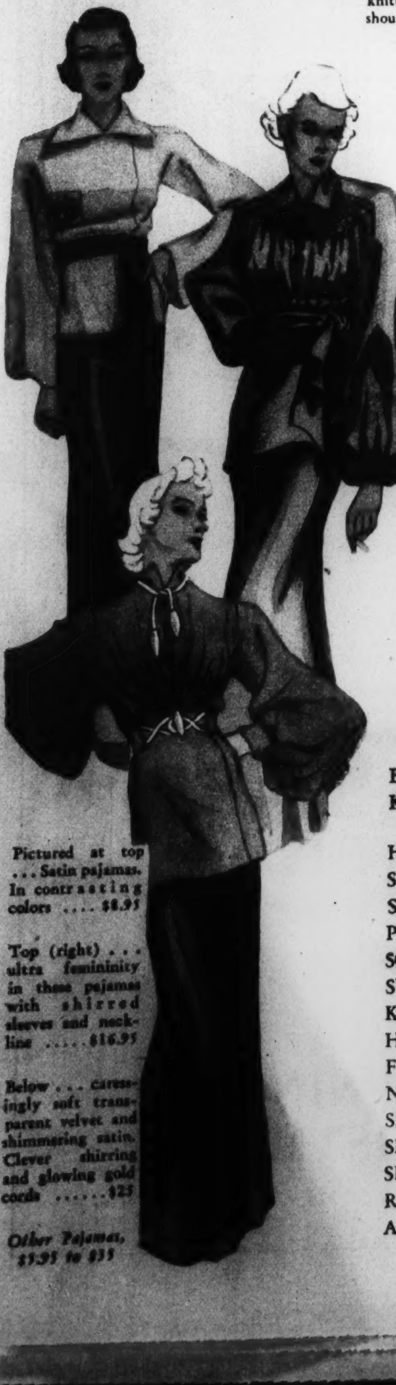


Pajamas of luxurious beauty. The top is of a new fabric—Dove Suede, designed to combine strikingly with the satin trousers, $16.95



Cozy calf slippers, whose fleece lining and cuffs will keep her "tootsies" warm. Blue, red, brown $3

When she breakfasts in bed — a knitted jacket or shoulderettes, $1.95 to $3.95



Pictured at top . . . Satin pajamas. In contrasting colors $8.95

Top (right) . . . ultra femininity in these pajamas with shirred sleeves and neckline $16.95

Below . . . caressingly soft transparent velvet and shimmering satin. Clever shirring and glowing gold cords $25

"America's first gift of Art to the world"

from the speech of Calvin Coolidge at the Jonas Chickering Celebration

It was here that Jonas Chickering made his first piano in 1823.

Chickering

Imperial Cross of the Legion of Honor The highest award ever bestowed on a piano manufacturer.

AND now the Chickering is celebrating its Hundred and Twelfth Anniversary with accumulated honors unparalleled in the history of piano-making.

A greater name than ever—greater beauty than ever

Never has its noble tone been so luscious—never have its craftsmen wrought greater beauty into its case designs. A limited number of these glorious pianos—for the knowing ones—priced for this Hundred and Twelfth Celebration at

$775

The Lowest price in many years!

Remember that only a few years back this same Chickering could not be obtained for less than $1375. Its present price is hardly more than what you would pay for an ordinary Grand, is possible because of the ever increasing demand for this honored piano and its wider distribution through the leading music houses everywhere.

Its Golden Tone Long An Ideal

The lovely voice of the Chickering has long been an ideal. In an older day it mingled with the voice of Jenny Lind. It took its part in "The Children's Hour" as Longfellow gathered "sweet Alice with golden hair" and his other little ones about him. It was the intimate solace of the widowed Victoria in her retreat at Osborne House on the Isle of Wight. It thundered and sang at the bidding of the immortal Liszt. It responded to the touch of Sir Arthur Sullivan as he played "The Lost Chord." Gounod awoke it into melody with the music of "Faust." The "Woodland Sketches" and the "New England Idyls" and other works of MacDowell were first heard on the Chickering in the studio of America's most gifted composer. De Pachmann wove spells of enchantment with his velvet touch upon its keyboard, and in our own day the great artists of the concert stage have found it singing still, with even greater beauty than ever before.

DAD FLICK
I'M GOING TO ASK DAD FLICK FOR A JOB. I HAVE TO MAKE SOME MONEY TO BUY GRAN'MA A CHRISTMAS PRESENT.
HELLO, MISTER FLICK. COULD I TALK TO YOU A MINUTE?
SURE, DENNIE, GO AHEAD. BUSINESS IS SORT OF SLOW RIGHT NOW.
WELL, THAT'S WHAT I WANT TO SEE YOU ABOUT. I'D LIKE TO WORK FOR YOU—
WORK FOR ME? WHAT COULD YOU DO?
YOU NEED SOMEONE OUT IN FRONT TO LOOK AFTER YOUR POPCORN STAND. YOU'RE LOSIN' A LOT OF BUSINESS—MAYBE I AM, BUT YOU'RE TOO SMALL FOR THE JOB.
I COULD KEEP THOSE ROUGH BOYS FROM STEALIN' YOUR POPCORN—
YOU TOLD OFFICER FINN THEY DO IT ALL THE TIME.
BUT THEY'RE ALL BIGGER THAN YOU ARE. YOU COULDN'T STOP THEM.
LOOK, HERE THEY COME NOW!
DOGGONE 'EM. I'LL BREAK THEIR NECKS!!

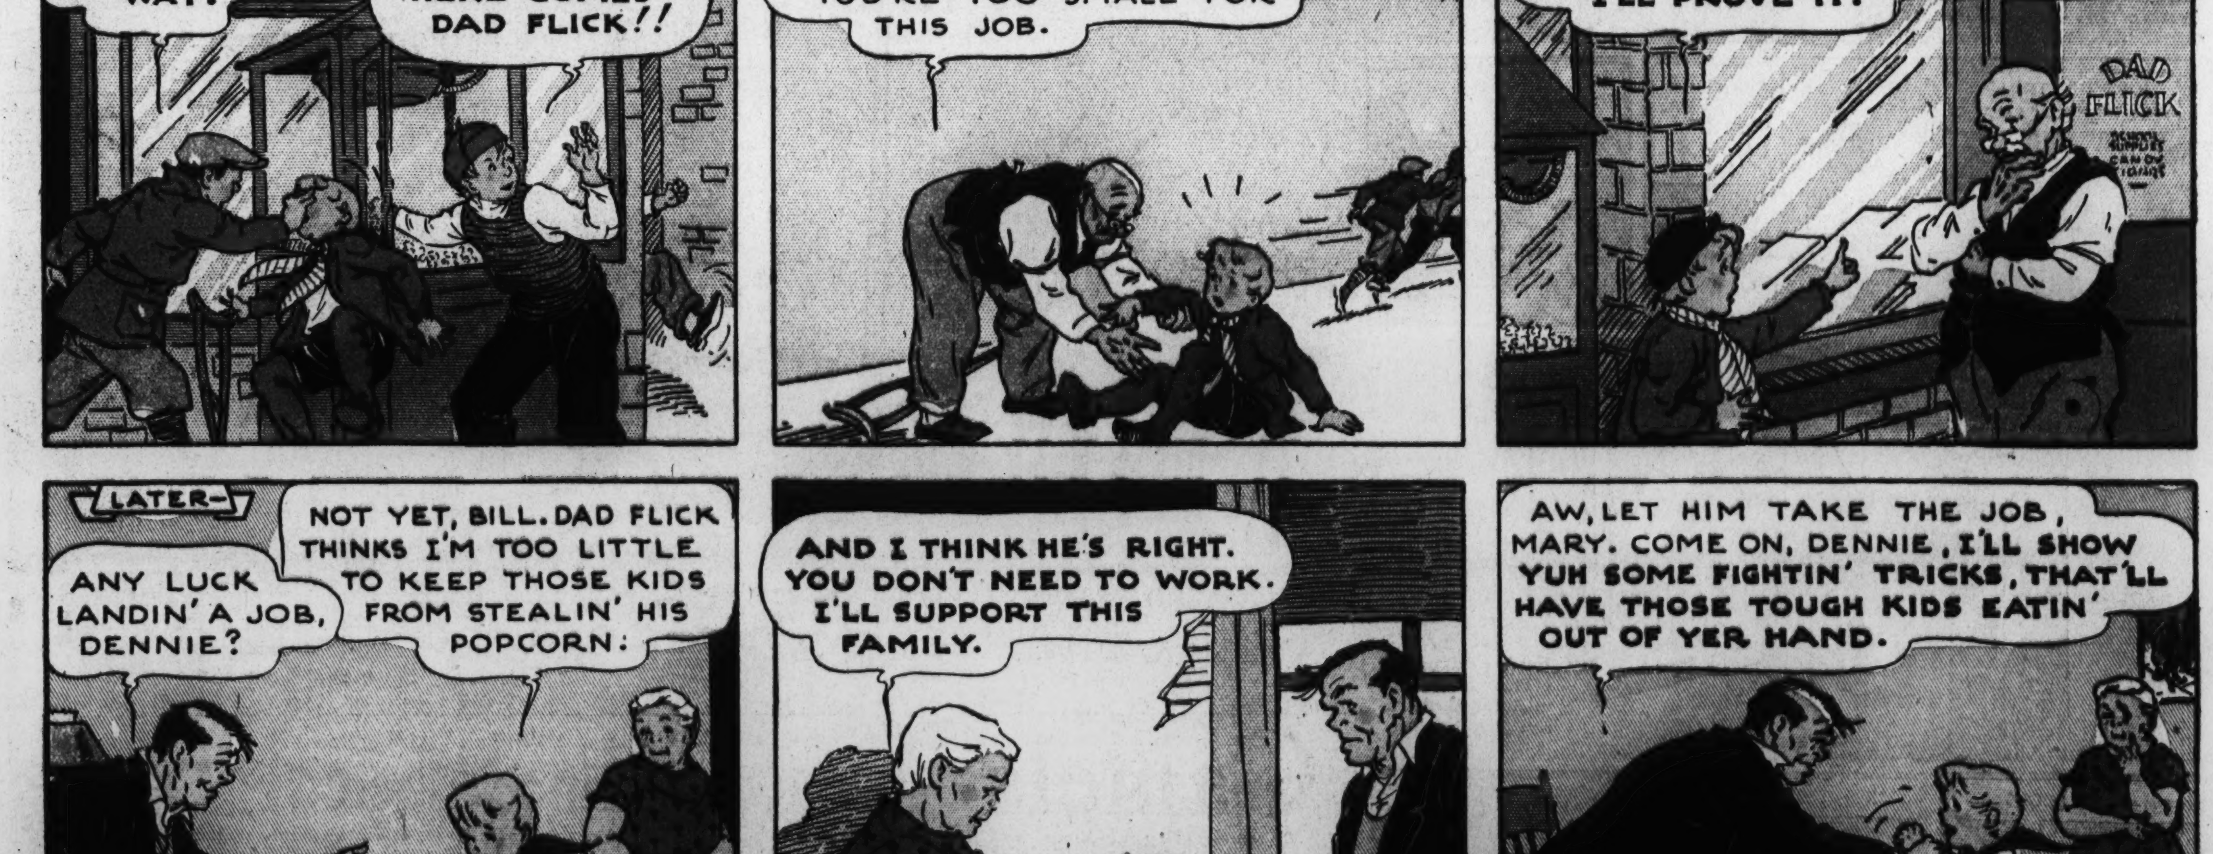
QUIT SHOVIN' ME. GET OUT OF MY WAY.
BEAT IT! HERE COMES DAD FLICK!!
ARE YOU HURT, DENNIE? NO? SEE, WHAT DID I TELL YOU? YOU'RE TOO SMALL FOR THIS JOB.
HONEST I'M NOT, MISTER FLICK. JUST GIVE ME A CHANCE, AND I'LL PROVE IT.
DAD FLICK



LATER—
ANY LUCK LANDIN' A JOB, DENNIE?
NOT YET, BILL. DAD FLICK THINKS I'M TOO LITTLE TO KEEP THOSE KIDS FROM STEALIN' HIS POPCORN.
AND I THINK HE'S RIGHT. YOU DON'T NEED TO WORK. I'LL SUPPORT THIS FAMILY.
AW, LET HIM TAKE THE JOB, MARY. COME ON, DENNIE, I'LL SHOW YUH SOME FIGHTIN' TRICKS, THAT'LL HAVE THOSE TOUGH KIDS EATIN' OUT OF YER HAND.

SEASON'S GREETINGS

FROM

R·J·REYNOLDS TOBACCO COMPANY

MAKERS OF CAMEL CIGARETTES AND PRINCE ALBERT SMOKING TOBACCO

Camels

Of course you'll give cigarettes for Christmas. They're such an acceptable gift — such an easy solution of your problem. And Camels fill the bill so perfectly. They're made from finer, MORE EXPENSIVE TOBACCOS than any other popular brand. They are the accepted cigarette of the social, business, and athletic worlds. Their finer tobaccos give that pleasant "lift" — that sense of well-being so appropriate to the spirit of Christmas.

Prince Albert

Fine tobacco for Christmas. For more than a quarter of a century, the mellow fragrance of Prince Albert has been as much a part of Christmas as mistletoe and holly. So to the pipe smokers on your Christmas list give Prince Albert, "The National Joy Smoke." It's the welcome gift. For more men choose Prince Albert for themselves than any other pipe tobacco. Let every pipeful of Prince Albert repeat "Merry Christmas" for you.

OH OH! MY EX-CHUM NEXTDOOR MUST HAVE GOT STARTED ON PIGS FEET AGAIN. HERE'S THE STOMACH SPECIALIST WHO WORKED ON HIM LAST SUMMER.
HE'S ONLY A NEIGHBOR, BUT IN SICKNESS WE SHOULD OVERLOOK DETAILS.
ALSO, I MAY GET A LITTLE ADVICE ON MY OWN DYSPEPSIA, TALKING TO HOMER'S DOCTOR.
HE GOT PAST MY DOOR. WELL I STILL CAN CATCH HIM BEFORE HE STARTS ANOTHER TUSSLE WITH HOMER.
AH DOC! I'M GEORGE BUNGLE. REMEMBER? I HELPED YOU HOLD HOMER THE NIGHT HE TRIED TO JUMP OUT A WINDOW OVER EATING PIGS FEET AND ICE CREAM.
BUNGLE? OH YES. AH, I WONDER WHY THIS HOMER CHAP DOESN'T ANSWER THE BELL?
I'M POSITIVE HE'S HOME. LET ME AT THAT BELL.
AHEM! HE DOESN'T SEEM TO BE....
YOU RING WHILE I HAMMER ON THE DOOR. NO ANSWER. H-MM! WE'LL HAVE TO GET IN THERE, DOC.
BE CAREFUL... MY EARS.. YOU'RE KICKING THEM LOOSE.
HIGHER, DOC. ONCE MORE.
JUST A SECOND, DOC. THIS DOOR IS OPENING NOW....
JUST FOLLOW ME, DOC. I DON'T KNOW THIS HOUSE AS WELL AS I SHOULD, BUT.... AH THERE'S HOMER NOW.
YES, IT'S HIM! HOMER! HOMER! DOC, I'M AFRAID WE'RE TOO LATE.
NO, I SEE HIM MOVING. HE'S GOING TO GET UP.
OH HELLO DOC. I WAS ASLEEP AND DIDN'T HEAR YOU RINGING THAT DOORBELL SO LONG.
AH, I MERELY DROPPED IN, SIR, TO TALK ABOUT THAT BILL YOU OWE ME.
A BILL?
YES, I'VE WRITTEN SO OFTEN AND...
HOW HIGH IS YOUR BILL? WELL ANYHOW, I'LL PAY YOU SOMETHING. A LITTLE.
AGAIN THANKING YOU FOR THE $2 ON ACCOUNT, I BID YOU GOOD DAY.
HMM! HE WAS COLLECTING. WELL....
YOU...
WHOO! HOW THAT BABY COULD THROW LEFTS TODAY. LET ME THINK..? WHERE AM I?
ON THE STREET? I MUST HAVE WANDERED OUT HERE. WELL IT'S EASY TO GET HOME AGAIN. LET ME THINK.?

GASOLINE ALLEY
SISSY GOIN' TO THE HIGHMORE DANCE TOO?
WITH TRIXIE THERE! SURE HE IS.
I'LL INTRODUCE YOU TO TRIXIE, BRICK. DO WHAT YOU CAN FOR ME, WILL YOU?
SURE I WILL.
TRIXIE, HERE'S BRICK. HE'S NO GOOD BUT HE ISN'T SO BAD.
BOY SKEEZIX! HOW DO YOU DO IT?
HELLO, EGGS! I KNOW WHO YOU'RE LOOKIN' FOR—TRIXIE! I'M AHEAD OF YOU.
TRIXIE, HERE COMES SISSY TO CUT IN BUT BRICK IS BEATIN' HIM TO IT!
BEG PARDON, BIG BOY.
WELL, ANYWAY, SHE ISN'T WITH YOU!
NOR WITH YOU!
COME ALONG, SKEEZIX. WE'VE BEEN LOOKING FOR YOU.
I THOUGHT I'D FIND ONE OF YOU, BRICK, BUT I DIDN'T KNOW I'D FIND BOTH ANYWAY IT'S STILL A SWELL PARTY.
AND IT'S TIME FOR THE SANDWICHES
THAT'S THE ONE THING THAT BEATS MOONLIGHT.
YOU AN' TRIXIE KIND OF WALKED OUT ON ME, DIDN'T YOU?
WE WALKED OUT, BUT NOT ON YOU, SKEEZIX.
YOU WANTED ME TO DO ALL I COULD FOR YOU, DIDN'T YOU?
IT DIDN'T LOOK LIKE YOU WERE DOIN' MUCH FOR ME, BRICK.
WELL I GOT STARTED TELLIN' HER HOW SWELL YOU WERE AND THEN I KIND OF GOT OFF ONTO TELLIN' HER HOW SWELL SHE WAS.

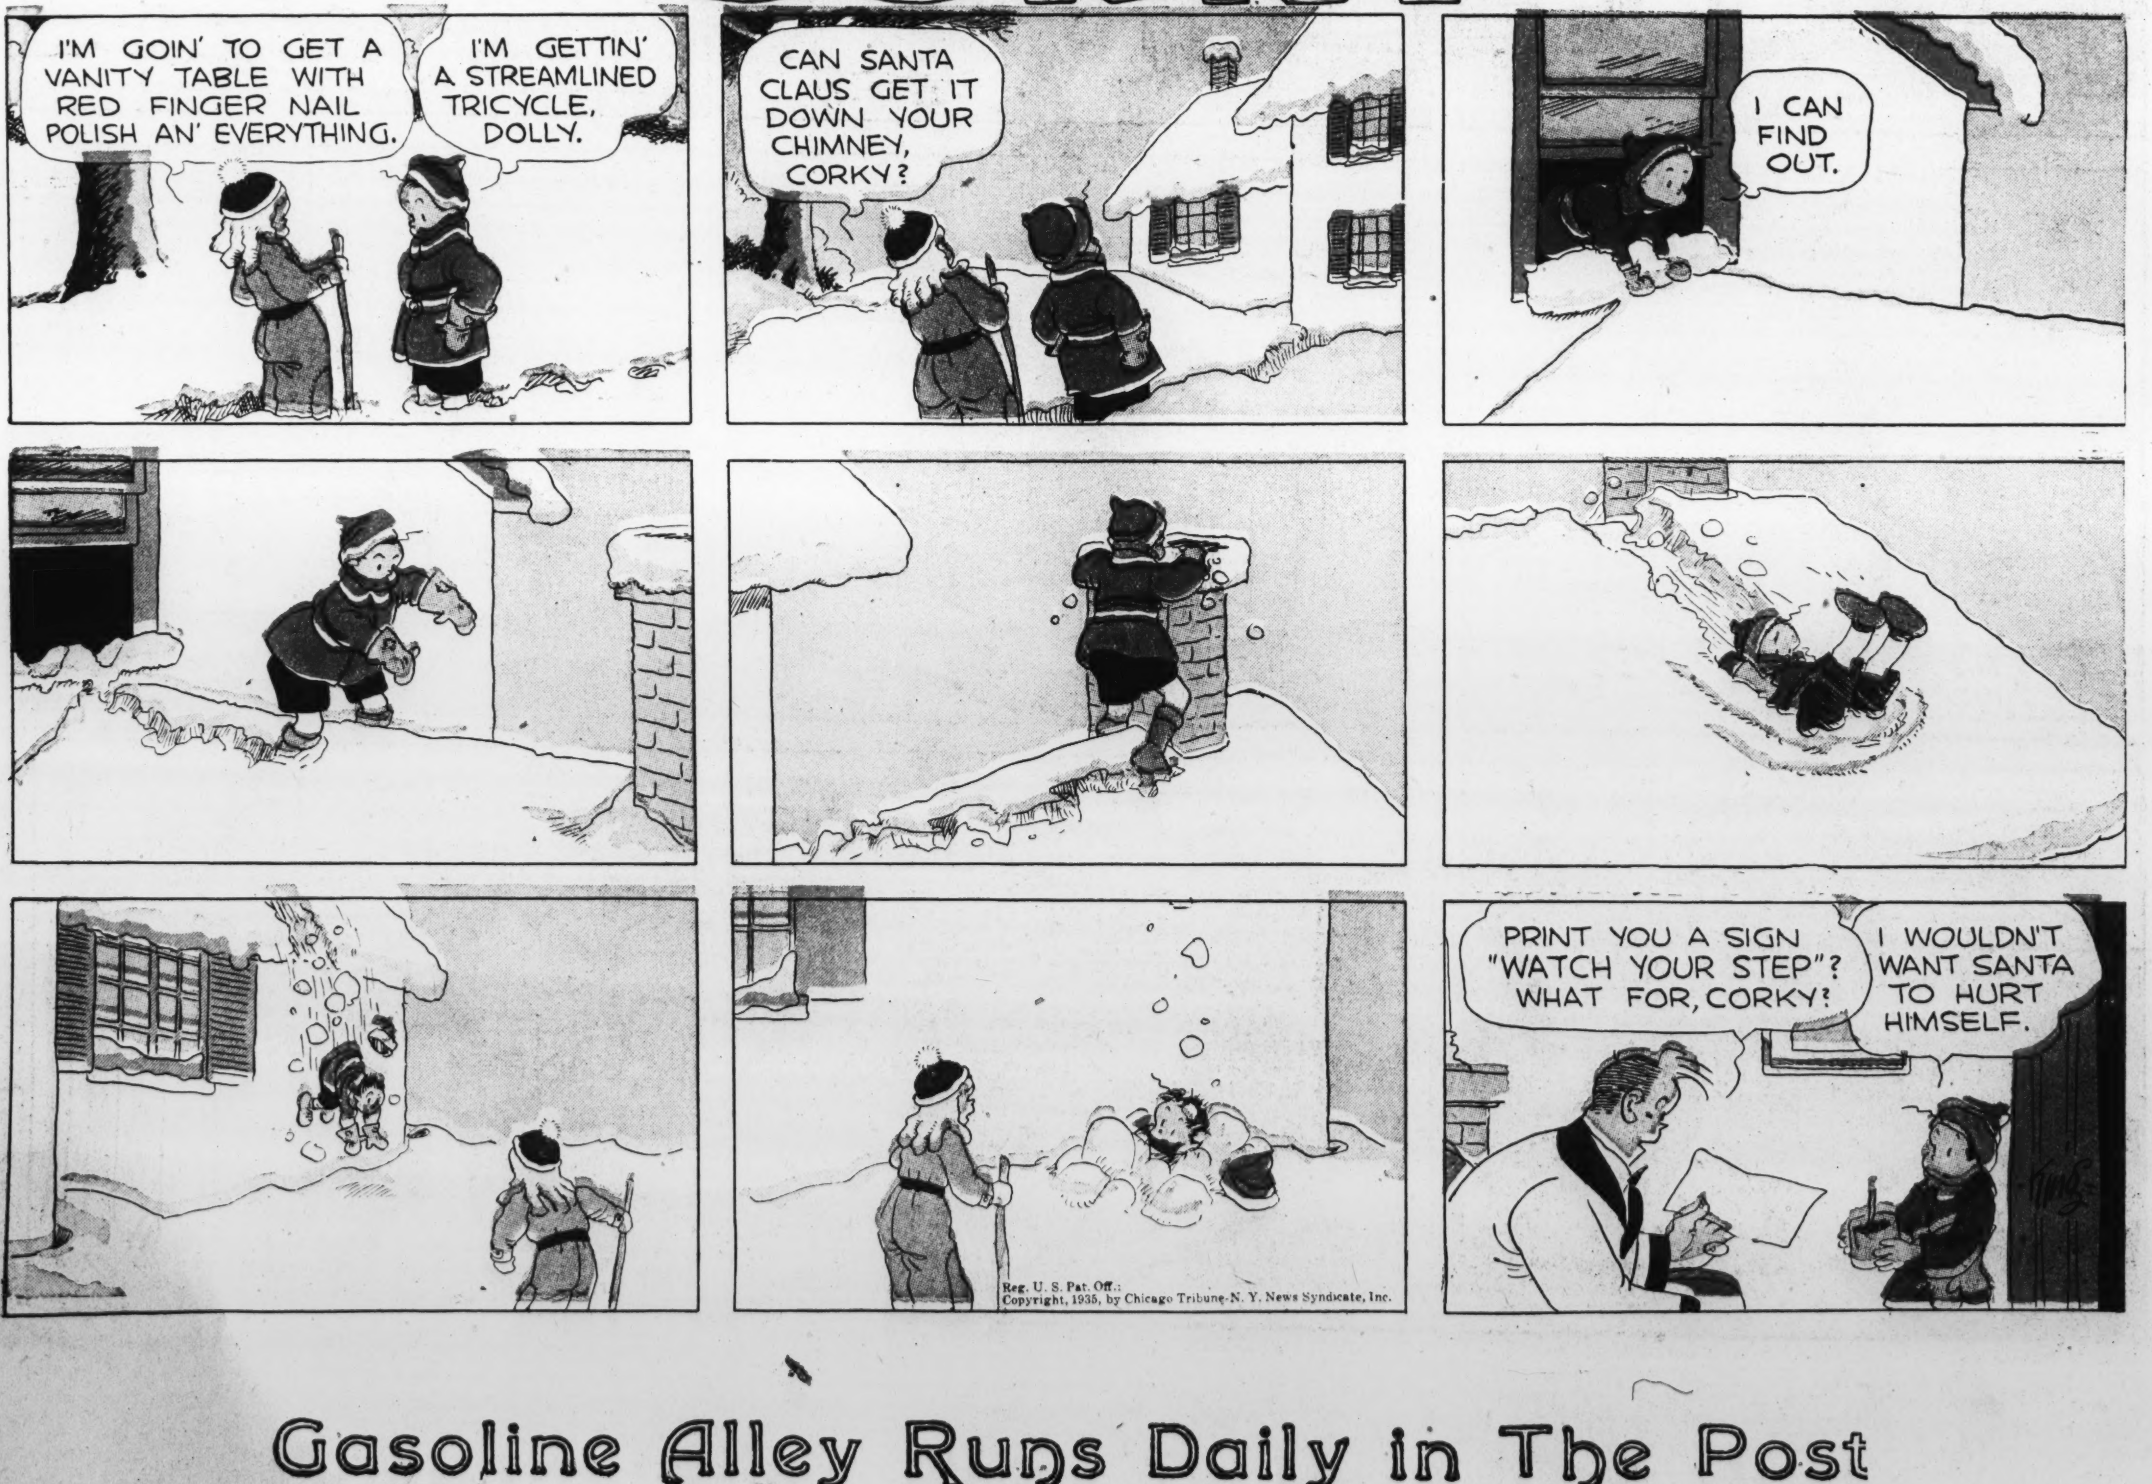
CORKY



I'M GOIN' TO GET A VANITY TABLE WITH RED FINGER NAIL POLISH AN' EVERYTHING.
I'M GETTIN' A STREAMLINED TRICYCLE, DOLLY.
CAN SANTA CLAUS GET IT DOWN YOUR CHIMNEY, CORKY?
I CAN FIND OUT.
PRINT YOU A SIGN "WATCH YOUR STEP"? WHAT FOR, CORKY?
I WOULDN'T WANT SANTA TO HURT HIMSELF.

THE GUMPS
GEE- THIS IS HEAVY! BUT I PROMISED MY DADDY I'D BRING IT BACK FOR A SOUVENIR- I'VE GOT TO KEEP MY WORD-
SIDNEY SMITH
WELL, RUSTY- THE PLANE'LL BE READY SOON- AND YOU'RE GOING BACK TO PAY THE PENALTY-
YEAH? MAYBE YOU DON'T KNOW IT- BUT I'M SITTING PRETTY- I SMASHED THE PROPELLER ON THAT PLANE- AND I'M THE ONLY ONE WHO CAN REPAIR IT-
YOU BLACKGUARD! FORCING US INTO A DEAL LIKE THAT-I ONLY FIX IT ON ONE CONDITION- THAT I GET HALF THE PRIZE MONEY AND NOBODY SQUEALS ON ME-
WHAT- AFTER ALL THE DIRTY WORK YOU DID-
DID YOU HEAR THAT? WE'VE GOT TO DIVIDE THE REWARD AND SET RUSTY FREE OR HE WON'T FIX THE PLANE-WAIT A MINUTE THERE, CHESTER- DON'T GET UPSET ABOUT THAT-RUSTY WAS SMART- BUT NOT SMART ENOUGH- HE DOESN'T KNOW WE CARRIED A SPARE PROP RIGHT ALONG-
WE'S ALL SET AND READY TO GO, CAP'N-
WE'LL HAVE A HARD TRIP THOUGH- WITH ONLY FIVE LEFT OUT OF 16-
OH BOY- THAT'S GREAT-
GO ON- MOVE ALONG! IF WE PLAYED THIS GAME ACCORDING TO YOUR RULES, WE'D BE LEAVING YOU HERE TO DIE-
OFF AT LAST! IT SURE FEELS GREAT TO BE IN THE AIR AGAIN-
AND THAT'S THE LAST OF POOR KOODLOO- THE WHITEST BROWN MAN THAT EVER LIVED-
HOW DOES IT SEEM TO BE FLYING AGAIN AFTER ALL THESE MONTHS OF SLEDGING?
WE'VE FLOWN AS FAR IN AN HOUR AS WE COULD HAVE WALKED IN A WEEK-
YES, MY BOY- BUT WE'LL SOON BE CROSSING THE POLE AND SPEEDING SOUTH AGAIN-
AND WE'RE STILL HEADING STRAIGHT NORTH-
GEE- THE NORTH POLE! AND IT'S ALMOST CHRISTMAS TIME-CHRISTMAS 1935
